DOUBLE TROUBLE FOR DOOK: Carolina's starting tackles, Phil Blazer (left) and Stu Pell could give the Duke Blue Devils a hard time this afternoon. Pell, a senior from Lyken, Pa., has been a first-stringer for several games and Blazer, the extra point specialist, is an almost sure bet for all-conference honors.

This Is Big Day For Carolina-Duke Fans

By 4:30 this afternoon there will be celebrating in one camp and remorse in the other. This is one of those games when nobody wants to settle for a tie. Victory is the only thing. This is Carolina-Duke Day.

It's very refreshing to watch the two schools in preparation for the game. There is that tense air of excitement and anxiety which is not present at any other time during the season. Everybody knows that "this is it." Regardless of what has or has not been done during the season, this is the game that counts most in the hearts of Carolina and Duke students and fans.

Little can be attributed to pressure because that is an element which is equitable on both sides. The players from both schools realize that this is the one game their fans want above all others. This is the type of thing which makes football the exciting game that it is.

Should Provide Plenty Of Excitement For Fans

Today, we look for a great ball game. It seems to us that the two teams involved will be trying harder than at any other time this season, and nobody can claim that one is far superior to the other.

The Tar Heels will probably do most of the passing and consequently should give the fans more color. Duke will, in all probability, play its usual style of possession ball, working the ball along the ground and trying to keep Tar Heel hands off.

Most of Carolina's big gains will probably come through the air, while the Blue Devils will play for the home run—when one of their fleet-footed backs breaks into the open. This is the thing which the Tar Heels will have to guard against meticulously because the Dooks are loaded with backfield talent.

Chances are that both coaches have contrived a little something special to spring on their opponent when the time is right. Both know the importance of this game and both will be all out to claim the Victory Bell.

Sportsmanship Should Be Kept In Mind

One of the sterling qualities about the Carolina-Duke rivalry is that it has always been noted for its sportsmanship. Not that there hasn't been some vandalism through the years, but, on the whole, it has not been half as flagrant as some other schools.

This is good. There is absolutely nothing wrong with so-called "bitterness" between two schools as long as it goes no further than desire for athletic superiority. But when this "bitterness" becomes unrestrained and develops into animosity, something should be done.

We can reasonably anticipate no "incidents" to occur in Duke Stadium this afternoon. The players of the two schools want this game badly, but they also want it to be as clean as possible. We the students should desire the same. Let's make this an afternoon of good, clean rivalry, regardless of the outcome.

We Predict: Tigers, Terps And N. C. State

Very quickly, here's the way we see the other ACC games.

Winless Wake Forest takes on powerful Clemson and this should prove an insuperable task for the Deacs. Clemson 28, Wake Forest 7. N. C. State moves in against a hot and cold South Carolina team and could have some trouble. Nevertheless, State 20, South Carolina 7.

Maryland will entertain Virginia at College Park. The Terps have been playing over their heads. This one should be easier. Maryland 26, Virginia 13.

Navy. They've lost to N. C. State, Tennessee and Maryland.

Carolina's biggest headache today lies in stopping the Blue Devils vaunted and powerful running attack featuring a tremendous collection of hard-running backs and a fine offensive line to lay the groundwork for the boys in the backfield.

The Blue Devils will probably show great respect for the Tar Heel's pass defense which is number one in the Atlantic Coast Conference and will probably concentrate its efforts in moving the ball along the ground.

But the Tar Heel's stout front wall has sparkled on occasions this season and should be at its best, incentive wise, against the Blue Devils. Duke could find the going tough if the Tar Heels are "right."

Offensively, the Tar Heels will probably "mix it up" with boys like Daley Goff, Jim Schuler, Giles Gaca, Emil DeCantis and perhaps Don Coker taking over the ground attack, and sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings doing most of the aerial duties.

Cummings, the passing wizzard of the Tar Heels, can be counted upon to do a lot of passing if the weather allows. And he'll be backed by another sophomore signal-caller Nelson Lowe, playing his second varsity game today. Lowe was taken off the holdout list when junior quarterback Curt Hathaway suffered a broken arm against South Carolina.

Thus this should be a battle to the finish with both teams going all out to clinch the game which both schools want more than any other during the season. This could be the closest Carolina-Duke contest in many years as both clubs are in a banner season.

The Tar Heel starting lineup will probably have captain Buddy Payne and Mac Turlington at the ends, Stu Pell and Phil Blazer at tackles, Fred Swearingen and Ralph Steele at guards and Jim Jones at center.

McGuire Signs For Five More Years At UNC

UNC Athletic Director Chuck Erickson announced yesterday that Head Basketball Coach Frank McGuire has signed a five year contract with the University to become effective on June 30, the day the present three-year contract expires.

No salary was disclosed when the announcement was made but Erickson did say that the terms were completely agreeable to both McGuire and the University.

The University's Board of Trustees had approved the contract at their November 11th meeting, but it was not known whether or not McGuire would accept the contract until yesterday.

The signing of the contract is good news to basketball fans at Carolina and all over the State. McGuire coached the Tar Heels to be National Champions last season and his decision to stay in Chapel Hill will mean that there will be good basketball at Carolina for at least the next six years.

Tar Heel Players Want This Game; Think They Can Get It With Hustle

By BILL KING

Carolina-Duke, a game that means so much to so many. This is the big one for both schools and it always has been since the inception of the Carolina-Trinity (later Duke) acquaintance way back in 1888.

How do the Tar Heels themselves feel about this ball game? What do they think of their chances against the powerful Blue Devils who many believe are destined for an Orange Bowl appointment against Oklahoma come New Year's Day?

In order to get an idea about the feelings of the players before the big game, we stopped several of them on the way to classes, in Y-Court and various other places on the campus yesterday. Here are a few of their comments.

Buddy Payne (captain and left end)—"We couldn't be readier for a ball game, technically or otherwise. If we're not up mentally for this one, then we haven't been up for a game this season. There's no reason for losing to Duke."

Ed Furjanic (guard) — "Everybody wants this one real bad. We've all been hustling and I believe we'll win it."

Giles Gaca (fullback)—"We won't be ashamed of our efforts after the game. We'll play our very best, and if that's enough we'll win it."

Ralph Steele (guard)—"If we play heads up ball, we can win this game. We really want it."

Earl Ray (Moose) Butler (tackle)—"There has been great hustle all week. Everybody will be ready and I think we're gonna win it"

Jack Lineberger (guard who is out for the season due to a neck injury)—"I hope and believe we'll beat the heck out of Duke."

Irish Win Will Mean Great Year

The game will be played before a sellout 57,000 and will be seen regionally on television, via NBC, beginning at 2 p. m. EST.

The Iowa Hawkeyes last Saturday had their Big Ten title defense caved in by Ohio State, 17-13. At the same time, Notre Dame's revived Irish fashioned a resounding upset of Oklahoma, 7-0, snapping the Sooner's 47 - game winning streak.

Notre Dame now has a 5-2 record and, by spelling the Hawkeyes, would be a distinct favorite in its final two games, against Southern California and Southern Methodist.

Thus, it's possible the Irish can finish with 8-2, a complete turnabout from last year's 2-8 mark, the worst season in Notre Dame history.

Iowa, rated a seven-point choice over Notre Dame, will be closing a season that found the Hawkeyes finishing third in the Big Ten with a 4-1-1 record. Iowa's overall mark is 6-1-1.

Distracting Iowa's preparations for the Notre Dame finale this week were indications that Coach Forest Evashevski may be on the verge of quitting the Hawkeye school.

Evashevski, who in six seasons built the erstwhile lowly Hawkeyes into a Big Ten power, has seven years remaining on a 10-year contract.

SOMEONE HANGING? — It is. Thomas Gable, UNC student from Goldsboro and a number of his cohorts pulled this ingenious stunt Friday night on the eve of the Carolina-Duke game. Gable was cleverly suspended so that there was no pressure on the neck. Scene of the action is the front of Winston Dorm. (Pete Young Photo)

Noose On The Loose!

Someone telephoned Ray Jeffries Friday night and frantically informed him that a Duke student had been hanged outside Winston Dorm. Jeffries sped to the scene of the "crime" and was not long in determining that the "dead Duke student" was actually a very-much-alive Carolina student.

"What are you doing up there?" Jeffries angrily inquired of the "Duke student."

"Just hanging around," was the laconic reply.

Correction On Poll

The Daily Tar Heel incorrectly reported yesterday that GMAB Polls Chairman Jack Lewis had released results of a poll taken concerning the recall election for the paper's editorship.

The question posed by the poll was: Do you favor a change in The Daily Tar Heel editorship?

It has since been brought to our attention that the results printed yesterday as the result of information given us by another GMAB committee chairman constituted only a partial sample of the questionnaires thus far returned.

GM Director Tom Lambeth said yesterday that results of the poll would not be made public until after the election.

Although the information was accepted by us in good faith, we accept full responsibility for the error and sincerely regret any confusion that may have resulted therefrom.

Cumming's Great Passing Leads Tar Heels To Victory

By BILL KING

DURHAM—Those magnificent Tar Heels did it!!

The seven-year Carolina victory drought came to a wonderful end yesterday in Duke Stadium as the tremendously-inspired Tar Heels spotted the Blue Devils a 13 point lead then roared back and capitalized on every Duke mistake to gain a 21-13 victory over the Durhamites.

An estimated 40,000 fans, consisting of a a host of Carolina students who formed a vociferious cheering section, watched wizzard sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings click for eight passes and 116 yards to lead his Tar Heel mates to this brilliant victory.

An alert Carolina line paved the way for Cummings and Co. to give the Tar Heel's their first win over Duke since 1949 and throw the Orange Bowl speculation into a turmoil.

It was wet damp and unpleasant all afternoon, but for the Carolina partisian, the sun couldn't have shone brighter in Miami. The game was marred by innumeral penalities, but all was forgotten when Carolina students jumped at the final gun and carted off the Victory Bell, the goal post and everything else but the concrete stands.

Recovered fumbles by guard Fred Swearingen and tackle Don Stallings set up two Carolina scores in the second half after the Tar Heels had marched 49 yards for their first tally late in the second period.

At the opening kickoff and for the following seven minutes it looked as through the vauted possession type ball of the Blue Devils would overwhelm the Tar Heels as they marched 75-yards for a score before Carolina could get its hands on the pigskin. That score came with 7:15 gone in the first quarter.

And the Blue Devils weren't through. After numerous penalties had stopped the Tar Heels time and again, the Blue Devils drove 39 yards for another score with only 2:45 gone in the second quarter. One out of two extra points by halfback Wray Carlton gave the

Tatum Calls Game His Biggest Thrill

By DAVE WIBLE

The goal posts came down in record time and Sunny Jim and Tar Heel Captain Buddy Payne went up on the shoulders of the jubliant Carolina fans.

The victory bell was pulled over to the Carolina side of the field ringing louder than it ever has before.

The Tar Heels were swarmed by Carolina students and were forced to fight their way on to the buses. Tatum was lowered to the ground and cornered by the press. "It was my most thrilling victory," was all the press could get out of him before the crowd took over again.

Drunk and sober, fans overcome with excitement, gaily escorted to his refuge, the bus. The fans surrounded the Tar Heel's buses, shook hands through the window's and cheered as one of the players started "Gimmie a C."

A little later when things quieted down a little, Tatum talked to the press. "How 'bout the way they came back after being down thirteen points. Gosh!," he beamed.

"Before the game we told our quarterbacks that this would be the type of game that they should pass in a situation when they should normally run and vise versa. We have never passed this much, but Jack (Cummings) was doing so that we had to let him keep throwing."

Someone asked Tatum who blocked the extra point after Duke's first touchdown. "I don't know," he said," I was praying at the time."

When the Orange Bowl question was brought up and Tatum was asked for Carolina's chances of getting the bid, he had this to say. "I don't know who will go. It is still too early to decide. Heck, Virginia might knock us out. I don't think a decision will be made until after the season is completed."

An estimated crowd of 40,000 was on hand to see the game which would have been a sure sell-out had it not been for the bad weather conditions. The 40,000 who did brave the rain, cold, and mud saw a ball game "to beat all."

They saw Carolina's Jack Cummings pass like a pro to Buddy Payne, Mac Turlington and Daley Goff, three pass receivers who made pass catching look like it was their second nature.

They saw Carolina run single wing, a double reverse, a draw play and a sort of Carolina tag football play (a pass to a halfback who took it up the middle)—four versions of football never seen at Carolina before.

They saw Rameses keep the Blue Devil at bay on a goal post for a while, and they saw an orange thrown into a Carolina huddle picked up and thrown at the Duke stands—maybe a symbolism of things to come.

On campus after the victory bell had arrived, the excitement in the middle of town rates second only to the night Carolina became national basketball champs. The bell was carried around town on a truck, and the sound—hardly distinguishable above the honking horns—was sweet to hear.

Poor, Poor, Duke. Ha!

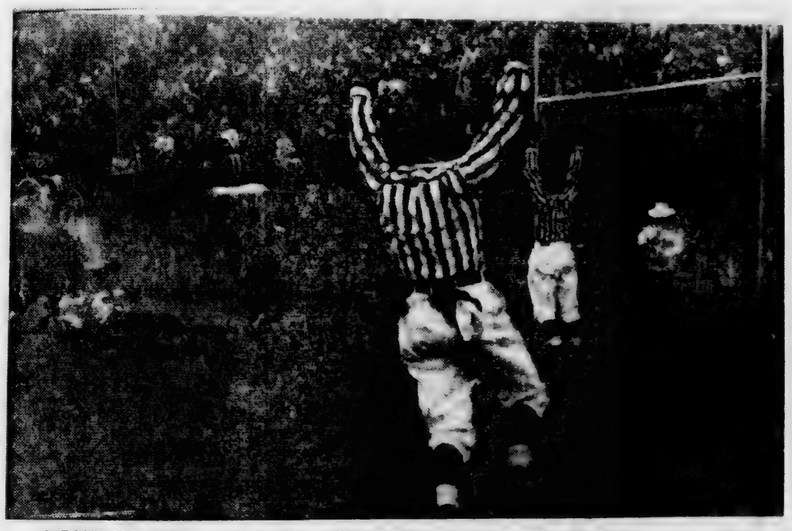
'Thumbs Down' Says Eisele On Public Debate Proposal

Candidate for editor Doug Eisele yesterday turned final thumbs down on candidate Paul Rule's challenge to meet him in Carroll Hall Monday night for a public debate of the issues involved in the recall election. Editor Bass accepted the challenge last Wednesday.

On Friday, Eisele's campaign manager said he could not comment on whether Eisele would accept the challenge. "This is one decision Eisele will have to make for himself," he said.



Earlier, Eisele said he would be unable to accept Rule's challenge because of a conflict with his own "Eisele for Editor" rally scheduled for 7:30 Monday night. Rule then changed the hour for the public debate to 9:30 so that Eisele could attend.

Yesterday, Eisele said he could see no reason for the verbal duel in Carroll Hall. He said anyone who was interested in hearing him discuss the issues of the election could do so by attending Cobb Dorm's "culture hour" tonight at 8:30.

Rule, however, took a different view of the matter. "My challenge to candidate Eisele for a public debate Monday night still stands," he said.

"His refusal to accept this chal

The Sweet Fragrance Of Orange Blossoms

We should like to wholeheartedly congratulate University footballers for their conquest of the Blue Devil charges from Durham in yesterday's encounter.

Displaying an admirable fighting spirit, University footballers overcame a 13-0 lead to defeat the orange-intoxicated forces of Bill Murray—21-13.

The victory marks the first time since 1951 that the Carolina Blue and White has conquered the Duke Devils. And it gives the University team a 6-3 season's record to a 6-1-3 record tabulated by the Dukers this fall.

The University definitely has a solid argument to bring before the bowl selection committee next week.

We defeated Clemson, 26-0, while Dukers barely eked out a 7-0 victory last week. And Clemson outplayed the Devils throughout the contest. Their loss came only as a result of three fumbles within the Duke 15-yard line.

Also, we defeated Navy, 13-7, while Dukers merely fought to a 6-6 tie. Coupled with the defeat of highly-considered Miami and the trouncing of South Carolina's Gamecocks, these facts and figures should offer a darn convincing argument to the bowl selections committee.

And the peal of the Victory Bell has never sounded so sweet.

The bowl selections committee is supposed to select the "most representative team." We contend that, while we have definitely run hot and cold, our overall record—including the sole triumph recorded over Navy this season — qualifies University footballers for a command performance in Miami.

GUEST EDITORIAL:

UCLA Daily Bruin Says Extra-Curriculars Good

As long as colleges and universities have been in existence there has been the problem of what part the extra-curricular activities should play in the academic life, — a problem which has never been solved. Therefore the amount of activities on campus is a decision which is left up to the individual institution.

A good deal of discussion has also been held at UCLA concerning the growing amount of student activity in relation to the more intellectual side of our training. The amount of money allocated to float building in the recent Homecoming parade was upped by $50 over the limit of 1956. The Homecoming Week, Men's Week, athletic events, the great variety of dances, the elections of student officers, Fall Drive, Greek Week, rallies, films, lectures, concerts and many smaller functions numbering in the hundreds have combined into a massive activity program which would prohibit any student from participating in most of them and still maintain an average work load of study.

Yet in spite of the fact that these functions would keep a person very busy full-time in just attending, each individual activity has had a good, healthy attendance, and has been steadily growing through the years out of proportion to the population growth at UCLA. This can only lead us to the conclusion that students here are becoming more activity-minded -due either to an improvement in this area or to a growing mode among the student body.

On the other hand, extracurricular business should not dominate the university scene. Supposedly, the central idea behind an institution of higher learning is to prepare the developing intellect for the obligations and responsibilities to be assumed by a future leader in society. This goal could be hampered a good dead by a cumbersome activity schedule. As an alternative to the dryer art of study, a function-filled college life would seem an enjoyable escape to the student of a more exuberant nature, who would be satisfied to barely pass through college. There are those who argue that young people of this ilk should not be allowed in an institution of higher learning.

This brings up the problem of whether intellectual training IS the only aim of a university, to the clear subordination of any events which may interfere. In other extreme we have the arguement that the intellectual intercourse and the social functions are the only training retained by college graduates, with the exception of technical professions, and that this training is most valuable in the preparation of a successful career.

No one can logically contest the statement that the aim of college is the preparation of the intellect, or that the extra-curricular activities are of benefit to the student. The only discord which arises as a rule, is to what degree each should participate in a campus.

The answer, of course, depends on the individual. No one is required either to attend a university or to participate in its activities. Therefore the new student has to abide by the academic standards set by the institution of his choice, and the activity participation is left to his discretion. The amount of functions on campus is entirely decided by the student body, for without our attendance these events would fold as being of no use. If one can meet the academic requirements of UCLA and still partake heavily of the extra-curricular, more power to him.

Reign Of Terror: Blood Flows Like Water?

EDITOR:

The reign of terror is on. The guillotine clicks like castonettes and blood flows like water in the streets. The knitting ladies are waiting for the head to drop, your head, Mr. Editor.

Some people just can't live a happy life unless they are fighting for or against a cause. You must have happened to be standing there when these "Banner Bearers" were looking around for a cause and consequently many blows are falling upon your head.

It is a shame that these self rightous individuals coudn't focus their attention on something a little more in need of correction such as: Better housing for the squirrels, or dry powder for "Silent Sam.'" Projects like these would, at least, not be detrimental. Maybe these go-getters would be willing to serve on a Journalistic Council which could approve or throw out each editorial according to their "ethics" and hold a daily vote of confidence on the editor. This method of administration would, in no time, produce the tintype, spineless, conforming editor that they dtsire; an editor devoid of personal opinions or attitudes.

Because of recent developments in the recall election of the editor of the Daily Tar Heel, I must withdraw my name from the list of staff members who signed a letter to Neil Bass.

This letter, which appeared on the editorial page of The Daily Tar Heel, said, in effect, that the signers did not support the recall, but upheld Editor Bass' right to remain in that position.

I am strongly in favor of the recall election and must thertfore publically withdraw my name from that letter.

EDITOR:

As secretary of the Student Party, I feel that it is necessary for me to clearly state what took place at the Monday night meeting of the Student Party at which the party nominated Doug Eisele to run for editorship of The Daily Tar Heel. This information is being taken from the minutes which I recorded during the meeting.

First of all I believe that it is expedient to point out that Mr. Barry Winston stated before the party that if we wanted to support Doug Eisele he would withdraw from the race. This statement was made after the party had found that none of the three announced candidates met the qualifications they were seeking.

Perhaps many people are wondering why a political party should nominate and endorse candidates for such position as editor of the Daily Tar Heel. This was thoroughly discussed by various members, pointing out that it is the responsibility of campus political parties to endorse for public office individuals who are qualified for the position under consideration. Furthermore, it is the parties' responsibility to both seek and provide qualified candidates for all positions of public trust. In the event that candidates running for an office are determined to be unqualified for a position, then it becomes even more the responsibility of the parties to provide the campus with good candidates.

Keeping this in mind the three candidates were discussed by various members. As the discussion progressed it became evident that none of the candidates possessed the qualifications the students felt were desirable. A motion was made and passed that the floor be re-opened for nominations. Gary Greer nominated Doug Eisele. When asked whether he knew whether Mr. Eisele would run, he said that he did not but he would see whether Mr. Eisele would make a statement. Mr. Eisele told the party that he intended to run for the office in the spring and that he felt he owed it to himself to spend more time on his studies. He did not in actual words decline the nomination, but it was withdrawn by the nominator.

The nominations were again closed when Mr. Winston requested the floor. A motion was made and passed that the rules be suspended and that Mr. Winston be extended permission to address the party. It was at this time approximately 11:20 p.m. that Mr. Winston announced that because he was interested in a better "Tar Heel" and if the party wanted Doug Eisele he would withdraw from the race.

The floor was again reopened for nomintaions and Doug Eisele's name was again submitted. After the nominations were again closed the four nominations were voted upon, and Mr. Eisele received a majority of the votes.

I hope you will see fit to print these very vital facts concerning what took place durin gthe meeting, because I feel they obviously point out the fact that the withdrawal of Mr. Winston was not decided after the party meeting instead, Mr. Winston publicly announced his withdrawal before the party and in the presence of several "Daily Tar Heel" reporters.

PRO OR CON:

Recall Analysis For The Voters

By Curtis Gans

I am supporting Neil Bass in the recall election Tuesday.

I am supporting Bass; not because I agree with all his editorial views, because I don't; not because I like the way he says many of his views, because I don't; not because I think he is the most efficient and best manager of the paper in general and the editorial page in particular, because I don't. In fact, of the four editors I have worked under in the past three years, the present editor rates third or fourth. Indeed, if and when I run for the editorship in the Spring, I will do so on the basis of an intensive revamping of the paper's present structure.

I did not vote for Bass last Spring. I support him with vigor now.

I am for the present editor because: 1) I doubt the validity of the recall petition itself, 2) I think that freedom of the press is a live issue and was made such, not by the present editor, but by the perpetators of the petition, 3) I feel very strongly the hand of intervention by the executive department of Student Government in an area where the University constitution restrains executive action, and 4) I do not believe that either of the candidates opposing Bass are as competent as Bass.

Perhaps the only two legitimate reasons for recall are if an editor publishes a libelous or obscene story, or if the paper fails to come out as contracted — six days a week excepting exams and holidays. All other offenses are secondary. If people believe the editor is not a capable writer, they had plenty of time to check three years of writing prior to last Spring's election. If there is a belief current, that the editor cannot take criticism and that comments underneath the writings of other people are childish, then the electorate had plenty of time to check the disposition of the present editor through his roommates. If there is a belief that the editor cannot handle the technical aspects of the paper, then the electorate should have seen fit to ask members of the Tar Heel staff prior to last Spring's election about the capabilities of the present editor in that field. Moreover, a bi-partisan selection board last Spring deemed the present editor capable in that field, and the capability of the present editor in many of the technical fields is demonstrable.

Thus, if libel or failure to put out a paper is the issue, then the claim of Student Body President Evans that Mr. Bass called Mr. Tatum a "ruthless monster" must be a false claim. For "ruthless monster" is not libelous, as "parasitic monster", one of the generating circumstances of the recall two years ago, was not libelous. The second claim by Mr. Evans that Bass editorialized in the Stevenson article is not libel either, and I hardly think that Mr. Stevenson would sue for being called "slightly heavier" than his campaign pictures.

There then remains a question of how many people of the 1097 that signed the petition knew anything of the law of libel, and how many more signed because of the Bass anti-Tatum editorials. For if people signed because of the editorials, then the issue is one of freedom of the press, and whether anyone is sacrosanct from editorial scrutiny.

I was in Cobb dormitory the night the petition was being passed around, prior to the first mention in the Tar Heel of "freedom of the press". Carrying around the petition in that dorm were at least four football players. I asked them what was incompetence to them, and the best answer they could give was, "I didn't like what he said about Tatum." I asked one of them what was libel, if, as we agreed this was the only satisfactory grounds for recall, and he could not tell me. I was later in the room of one of the leaders of the petitioners, who announced to me that none of the 150 people who signed the recall petition that he carried around had said a word about Tatum. The truth of his pronouncement was somewhat tarnished when a fellow resident of that dormitory came in. The petitioner asked the resident if he had signed the petition. And the resident answered that he had, because "I didn't like what he (Bass) said about Tatum."

I doubt seriously if there are two hundred students on campus who know the law of libel, and whether there are one hundred who know the specific line in which Mr. Bass may or may not have transgressed the law of libel. Since this is the only real issue that can force a recall, the petition itself is extremely dubious.

Dubious also was the time picked to carry the petition around, right after the Tatum editorials. The petitioners must have realized that they would not have gotten enough signatures any other way. If the president of the student body was a man of integrity, he would be the first one to question the validity of the petition and the amount of knowledge the student body had about the law of libel.

But President Evans is no such man. I was up in his office prior to the petition applying for a position on the newly created Newspaper Research Board, and he talked not only my qualifications but he talked recall. He told me that what was necessary to start a recall was a competent opposition candidate, and asked me if I had any willingness to run. I declined. The fact is that this was before the petition got started, and would lead one to believe, indeed I do, that Mr. Evans had very much to do with recall.

And a later incident served to prove that this was not such an altruistic interest. Three weeks ago Mr. Evans met with a petitioning group, before completion of the signing of the petition, and urged the petition's completion. In doing this, he talked of the paper as being among other things "the chronicler of student government." This suggests to me that Mr. Evans was more worried about the adverse criticism about him going down in the pages of history perhaps, than whether the campus had a good newspaper. Indeed his placing Doug Eisele's name into nomination at one of the votes in the Student Party meeting of last Monday is clear indication of his self-interest rather than interest of the paper, for I will later try to show that

It may well be that there was some reason for keeping the government of the students separate from the student newspaper, and there may be indeed some question as to whether Mr. Evans overstepped his bounds, for Mr. Evans in all his arguments for the Bass ouster never once to my knowledge touched on the line that might be libelous.

It may be seen from this that the petition was definitely not valid because many of the petitioners did not know the issues, that the main petitioners capitalized on a side issue which was not a question of competence, but of freedom of the press, and that the student body president, instead of doing his duty and questioning the validity of the petition, used his office as at least an outside pressure for the support of the petition. Moreover, it can be seen that the freedom of the press issue is a live one since the petitioners brought the issue into focus.

The validity of the election can be doubted since Mr. Evans saw fit to follow all election laws except one — there is no bi-partisan selection board for this election.

Mr. Bass had to pass through one last Spring.

The means to get the recall are indeed dubious, and I affirm that in no case does the end justify the means.

Moreover, I would like to try to show that the end — the opposition candidates are no more competent that Mr. Bass, hence making a very dubious end.

I know much less about candidate Rule, than I do of candidate Eisele, but one of the campaign slogans that Mr. Rule is passing around is that he will be able to fully equip a shop for the Daily Tar Heel for $5,000. I did some cursory checking a few nights ago, and I found out that the cost of one rebuilt (not new) linotype machine is $7,500. If Mr. Rule proposes that the paper be hand set, then there will ensue, the Monthly Tar Heel, rather than the Daily Tar Heel, and indeed expenses will be cut down, but the student will be getting one-twenty-fourth the amount of papers that he is entitled to.

Candidate Eisele was the former managing editor of the DTH, and as such he was responsible for all the material on pages one and three. Mr. Eisele was also in charge of organizing and training the news staff. He did neither job well.

If people have complaints that the DTH has not exploited news sources on the UNC campus, blame Mr. Eisele, for he is responsible for campus news. If people have complaints about inaccuracies in news stories, blame Mr. Eisele, for it was Mr. Eisele's job to check each and every story before it went to the printers. If people sat through Mr. Stevenson's brilliant speech on individualism and education, and found that it received cursory mention in the Tar Heel, while his statement of Little Rock received the top billing and most of the article space, blame Mr. Eisele, for it is his job to cover news accurately or to see that it is covered accurately. If some on a university campus were annoyed because Mr. Stevenson's talk was given second billing to the football game, blame Mr. Eisele, for he is responsible for the selection of the importance of news. Indeed, if some were shocked, as I was, to see Bing Crosby's wedding next to the biggest story on the front page of the Tar Heel, one can again blame Mr. Eisele, who was trying to make the news fit the page make-up, while the rule in journalism is the other way around.

I have seen picture captions which were inaccurate, or were accurate to a point, but didn't tell who was who. This again is Mr. Eisele's responsibility, as he is responsible for all the copy that goes on page one and three, and it is the lack of care, the irresponsibility of Mr. Eisele that has wrought such havoc with the news pages of the Daily Tar Heel.

Mr. Eisele has also shown that he is unable in the field of page lay-out, for many's the time that there were three large headlines one on top of another, each leading to a separate story. The only trouble was that the reader was given no idea as to which headline went with which story.

Another criticism of the paper is that on pages one and three Mr. Eisele has failed to mirror sufficiently campus opinion. It is a valid criticism for he failed to exploit the means at his command.

There have been times that the paper was in jeopardy of coming out at all. One time the first piece of news copy came out to the printers at 6 p.m., when the contract calls for 2:30 in the afternoon. Another time Mr. Eisele left a twenty inch hole in the layout for page three and it was only due to the alert work of the night editor, that the paper came out without a jackass on page three as had been placed on page four. It is a fact that the complaints from the shop lie mainly in the lateness of pages one and three, and the lack of copy reading care devoted to those pages.

In the field of organizing and teaching a staff, Mr. Eisele has also demonstrated his incapability, for it is under him that the philosophy of reporting has changed from the reporter going out to get the news, to one of the reporter sitting back and waiting for the news to come to him. There are exceptions of course, but these are the people of initiative who prove the rule.

Moreover, I was a witness to the teaching of a fellow staffer by Mr. Eisele. The story was about the appointment of Howard Henry to the permanent directorship of Graham Memorial. The third paragraph started off with the clause, "It is generally conceded that . . .", and went on to add that the permanent director may bring an addition to the present Union building as a result or a new Union building. However, I doubt seriously that 50 percent of the campus knew the significance of the appointment, but Mr. Eisele knew from his past information that this might be the result of the appointment, and he heard it from Tom Lambeth and myself. If he wants to quote Mr. Lambeth, myself, or himself, this may be correct journalism, but to admit a general concession without a poll of the majority of students is inadmissable.

Mr. Eisele has shown by his deeds and in his teachings that he is not ready or capable yet of assuming the responsibility of the editorship of the DTH.

Indeed one of the really bad things that Mr. Bass has done was the error of not firing Mr. Eisele as managing editor a long time ago. He might make a good reporter.

If the issue is freedom of the press, the choice must be Bass. If the issue is competence, the choice must be Bass.

WUNC-TV To Begin Series

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, begins a new television series on artists and their works today at 7 p.m. The series, "Images of Art," was produced by Radiodiffusion Television Francaise of Paris and is released for telecasts in the United States exclusively by the Educational Television and Radio Center.

The painting and sketches which appear in "Images of Art" represent the art treasures of Europe. Many of the pictures have never before been exhibited or reproduced in the United States and give an added insight into the lives and works of their creators.

The narration in English was done exclusively for American showing by Robert Anderson, formerly on the staff of the National Film Board of Canada.

"Images of Art" tells the stories of prominent European artists entirely through their art. Among the artists whose paintings and drawing are included in the 26 programs are: Dore, Van Gogh, da Vinci, Vermeer, Debucourt, Viergo, Monier, Rembrandt, Corot, Rousseau, Seurat, Watteau, Hogarth, Fragonard, Toulouse Lautrec, Poulbot, Constain Guys, El Greco, Degas, Piranese, and Grandville.

13 Represent UNC At Meet

Thirteen representatives of UNC are in Gatlinburg, Tenn. this weekend attending the annual meeting of the Southern Political Science Association.

Prof. C. B. Robson, UNC political science chairman, heads a delegation of 11 staff members from his department: K. C. Frazer, D. G. Monroe, F. N. Cleaveland, G. B. Cleveland, R. E. Agger, Dr. R. Matthtws, F. G. Gil, Mrs. Marjorie Mendenhall Applewhite, M. K. Jennings and Marshall Goldstein.

Other UNC men attending will be Prof. James L. Godfrey of the History Department ,who will read a paper on "Federal Problems in Ghana;" and Warren J. Wicker, assistant director of the Institute of Government.

Prof. F. N. Cleaveland is the chairman of a panel discussion of "Research in Community Leadership and Decision-Making."

Vernon Culpepper Presides At FTA Meet

Five students and faculty members of the UNC School of Education participated in the recent fall convention in Raleigh of the state's future teachers groups.

The gathering of the Department of Future Teachers of the N. C. Education Association was presided over by Vernon Culpepper, UNC student from Rocky Mount. Other students attending, besides Culpepper, were William Henshaw of Buies Creek, president of UNC's Frank P. Graham chapter; and Van Bass of Middlesex.

Meanwhile, Rule's campaign manager, Grayson Mills, took a verbal swing at both Eisele and Editor Neil Bass.

"Intelligent voters "he said," will think twice before casting ballots for an editor who has used unethical practices in his conduct of the Tar Heel editorial page or the recall group's 'pig in a poke' candidate."

Cavalcade Tickets On Sale

Tickets are now on sale for the "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent" at the Y building and at Graham Memorial. The cost of tickets for the show, which will be this Tuesday evening at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, will be 50 cents per person.

The talent show, which is well on its way to becoming a tradition of the UNC campus, was given for the first time last fall as a cofunction of the Y "Y Nite" committee and Graham Memorial Activities Board.

The idea for Y-Nites was originated in the spring of 1956 when a Y planning committee conceived the idea of having programs and activities on the campus which would draw the campus closer together.

That spring they had their first Y-Nite in the form of a Bermuda picnic held on the lawn with Dr. Bernard Boyd speaking and George Hamilton of recording fame and the UNC band as entertainment.

The next fall GMAB noticed a lot of outstanding talent on the UNC campus, and decided that it would be an excellent idea to have a talent show.

The Y planning committee got the same idea, so they co-sponsored the first talent show for the campus, an event which was so outstanding that its fame spread abroad and it was asked to go on tour.

However, it just went to Women's College ,where it seemed to personify the spirit of the Consolidated University.

After its appearance here, the show intends to again visit WC with a program of outstanding talent featuring such stars as Hoke Simpson, Pee-Wee Batten, Oliver Bloomer, Ken Kallender, the UNC Glee Club and numerous other song, dance, instrumental, and dramatic acts.

First Victory For UNC Since 1949

Dukes a 13-0 lead and things were looking bad for the Chapel Hillians.

But the Tar Heels, seemingly out of contention until that point, suddenly rose to the occasion and came back like a team possessed to pick up a tally before the first half ended.

The drive started on the Duke 49 after Duke back George Dutrow had kicked to Emil DeCantis there. Cummings hit Daley Goff with a seven-yard pass on the first play and the Tar Heels were rolling.

DeCantis then went for a first down to the 36 on a double reverse and Goff got six more to the 30. Once again Cummings took to the air and this time captain Buddy Payne, who probably played the finest game of his career, was on the receiving end at the 19. It was a low pass but Payne hauled it in.

Goff and DeCantis moved the Tar Heels to the 10 and then Carolina fooled everybody by shifting into the single wing and sending DeCantis off right tackle to the three. Giles Gaca then went up the middle for he score and Phil Blazer booted the point after to make the halftime score read Duke 13, Carolina 7.

Blue Devil dominance was short-lived, however, as the Tar Heels began smelling oranges and came back in the third quarter for another score after only four minutes, 50 seconds.

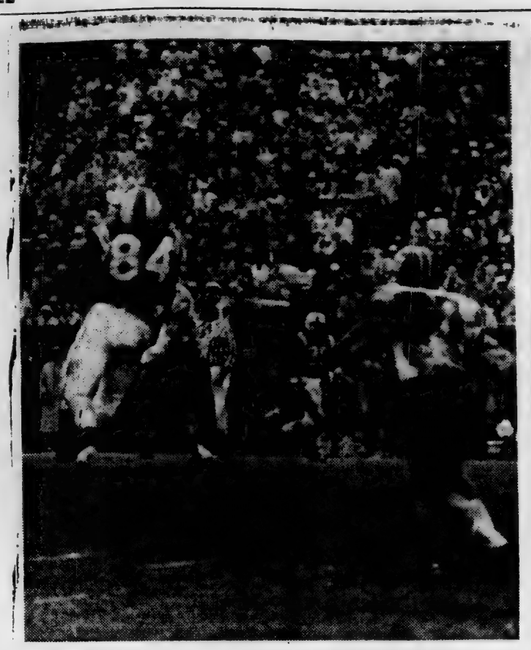
The Tar Heels gave Duke possession only once before they pushed across the tally. The Blue Devils ran two plays before Dutrow fumbled at his own 43 and Swearingen recovered.

From there, it took the Tar Heels just six plays to go over. After two plays netted but one yard, Cummings pitched to Goff who ran to the left and hit Payne at the 30 for a first down. Cummings then completed a pass to Payne but it was nullified on a Tar Heel penalty.

Cummings threw to Payne again at the 26 and the Tar Heel end was knocked down and pass interference was called giving Carolina at first down at the 26. Once again the Tar Heels went into the single wing and halfback Jim Schuler went to the 18. Cummings then drifted back, spotted Payne and connected at the three and Payne charged over the goal line from there to tie it at 13. Blazer's twelfth extra point in 13 tries put the Tar Heels ahead to stay.

Duke began to play desperation ball and the result was another fumble the second time it got possession. This time quarterback Bob Brodhead bobbled the ball and Stallings was on it at the Duke 28.

Four plays was all the Chapel Hillians needed to put the ball game on ice. Cummings promptly hit end Mac Turlington at the 18 and Turlington trudged to the 11. Goff went off left tackle to the 10 and Cummings was ready to go again. On the next play he faded way back and hit Goff at the one yard line.



Smiling Jack then slipped over from the one for the tally with 4:15 left in the third quarter. Blazer's extra point was good and that was the ball game for all intents and purposes.

The Blue Devils fought grimly to battle back and insure themselves a bid to meet Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl, Jan. 1, but the Tar Heels wouldn't give an inch. The Tar Heels ,however, outplayed the Dooks throughout the fourth period, making several deep penetrations into enemy territory.

Duke threatened only once in the final period as it got inside the Tar Heel 15, but the Tar Heels thwarted the threat and the Blue Devils knew the end was near.

For the Tar Heels it was a great team effort that brought their season's record to six wins and three losses with a game with Virginia left in the regular season .

The Tar Heel effort was equal if not superior to their great game against South Carolina in their last outing. The line performed splendiddly and the backfield was magnificent after the first period. The Tar Heel backs turned in a fine defensive effort sparked by Ron Marquette. Center Ron Koes played perhaps his finest game, intercepting two Duke passes.

ACC Bowl Committee Will Meet Here Today

(AP) — The bowl committee of the ACC meets here this afternoon to consider its recommendation of an AAC football team to meet Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl game at Miami, Fla., Jan. 1.

Chairman C. P. Erickson, Carolina Athletic Director, called the session for 12:30 p.m. (Est).

Today's games that saw North Carolina State, a bowl ineligible, clinch its first conference title by beating South Carolina and Duke lost to Carolina while resurging Clemson beat Wake Forest left the picture a confusing one.

N. C. State has finished its season with a 5-0-1 conference and 7-1-2 overall record. But the Wolfpack is ineligible for bowl play.

Duke, beaten 21-13 by Carolina, is second in the conference standings at 5-1-1 and is 6-2-2 overall. The game completed Duke's season.

Carolina is third at 4-2 in the ACC and 6-3 for all games. It finishes its season with a league game against Virginia next week.

Conference bylaws do not stipulate that the champion get the Orange Bowl bid. The "most representative" team gets the bid, according to the bylaws.

The committee's task tomorrow is to select such a team and recommend to the faculty chairmen of the eight ACC schools that they vote for it to get the bowl invitation.

Duke, after winning its first five games, has won only one of its last five, 7-6 over Clemson last week. Over the last half of the season Duke has been beaten by Georgia Tech and Carolina and tied Navy and State.

Murray Figures Duke Should Still Get Bid

DURHAM, N. C., Nov. 23 —(AP)— Duke Coach Bill Murray said today that in his opinion Duke is the logical team on the basis of its record to represent the Atlantic Coast Conference in the Orange Bowl on New Year's Day.

Prior to making the comment, Murray was asked if Duke would accept a bid. He replied, "I don't know. It would depend on whether the boys want to go."

He said "my personal opinion" is that Carolina is out of the bowl picture since it lost two conference games early in the season.

North Carolina State, which won the ACC title today, had only a 14-14 tie with Duke to blemish its conference record. Duke had that tie and today's loss to Carolina

State Can't Go

Because it is under NCAA suspension, N. C. State is not eligible to make the bowl trip.

Coach Jim Tatum said that the win over Duke by his underdog Tar Heels was "the greatest thrill I have ever had in football." Carolina now has a 6-3 season record, including two conference defeats. The Tar Heels end their season next Saturday against Virginia.

Praises Cummings

Murray said, "you have to take off your hat to a team like Carolina. They got behind, but stayed in there and battled their way back. They whipped us by throwing the ball. Quarterback Jack Cummings did a wonderful job with his passing. The receiving, especially, was good. Cummings is a great athlete."

Murray told news reporters "we were in a commanding position with a two-touchdown lead and we let them get away. Something like that just shouldn't happen. You have to be self critical in a situation like that."

The Duke coach said he was alarmed at his team's failure "to play well after gaining a commanding lead."

White Sparks Tigers Over Deacons, 13-6

CLEMSON, S. C., Nov. 23 (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Harvey White steered Clemson's football team to two touchdowns in 59 seconds of the final two minutes today for a 13-6 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over Wake Forest.

When Wake Forest, desperate to stave off its 11th consecutive loss, nine this season, tried a fourth down pass, ineligible receivers gave Clemson the ball on the Wake five.

Wake Forest moved 71 yards in 15 plays the second time it got the ball in the opening quarter. Sophomore fullback Neil MacLean rammed over from the five. His conversion try was wide.

White Passes

White's touchdown pass was his eighth of the season, equaling a conference record set in 1952 by South Carolina's Johnny Gramling.

Clemson missed three touchdown chances. Once the Tigers had a pass intercepted, another time they fumbled the ball away and on a third occasion they were held for downs on the seven.

Wake Forest, threatening three times, missed a field goal and was held for downs at the 10, after its early touchdown.

WAKE FOREST	6	0	0	0	— 6
CLEMSON	0	0	0	13	— 13

Christy Leads 'Pack To Win

Columbia, S. C., Nov. 23 —(AP)— Halfback Dick Christy broke the ACC scoring record with 29 points today, and scored a field goal after the game had ended, giving North Carolina State a 29-26 victory over South Carolina.

Christy scored his team's four touchdowns and kicked the extra point, in addition to the winning field goal that provided as hectic a finish as was ever seen in an ACC game.

State had the ball in the closing seconds on its own 47 yard line. Quarterback Tom Katich hurled a long pass which South Carolina halfback Alex Hawkins intercepted on the 20. Hawkins raced back to his own 20 before he was stopped by center Paul Balonick as the clock ran out. Many of the estimated 14,000 spectators crowded onto the playing field.

Officials ruled however, that there had been interference with the State receiver and gave the ball to the Wolfpack for one play after the game had ended officially. It took several minutes to clear the field of spectators, then the Wolfpack lined up for its final effort. Christy kicked the ball from the Gamecock 35 cleanly through the uprights to win the game.

Notre Dame Edged By Hawkeyes, 21-13

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 24 —(AP)— Randy Duncan's fourth-quarter touchdown pass, deflected by two Notre Dame defenders, fell into the hands of end Don Norton and doomed Notre Dame's hopes today in a 21-13 Iowa victory.

The Hawkeyes stormed to an early 14-0 lead but were forced to come through with a final touchdown to make sure of the hard-fought triumph.

Take A Book Home For Thanksgiving

The home folks think you're pretty nice, but sometimes you can catch them right plumb off guard by showing that you think they're nice too.

Like, maybe, bringing home a book.

For instance — there are some beautiful little Dickens volumes in our book section that look like a million dollars, and cost in the neighborhood of three. Or there are those really handsome little Peter Pauper books on the dollar table.

If you really want to splurge, Dad would love THE OLD MAN AND THE BOY, the new Robert Ruark book about North Carolina. But it costs $4.95.

The point is, giving is a two-way street, and the family will really thrill to know you thought of them.

Take home a book for Thanksgiving.

PEEWEE BATTEN—This Carolina coed, famous for her record, "My Big Brother's Friend," will be one of the stars appearing in the Carolina Cavalcade of Talent tonight.

By MARY MOORE MASON

Pee Wee flashed a gay and dazzling smile at me as Cecil's fingers moved idly and expertly over the keys of the old piano.

"Yes," she said, "we have a record coming out, one that Cecil wrote for "Thieves's Holiday." Sound and Fury's musical last year. The name of the record is "Lonesome Train.

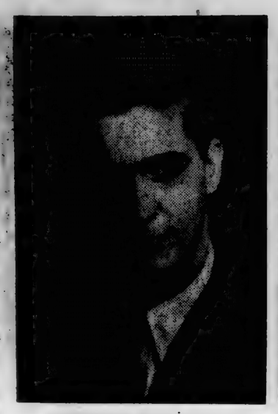
I remembered Pee Wee Batten and Cecil Hartsoe in last year's "Sound and Fury." You could hear a pin drop in Memorial Hall as Pee Wee sang the haunting blues ballad with Cecil's piano accompaniment coming forth softly from the orchestra pit.

Pee Wee and Cecil, both now under contract with Colonial Record, will be featured stars of the Cavalcade of Talent which will take place tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Pee Wee, the star of numerous campus shows, was the winner of last year's talent show. Her fame spread abroad last year when she recorded a piece entitled "My Big Brother's Friends."

A 22-year-old special student from Mount Gilead, Pee Wee spent one summer on a tour of Cuba as one of several talent stars. She has also worked at the Plantation Club in Greensboro as a featured singer and comedy star.

Cecil, a 21-year-old former student of UNC, is now living out in town and writing music. He was not only the pianist for Sound and Fury last year, but wrote much of the music for the show.

Pee Wee, famous as a comedy actress as well as singer who can hold an audience in the palm of her small hand, will be joined in her Cavalcade of Talent act by Ken Callender, well - known student comedian from Greensboro.



However, this trio will be only one of the many variety acts which will be in the show tonight, sponsored by the Y "Y Nite" committee and GMAB.

Also featured from last year's show will be Hoke Simpson of recording fame who is currently under contract to ABC- Paramount; Les Sutorius and his famous combo; Oliver Bloomer, student ventriloquist, and his dummy, Jimmy Ros-

Record Voting Is Expected In Recall

A record vote is expected today in the second recall election to occur in UNC's history of student government.

Paul Rule is a junior and journalism major who has been editor and publisher of the weekly South Norfolk (Va.) News since the spring of this year. In addition, he is United Press correspondent for the South Norfolk area.

In the past Rule has held positions of city editor of the Virginia Beach, Va., Daily Star and editor of the Tidewater Shopper of Portsmouth, Va. In radio and television he has served as program director and chief announcer for WTOV-TV, Portsmouth, Va., as chief announcer for WFOS, South Norfolk, Va. and as commercial writer for WRAP, Norfolk, Va.

Doug Eisele is a sophomore and business major from Statesville. After his graduation from high school in 1954 he worked for two years as a reporter for the Statesville Record and Landmark. During that time he also represented the Charlotte Observer, the Greensboro Daily News and the Winston-Salem Journal in Statesville, and the United Press in the Statesville area.

Last year Eisele worked with the University News Bureau as a reporter and feature writer. This fall he was managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel until the time that he announced his candidacy for editor.

Incumbent editor Neil Bass is a senior majoring in English and journalism. He began working on The Daily Tar Heel as a freshman three years ago, and worked as a reporter, a columnist and, after his election last spring, as editor until the present.

Dormitory polling places will include all dormitories except for Kenan and Conner. Town polling places are listed as follows: Town Men's I will vote in Carolina Inn; Town Men's II will vote in the Scuttlebutt; Town Men's III will vote in Graham Memorial; Town Men's IV will vote in Victory Village; and Town Women will vote in Gerrard Hall.

No advertising or soliciting for the advancement of any candidate is permitted within a radius of 50 feet from the ballot boxes.

Many Student Govt. Leaders Support Doug Eisele At Rally

By DAVIS YOUNG

On the eve of the recall election Douglas Eisele and his forces combined for an "Eisele for Editor Rally" in Gerrard Hall last night.

Many of the prominent leaders from all phases of student government were on hand to speak for Eisele including: Sonny Evans, student body president; Don Furtado, student body vice president; George Ragsdale, senior class president and chairman of the Men's Honor Council and Al Lowenstein, former associate editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

First to speak for Eisele was Evans who stated: "If I could point to one issue its whether or not student government is valid. I like Neil Bass personally, but do not feel that he has been a good editor.

"The issue is not whether you disagree with his personal opinions. The issue is whether Neil has been competent."

Barry Winston, former candidate for the editorship was the next speaker and said: "I ran for the position of editor for two reasons. I wanted a good DTH and a felt that I was the most competent person for the job of editor.

"A week ago a person appeared on the scene that I felt was more competent than me. I have withdrawn because I feel that Doug Eisele is more competent."

Anne Frye, former DTH staffer spoke to the group and stated: "As a member of the DTH staff, I have been in a position to witness the incompetancy of the present editor.

"I have seen the superior journalistic ability of Doug. Until last week I could not honestly support anyone but Bass. However, since that time Doug has announce his candidacy and I feel that he is the man."

Furtado addressed the assemblage and said: "Before last Monday I too was unable to know how I was going to vote. I feel that although Neil is a good personal friend of mine, that he has demonstrated a terrible journalistic attitude.

"I joined the 'clique" because I feel that Doug Eisele is the only competant candidate. The paper is a terrible example today of what can happen when an editor is incompetent and uses his position to slander and abuse."

Dot Pressly, secretary of the student body stated: "If you are like me then you are sick of this entire recall. This is a tragic case. However, I do not feel that we have a paper that we can be proud of. I too am behind Doug Eisele."

Ragsdale said that he heard a person say yesterday that he is against Eisele because he is against the principle of recall. He stated: "This is not a valid reason for voting for Bass as he was recalled the moment the petition went in.

"There is nothing wrong with a recall as it is perfectly legitimate. Be sure and see all the people you can and explain the issues to them. Tomorrow will either be a personal disaster for Neil Bass or a disaster for the school."

Lowenstein was the next to assume the rostrum and said: "I hope tomorrow that students will turn out in sufficient number to assure the election of Doug Eisele. The issue is not the viewpoint of the editor, but rather our quarrel is with the incompetent management of The Daily Tar Heel.

"I don't feel it is necessary to go back further than last Monday night to see the proof. Bass has used 285⅝ inches of editorial copy in his own behalf to 52 inches for Eisele. He has failed to print so far a letter by the Chairman of the Men's Honor Council and the Student Council.

"I don't feel that the DTH is college level writing of any kind. I need only point to recent front page distortions. This recall is a question of whether we will allow the DTH to fall into unscrupulous hands."

Eisele spoke briefly in his own behalf telling the group: "I have very much opposed to the recall as I feel it is ugly and unfortunate." He pointed to his work as a

Federal Inspection Nears For AFROTC

Tension mounts in the UNC AFROTC Corps as the Federal Inspection, Dec. 5-6, draws near.

During the federal visitation, the entire UNC cadet will present a parade-review ceremony for the liason team from Headquarters AFROTC, Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama.

Lt. Col. DeAlbert S. Hoke Jr. and Lt. Col. Sidney F. Wogan will make up the Federal Inspection Team.

During the visitation the inspecting officers will interview detachment and cadet personnel and monitor classes and inspect all other phases of the cadet program here.

According to Cadet 1st Lt. William Stewart, Cadet Group ISO, the purpose of the Federal Inspection is to develop and exchange ideas on ways to improve the AFROTC program and give the cadets the best possible instruction.

Cadet Group Promotions

Former Cadet Lt. Col. Tom Ferrell and Cadet Maj. Ralph Hunt, two UNC Distinguished AFROTC Cadets, were promoted to Cadet Col. and Cadet Lt. Col. respectively in a ceremony held during a recent drill on Emerson Field.

Maj. Jack Gabus and Capt. Thomas Humphrey sprang he promotions on the senior cadets in surprise award ceremony before the entire cadet corps.

Cadet Col. Farrel and Cadet Lt. Col. Hunt received the promotions for the outstanding work they have done with the cadet corps this semester as Cadet Group Commander and Cadet Executive Officer, respectively.

AFROTC Flight Training

A flying training program for senior cadets in the UNC AFROTC program will be initiated at the opening of the spring semester in January.

Lt. Col. F. W. Swann, UNC professor of Air Science, announced that all senior cadets who have qualified as future pilot will receive instruction. They will fly from the Horace Williams Airport.

Instruction will be supplied by Wilson Air Service. The new Cessna "172," a 145 horsepower aircraft with tricycle landing gear, will be used for the training.

After 10 hours of dual flight ins-

Y TV Series Will Present Play By Miller

Arthur Miller's play "A Memory of Two Mondays" will be presented in an adapted version on WUNC-TV tonight at 9:30. This is one of a series of TV programs presented by WUNC-TV in cooperation with the YMCA. The series is entitled "Faith and the Fine Arts."

Jim Studdiford of WUNC-TV is the producer-director of the series and Jim Carse, assistant director of the "Y" has been serving as adviser to the planning group as well as moderator of the programs.

Miss Eve McClatchey is chairman of the planning group which initiated the series and plans the various programs in the series.

Among programs to be presented following Miller's play are a TV adaptation of Camus' "The Stranger" next Tuesday night, Dec. 3; following that on successive Tuesday nights will be a show on Picasso with Minerva Pannell of the Art Dept.; and on Dec. 17 there will be a presentation on "The Nativity Theme in Art" with Dr. Sommer, also of the University Art Dept.

Featured in tonight's program "A Memory of Two Monday's" will be Pete O'Sullivan, Harvey Knox, Gene Parsons, Scott Lett and Jerry Elliott.

Phi To Meet

The abolishment of capital punishment will be tonight's bill for debate in the meeting of the Phi.

Phi members will meet in Phi hall ,fourth floor New East, at 8 p. m.

Maintaining that "capital punishment does not fulfill its secondary purpose of being a deterrent to crime," the bill calls for the abolishment of such punishment in the United States.

Editorship Candidates Make Statements

PAUL RULE

I wish to take this opportunity to pass along to you a few of the more important points in my current campaign for the position of editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

(1) Journalism is a profession, and a journalist is bound by ethics just as an attorney or a physician. The present editor has, in my opinion, violated these ethics through his conduct of the Tar Heel editorial page and should be "disbarred" by the recall election.

(2) The United States Supreme Court has set back race relations at least a generation. I believe that if the present cry of extreme integrationists is heeded the result will be disasterous. If elected, I plan to express the view in editorials of a moderate segregationist.

(3) Through economy measures and expanded coverage a much better Tar Heel can be produced. I believe that my six years of professional experience in this field will aid me in returning our paper to the position of the foremost college daily in the United States.

(4) Coach Tatum was hired to do a job. He is doing this job admirably well. If we believe in the principle "innocent until proven guilty," then the present editor has condemned an innocent man.

(5) A staff training program should be instituted at the Tar Heel.

(6) Before entering an editorial election each prospective candidate should be required to pass a general examination on all phases of newspaper production. This test, under the supervision of the Publications Board, would assure the presence of qualified candidates only.

(7) Editorial page columnists should voice a wide range of opinions and not merely "parrot" the editor's point of view.

(8) I am completely independent of political connection or control. Not one penny of campaign funds has been contributed by anyone but me. I seek this position not for political advantage but as a journalist who feels he can improve our newspaper.

It is upon these eight points that I respectively solicit your vote in this recall election.

Statement from Grayson Mills campaign manager for Candidate Paul Rule:

It is extremely unfortunate that what began as well-founded student body sympathy cast to oust an incommensurate, heteroclitic editor, has turned into a pot of political clap-trap.

It has become evident to me that on one side of the ledger we have a group which took advantage of this sympathy to attempt to further their own interests rather than hold the goal of improving the Tar Heel as their sole motive.

DOUG EISELE

"Eisele For Editor" backers wound up their preelection campaign Monday with submission of a letter signed by a cross-section of UNC students who favor the recall movement.

Following is a reprint of the letter, signed by the cross-section of UNC students, who urged the election of Eisele today:

"We are students who come from many phases of University life. Rarely would we all agree on any issue. We do agree, however that this is one of the most important elections Carolina students have faced in many years, and we hope that you will read this letter before you vote today.

"What is at stake in this election is nothing less than a vindication of the idea that students are capable of responsible self-government. Under the Carolina student constitution, the only way to replace an irresponsible Editor is to recall him. If students are unwilling to assume this responsibility when circumstances clearly demand the replacement of an incompetent student official, it becomes hard to defend the prinlip le that such decisions can be left in student hands. In this sense, "freedom of the press" is involved in the election, for our press can remain free of outside censorship and control only so long as students are willing to assume the burden of keeping their paper fairly and responsibly edited.

"Many of us opposed the recall two years ago, and none of us would support one now if it were based on disagreement with the Editor's opinions. The issue, however, is not opinion but competence.

"Although we have been concerned with the quality of editorial writing in the Daily Tar Heel this year, we are supporting the recall primarily because of the repeated instances in which The Daily Tar Heel has ignored facts, distorted news stories, and abused innocent individuals. It is typical that the Editor's reaction to the signing of petitions by over 1,000 students was to dream up stories about "cliques" and political intrigue, and then to write editorials denouncing the "cliques" he has just invented. During the past few days we have watched with a growing sense of outrage the manner in which the Editor has abused his office by inventing news and by suppressing points of view other than his own. We know the student body will not condone such tactics when the facts are presented.

"It is fortunate that a journalist as well qualified as Doug Eisele is running for Editor of The Daily Tar Heel in this important election. He worked two years as a re-

NEIL BASS

"Today the student body will make a decision which will determine the fate of The Daily Tar Heel for the duration of its existence.

"In past elections, there have been too few voters. Today, students can little afford not to exercise their priceless ballot box privilege.

"The issue at stake far transcends personalities. The issue — now clouded by political manipulation, charges and countercharges — is basic free expression as opposed to a controlled student press.

"I have been encouraged by the number of students who have pledged their support to my cause and by the formation of a Committee for Editorial Free Expression. I am also encouraged by the sense of fairness which has governed the campaign of editorship Candidate Paul Rule.

"I have been discouraged by the political manipulation and sense of negativism which has dominated much of the campaign. It has seemed apparent that a particular segment of the campus has been devoted, not toward election of a better editor, but toward defeat of an individual with whom it disagreed violently. The withdrawal of one candidate and the late entry of another testifies to this prevailing negativism.

"I am certain that the student body is awfully tired of this brand of political manipulation, this sense of negativism. And I feel confident that the student body will defeat it at the ballot boxes today.

"I can hardly over emphasize the importance of this election as far as my life is concerned. But I matter very little. It is for my successors that I urge the student body to defeat political negativism at the polls. No editor can function successfully and speak out unhesitantly with the threat of 'recall for disagreement's sake' staring him in the face each time he sits at his typewriter.

"When the student body graciously elected me editor last spring, I realized the tremendous responsibilities involved; but I had worked on the paper for three years, wanted the job with all my heart, and accepted the responsibilities with all human devotion possible.

"If I sincerely felt there was another candidate in the race with better qualifications and experience, I would withdraw in deference to him. The paper is my life, and I respect it that much.

"If I am re-elected through the grace of the student body:

(1) I will hold malice toward no one, but will pledge my cooperation toward forwarding the prin-

Open Letter To Voters: Significance Of Recall

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE STUDENT BODY:

The implications of a recall election are so far-reaching they merit unlimited discussion.

Today, the moment of decision has arrived. The student body will decide today, not only my fate — for I matter little —, but the fate of Daily Tar Heel editors for the duration of the paper's existence.

The basic issue involved—though clouded by personal ambitions, political manipulation and a sense of negativism on the part of many —is the freedom of any editor to speak his mind on pertinent issues. This right of editors to speak their minds is a priceless and integral part of American Democracy.

In addressing you as students in this personal way, I am not defending myself or my stand on any issue. Instead, I seek to defend, in my humble way, the right of future Daily Tar Heel editors to express opinions without fear of 'censorship and recall for disagreement's sake.'

Recall is a valuable part of the American governmental system — if it is used correctly as a weapon against gross malfeasance and intentional misuse of a public office. But this weapon becomes perverted and tyrannical if it is incorrectly used to censor the thoughts of those who seek only to insure a fair shake for the electorate — the people.

As Dave Levy, Florida State Alligator editor, said in a letter addressed to myself:

"Any editor, elected to do his job, is bound to arouse criticism. No conscientious editor who speaks or writes as he feels can help but alienate some segment of the student body.

"If this recall succeeds, and I pray that it does not, no future editor of The Daily Tar Heel will be free from the threat of being removed from office because his policies are disagreed with.

"I earnestly hope that the student body will not take the chance of throwing away the editorial independence and integrity of The Daily Tar Heel by approving this recall movement.

"The eyes of all college newspapers all over the South will be on the UNC student body to determine the outcome."

The eyes of the South are truly upon the UNC electorate as it goes to the polls today—we hope, in numbers.

The Raleigh News and Observer printed an editorial a week ago from which I take excerpts:

"Over at Chapel Hill for the second time in a couple of years, there is a movement to recall — that is to eject — the editor of the student newspaper — The Daily Tar Heel.

"Apparently students, who find they don't agree with the editor they elected, want to give him the gate.

". . . If the students believe in the democracy by which the young man was elected, they better also hold to the principle of free expression, too. They can recall him. But if they do they will be admitting both the failure of their own democracy and their unwillingness to tolerate opinions with which they disagree.

I do not agree with the News and Observer that a recall would be admission of democratic failure. Recall is a proper and justifiable method to correct gross malfeasance and intentional misuse of office.

But I must agree that recall, in this instance, would demonstrate "unwillingness to tolerate opinions" with which there is disagreement.

The student body does not want, I sincerely feel, a paper packed with pat platitudes — agreeable platitudes.

The student body does want, I sincerely feel, a lively and interesting newspaper — lively because there is no hesitation to speak out on controversial issues.

If the recall is successful, and I pray with Dave Levy and the Florida State Alligator that it is not, future Daily Tar Heel editors must live in perpetual fear, must hesitate to speak their minds, must hesitate to evoke lively and controversial discussions.

I sought editorship of this paper — earnestly and diligently — fully aware that it was an unpopular job. I have worked on this paper three years and it is my life. Therefore, if I felt there was a more capable and devoted candidate in the race, I would withdraw and give him my full support. I love the paper that much.

But I matter little in this race. It is the issue for which I must fight to the end.

This issue — editorship without fear or intimidation — I will support with all my God-given energies and through my every waking hour.

If I am re-elected, as I said on page one, I shall have two objectives:

(1) Complete casting aside of any ill feelings which might have resulted from the recall and renewed cooperation toward fulfillment of the purposes for which this University was created.

(2) Renewed determination to continually improve this paper through devotion of my every waking hour.

The matter lies in the hands of you as students. I am confident your choice will be wise and thoughtful.

I may be defeated but I will not be intimidated — scared away from speaking on controversial topics. Do not cast a ballot for me if you want an editor with whom the student body will always agree, an editor who will poll the students before he ever speaks on any issue, an editor who will not have incentive enough to formulate his own opinions and assert them strongly.

But, at any rate, cast a ballot and think carefully before you do so.

The eyes of the South are upon you.

Vote wisely and carefully.

The paper's life and editorial independence depend on you.

Male Ghosts? Male Boasts? Male Toasts?

Gail Godwin

I would like to acknowledge Mr. John M. Moore's letter of the 21st of November, and to reprin parts of it because it is much too good to be left unpublicized.

"Miss Godwin, your farce is ridiculously futile. If the DTH articles having your by-line are written by a member of the softer sex (which I doubt) then "it" is certainly not of the bobby-sox, loafer, bubble-gum set. No, Miss Godwin, one does not make the transition from comic books to Camus overnight, nor does one who was swooning over Elvis a few weeks ago write with the considerable wisdom and philosophical insight today.

". . . Your readers have no alternative but to conclude that "your" stories are in reality "ghost stories" . . . Even some of the top literary figures in the ranks of the fair sex, such as Gypsy Rose Lee are alleged to employ professional ghosts. Also I have it from reliable sources that a certain young French Miss, who is addicted to driving sport cars barefooted, signs the dotted line with an X. (Confidentially, her literary career was the brain child of a smart advertising man who devised the scheme to sell more turtle neck sweaters.)"

Thank you, Mr. Moore, for paying me the highest compliment I have ever had. For judging my articles to be such gems of philosophical insight that they seem to you much too good for a mere female to think up.

As for my ghost writer, I admit I have one. "She" would be quite invisible to you, but she drifts around in the inner-reservoir of my feeble, bobby-sox and bubble gum mind quoting Camus and other great MALE masterminds. Her name is Gertrude Godwin Ghost.

The author of Carolina Carrousel and Gertrude Godwin Ghost extend a hearty invitation to the writer of his "Doubting Thomas" letter to come up to the DTH office any day and see Gertrude and myself in action.

Poor Francoise Sagan and I. We have been found out. Another smart advertising man cajoled me into this "farce" in order to promote bubble gum and bobby sox.

Thank you again, Mr. Moore!

CAMPAIGN MANAGER:

Shuford Asserts For Eisele . . .

EDITOR:

The following editorial appeared in the Statesville Record and Landmark the day after Douglas Eisele resigned his job there in the in the summer of 1956 to enter the University of North Carolina.

The editorial, in full, follows:

ON THE WAY UP—Only once before have we used this space to pay tribute to a parting employe. Today we want to make our manners to Douglas Eisele, who is entering the University of North Carolina.

Doug joined the Record and Landmark staff something over a year ago. He had finished high school and had found that he could not go on to college without first getting a job and saving some money.

He was employed in a local industrial plant when we called him and asked if he would like to come to work for us. He said he would. And he did.

Doug knew little about reporting, but he was willing to learn. He knew nothing about photography; but he learned that, too. In time, he became one of our most dependable and most valuable staff members. He never complained about the hours. He never balked at an assignment. He never asked for a raise, although earned several.

Meanwhile, we have seen several big-time operators come and go. Without exception, they felt they were being underpaid and overworked. The pastures looked greener elsewhere. They all wanted to be paid for "experience," but never had time to stay in one place long enough to get it. Not one of them could fill the reportorial shoes of Doug Eisele.

Doug will continue his journalism training at the University of North Carolina. He will pay a part of his expenses by working with Pete Ivey in the University News Bureau, a job we helped him to land despite competition from college men already on the scene.

Yesterday Doug came by to tell us he appreciated the opportunity we had given him to learn something about newspapering.

"What I have learned will pay my way through college," he said, "and I want you to know I appreciate it."

A nice sentiment from a fellow who would have made it anyway.

RECALL ELECTION:

Judicial Heads Give Opinions

(In accordance with a promise made to Chairman Patton of Zeta Psi Fraternity and Chairman Ragsdale, we print their views on the recall at the earliest date space would allow. The deluge of recent letters has prohibited earlier printing. The Editor)

TO THE STUDENT BODY:

The authors of this letter wish to make it clear from the outset that the statements made in the letter which follows are solely the opinions and beliefs of the undersigned, and do not, in any sense reflect the opinion of any group, or any other persons. We have written the letter because of deep seated convictions held by us, and we feel compelled to make public, matters which should be of individual concern to every student.

Concerning the pressing recall issue, it is our belief that the question of freedom of the press is not even remotely involved. Every man is entitled to speak freely at all times, and this applies to the editor of any newspaper at any time. The matter of freedom of the press should not even be discussed in reference to the recall, simply because it is not a matter under consideration, and does not, in any way, bear upon the subject. No one, including ourselves, has ever questioned the right of the editor to state his opinion on any subject.

Rather than being a question of freedom of the press, it is a question of student freedom. The Administration has exhibited its willingness to delegate huge chunks of freedom to the students. Chancellor Aycock has invited students to attend and participate in top-level Administrative Planning Conferences. Neil Bass is the only editor in the history of The Daily Tar Heel who has ever been invited to attend such conferences. He has refused to attend every conference held since the invitation was extended to him. How long will the Administration continue to invite students to such important functions if one of the most important and supposedly responsible members of the student body continues to ignore the invitation?

The charges against the editor are those of incompetency and irresponsibility. We hold that the charges are well founded. It is our conviction that the editor is irresponsible because he has, throughout the discussion of many issues exhibited immaturity, and a decided lack of devotion to the presentation of the facts. In his slurs against Dr. Hedgepeth, Coach Tatum, and Sam Magill he has presented opinions of his own. This, in itself, is permissable, and we repeat that he is within his rights to do so. But when these accusations are not based upon truth or fact, then the expression of such opinion becomes objectionable. He has, time and time again, gone beyond, or rather below, the issues involved and has condemned personalities who had little, or nothing, to do with the issues at hand. We believe that such unwarranted personal disparagement is not in keeping with the spirit of dignity which has pervaded the editoral page of The Daily Tar Heel and made it the outstanding college daily in the nation, until recently.

We believe that the editor is also incompetent. He has exhibited this trait during the handling of the Asian flu situation. The editor made many statements which were simply not true. It is an established fact that Editor Bass did not know the facts behind the Asian flu situation until well after the "epidemic" had passed. Consequently, you, the reader, did not know them either. If the editor had simply called the Chancellor, who ordered the vaccine, or Business Manager Branch, who bought it, or Dr. Hedgepeth, who administered it, and if he had gotten the facts from them, the resulting unfortunate situation, which the editor himself caused, which accompanied the "epidemic" was a direct result of the editor's ignorance of the facts and of the truth. In spite of the fact that he did not know the truth, he chose to present, as facts, a picture of extreme negligence on the part of the Administration, which, in fact did not exist.

To properly present the case of grounds of incompetency and irresponsibility would require many pages. This is only a basic summation. And it could not, in any way, be correctly construed as a personal attack on Neil Bass. We are speaking out against the things which he has stood for. We know that the editor has not consistently restricted his statements to the confines of truth. We believe that one who indulges in such statements is not qualified to assume the position of responsibility and high honor which an editor of The Daily Tar Heel should hold.

The situation is an extremely unfortunate one, particularly for the editor. It is almost pitiable. But something must be done. The question remains: What will you, the reader, do about it?

Iva Kitchell To Appear

with the Chicago Opera Ballet, it occurred to Kansas - born Iva Kitchell that serious modern dancing is sometimes ridiculous. When she mimicked her ballet master during a rehearsal, instead of scolding her, he gave Iva a comedy spot in the ballet.

Since then, Iva has been mimicking many types of dancing, from Isadora Ducan's classical creations to the tortured soul searchings of some of the moderns.

On a recent tour of South America, when dancing to capacity audiences in Buenos Aaires, Rio de Janeiro and other cities, Miss Kitchell performed "Carmen Kitchell from Kansas, a savage take-off on Spanish dancers. It proved such a success that on 16 occasions she repeated her interpretation of the sultry Carmen.

While as a dancer Miss Kitchell admits dancers often look silly, she does not think they are the only funny people.

In the series of sketches which she will present at Memorial Hall, one may expect to recognize familiar figures such as salesmen, lovers, hostesses, psychochondriacs or even the cavortings of a pet kitten.

An important part of the show is contributed by Miss Kitchell's able composer pianist, Harvey Brown, who has been her accompanist from the beginning of her career, with the exception of a three year interruption during the war. Brown plays for the dancers and has composed the music for many of them.

On the other, we have someone who is integrous yet hasn't reached what the campus wants, nor has he shown any improvement toward that direction.

Rule has neither sought nor employed any under-the-table modes of working toward his goal of becoming editor of The Daily Tar Heel. He plans no other renovation than making The Daily Tar Heel America's number one college daily.

While a two-party endorsement is formidable, I believe voters on this campus are intelligent enough to cast their ballots for whom they believe to be the best man, rather than blindly following the edicts of their party leaders. Not even tonight's last big rock and roll show for 1957 can save a "pig in a poke," unless of course, the turnout at the polls is a small one. So I urge everyone to vote and support the old bromide, "vote for whomever you please, but please vote."

Nothing succeeds like success and success has followed Rule wherever he's gone. His experience as newspaperman, radio and television performer has encouraged me to believe that he is indeed the right man to resurrect the Tar Heel from a journalistic grave.

By DAVID PETERSON

Acclaimed the greatest portrayer of Abraham Lincoln, Raymond Massey again plays Lincoln in the Paul Gregory play, "The Rivalry," written and directed by Norman Corwin.

"The Rivalry" one night only in Chapel Hill, Friday Dec. 6, in Memorial Hall. The production is sponsored by the Carolina Playmakers.

Massey became an actor on the advice of the late John Drew. Following his recovery from wounds inflicted at Ypres during World War I, he was assigned to the British Military Mission to the U. S. as a gunnery instructor at both Princeton and Yale.

Among his officer candidates were Henry Luce, Henry Stimson and Stephen Vincent Benet, with whom he struck up a firm and lasting friendship. After service with a small Canadian expeditionary force in Siberia, he attended Balliol College, Oxford, and headed home to Canada. It was then he sought the counsel of John Drew.

Returning to London, he was chosen for the role of Yank in Eugene O'Neill's "In the Zone." The play was a West End failure, but it started a 16-year career in London for Massey, who played in more than 100 prdouctions.

At the suggestion of Noel Coward, Norman Bel Beddes engaged Massey for the title role in his 1931 production of Hamlet. While the show ran for a mere eight weeks on Broadway, it brought Massey to the attention of Robert Sherwood.

Sherwood asked him to consider portraying Lincoln. The part, in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" brought Massey lasting fame.

He has appeared with Katherine Cornell in "Candida," with Gertrude Lawrence in "Pygmalion" and Mady Christians in "The Father."

Four seasons ago Raymond Massey was the star of another Paul Gregory stage success "John Brown's Body."

An American citizen, Massey holds honorary degrees of Doctor of Literature from Lafayette College and Doctor of Laws from Queen's University, Ontario.

The current play "The Rivalry," which co-stars Agnes Moorehead and Martin Gabel again casts Massey as Lincoln. It presents the story of the Lincoln-Douglas debates in a production hailed by critics are "timely as today's headlines from Little Rock."

Tickets for the production are available in the business office of the Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved.

Victory Bell Is Back At UNC, At Last

At approximately 4:30 Saturday afternoon a tremendous group of Carolina students swarmed across a muddy Duke Stadium turf and layed rightful claim to an object which Tar Heel fans and students have been wanting since way back in 1950 — The Victory Bell.

After seven long years of listening to the Duke students toll the bell vehemently and being able to do nothing but sit and hope, this symbolic clatterer of conquest was once again in the hands of the Chapel Hillians.

What had ensued prior to this gala reclamation will live in the hearts of present Carolina students forever. They had just seen the culmination of two years of diligent work by a fellow named Jim Tatum who literally picked Carolina football up by its boot straps and brought it out of the pits of defeatism and placed it on the football map again. Carolina had beaten Duke and in doing so, had insured itself of a winning season for the first time since 1949. It was also the first time since '49 that the Tar Heels had beaten Duke.

Everybody Did His Share In Victory

Yes, it was a great day for Carolina. It was a tremendous and harmonious effort on the part of the entire Tar Heel team. Down 13-0 early in the second quarter, the Tar Heels absolutely refused to give up, and when tackle Phil Blazer sent the Tar Heel's fourteenth point through the uprights after 4:50 of the third period there was that feeling that everything was going to be all right; that Carolina had finally reached the football heights of the Choo Choo Justice era.

Who can possibly single out any one Tar Heel as the "man who did it?" Certainly quarterback Jack Cummings did a lion's share of the work. But every passer has to have a receiver and Cummings had several Saturday.

Captain Buddy Payne, one of the most improved ball players this writer has ever seen, was everywhere, offensively and defensively. The TV announcer called him "Monotonous Payne," a tribute to his great all-round play. Centers Don Koes and Jim Jones did a marvelous job, and the entire Carolina line was on its toes throughout. The offensive and defensive work of the Carolina backfield contributed vitally to the victory.

Tatum also got in his two cents worth, concocting the single wing on a couple of plays and running the double reverse several times. All things added up to a great Carolina victory.

No Sour Grapes On Orange Bowl Decision

Duke got the Orange Bowl bid and there should be no "sour grapes" on the part of Carolina fans. True, it seemed the Tar Heels might have a good chance of attaining the bid after the Duke victory, but the ACC Bowl Committee felt that Duke was the logical choice.

The committee is a worthy and responsible organization and its decision should not be questioned. Duke, despite its poor showing in its final five games, was the conference champion (since State was ineligible) and it was upon this, apparently, that the committee based its decision.

The only complaint which we have about the whole situation is that the committee's rules regarding the bowl representative are too vague. Misinterpretation has been prevalant throughout the Orange Bowl speculation because, we believe, nobody actually understood upon what basis the representative is chosen.

Bowl Bid Seems Doubtful From Here

There has been some talk of Carolina getting a bid to either the Gator or Cotton Bowl provided it beats Virginia this Saturday. This, in our opinion, is mere abstract speculation.

The contract governing the ACC-Orange Bowl affiliation specifically stipulates that no other ACC team shall participate in a New Year's Day bowl game. The only group which can waive this clause is the Orange Bowl Committee, and there is strong doubt in our mind that the OBC will do this for either Carolina or Clemson.

Of course, by the most meticulous interpretation of the rules, the Gator Bowl is not played on New Year's Day, thus leaving a loophole for the ACC Committee. However, it seems to us that the Orange Bowl stipulations actually included any post-season bowl game, since at the time of the contract the Gator Bowl was played Jan. 1.

The ACC committee will weigh the ethics of using this loophole and, we believe, will content itself with sending Duke to the Orange Bowl. The Orange Bowl pact, incidentally, expires at the termination of this season.

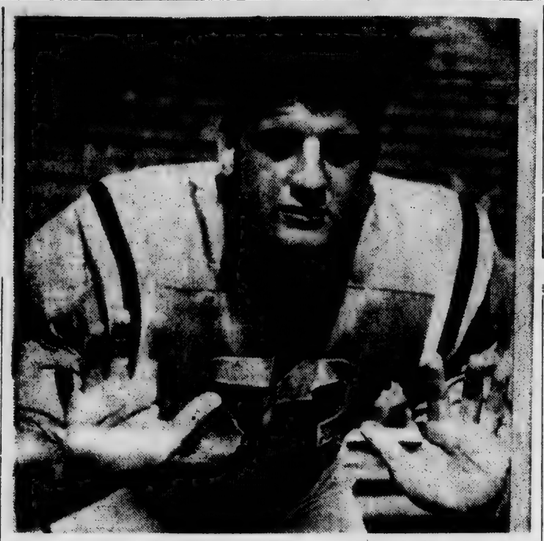
Goldsmith's Proposal Should Be Considered

It is a shame that Carolina will have to close out this fine season during the Thanksgiving holidays when a majority of the students will miss the game. Many of the Tar Heels will be playing their final game in Kenan Stadium Saturday and they simply won't receive the tribute they so richly deserve from the students.

Student Legislature representative Al Goldsmith introduced a resolution last week "urging the Athletic Department not to schedule home football games during Thanksgiving Holidays."

Goldsmith's proposal is worthy of great consideration. Had we played throughout the season without a layoff, the season would have ended Saturday and there would have been no excuse for the final game to be marred with below normal student support.

We recognize too, the obstacles which the Athletic Department encounters when composing a schedule. However, it would be good for all concerned if future schedules could be arranged to end before the Thanksgiving break.



Christy Holds Big Margin

GREENSBORO, N. C., Nov. 25 (AP)—Halfback Dick Christy made his last performances as a member of the North Carolina State football team a memorable one.

He not only kicked the field goal that gave his team a 29-26 victory over South Carolina, but he scored all of his team's points to take over the lead in the Altantic Coast Conference individual scoring race.

His performance also eclipsed the single game scoring mark of 26 points held jointly by Duke's Wray Carlton and Virginia's Jim Bakhtiar.

Christy leads the scoring parade with 83 points. Carlton is second with 71. Both have completed their seasons. Bakhtiar is third with 43.

AIDS TAR HEEL CAUSE—Carolina center Ron Koes was one of the standouts in the Tar Heel's 21-13 victory over Duke Saturday. Koes shared the pivot duties with another Tar Heel star, Jim Jones and the two were instrumental in the victory.

Tar Babies Play Thursday

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina and Duke Freshman football teams head-on in the annual Cereberal Palsy Benefit Game here on Thanksgiving Day, with the action in Kenan at 2:00 p. m.

Carolina's Tar Babies have a 3-1 season record with wins over Maryland, Wake Forest, and Virginia. Their only loss came at the hands of the powerful State College Wolflets.

Duke's Blue Imps have and identical 3-1 season slate, their wins coming against South Carolina, Clemson, and Wake Forest. Their only setback was also against State, 34-14.

GOOD SHAPE

In the Physical Fitness department, the Tar Babies are pretty well set except at tackle. Left tackle Jim Shumate is out for the season with a bad back and right tackle Bill Crabtree is on the doubtful list with a bad ankle sustained in the Virginia game. Other than that, everyone is in good shape and ready to go.

Freshman Coach Bud Carson said yesterday that "The boys have looked much sharper in practices than everbefore. The loss of our two first line tackles will hurt us but I think it will be a good game. I am sure that it will take our best effort of the year to beat Duke.

Varsity-Frosh Swim

There will be a Varsity-Freshman swimming meet today in the indoor pool at 4 o'clock. Freshman coach Buddy Baarcke predicts an outstanding frosh squad. All students are invited and a full slate of events will be run.

MURALS TODAY

It's All Over Now, But What A Time The Fans Had Watching It

By ED ROWLAND

DURHAM, Nov. 25—The scene of the battle was desolate today, but the scars remained.

The turf in the center of Duke Stadium was torn and muddy where the Tar Heels and the Blue Devils had charged up and down Saturday.

Water filled the concrete holes at each end of the field where once steel goal posts stood.

A shoe lay on its side on the muddy track circling the field. But Saturday—it was a different story.

The Duke marching band opened the official activities with a colorful show of marching and fireworks at 1:30 p. m. The Duke stands roar drowned out feeble Carolina attempts to get attention.

At 2 p. m. the teams came on the field, television spectators could see, and the game got under way.

For half an hour or more Duke had its day, and the east stands only mumbled and took another drink.

The Duke Blue Devil silently taunted Carolina fans by standing atop the guest boxes behind and to the left of them. Duke cheerleaders and supporters came by tossing oranges labeled "Have a big orange; courtesy of the town Men's Club."

Then the Tar Heels began their comeback and the fans began to come alive.

THINGS LOOKED BETTER

By halftime everyone was feeling better, so the Carolina band put on a slightly wet, though good, show. Rameses was taken on a trip around the field by Amy Morse and glowered at the Duke fans. Not long thereafter the Blue Devil was forced to climb on the goal posts to escape Rameses.

When the second half began things looked better. Carolina received and it wasn't long before they were out in front to stay. When the 14th point was booted true by Phil Blazer, all heck broke loose on the Carolina sides. The TV cameramen even noticed the commotion and trained their lenses across the field.

Students yelled and cheered, then asked their buddy in the next seat, "Is it really true?"

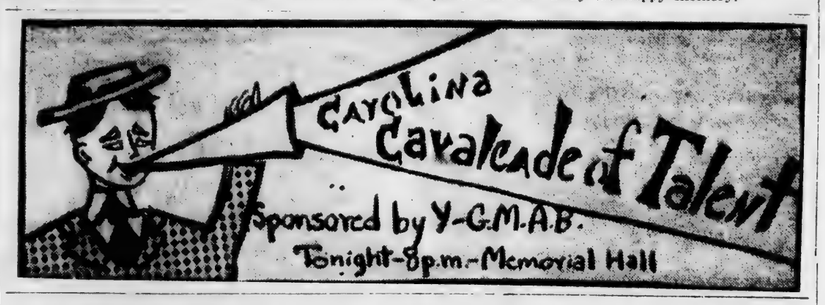
It was, and the Tar Heels made another touchdown to prove it.

VICTORY WAS NEAR

Then into the final period and the spectators marked time. Duke cheerleaders could not get a peep out their fans. The helium-filled balloons were released for no reason.

When the final gun sounded hundreds of Carolina fans jumped over the concrete wall onto the field to greet the team. A great mob converged in the center of the field surrounding the players.

Some students got the victory bell and carried it across the field, ringing the glad tidings for all to hear.



Two dozen or so students attacked each goal post, and in five minutes they were on the ground, broken into carry-size pieces.

Tatum was hoisted to someone's shoulders and greeted Murray that way. Cheerleaders whooped and hollered and hugged and laughed.

For an hour after the game people milled around the stadium, looking for companions, cars and belongings.

Today the small scavengers found a few of those lost belongings. And the rain poured down, washing away all the physical evidence of the terrific game.

But the rain can never wash away the happy memory.

Ever meet a fanatic?

He's got just one thing uppermost in his mind. If he's looking for a job he's thinking only of pay or only of security. Reasonable men, however, weigh these and many other factors when they're evaluating career possibilities. Such factors as opportunity, challenging work, training, professional associates—things fanatics never bother to consider.

The Bell Telephone Companies have a booklet for reasonable men. It's called "Challenge and Opportunity." It's not the sort of thing that'll make a fanatic's eyes light up, but it ought to interest a thoughtful young man—whatever his college background—who is weighing career possibilities. Atomic Power

SHIPPINGPORT, PA., Dec. 2—(AP)— Scientists today fired up the huge atomic furnace at the nation's first full-scale civilian nuclear power station—15 years to the day since man achieved a chain reaction in the world's pioneer reactor.

Initial splitting of uranium atoms at the historic Shippingport plant marked the final major step before production of commercial quantities of electricity.

When nuclear-generated electricity begins flowing to homes shops and factories in the Pittsburgh area, it will represent the longest forward stride yet in America's peace-time atomic energy program.

Space Ship

NEW YORK, Dec. 2 —(AP)— The nation's first manned space ship could be blasting off within five years, a U. S. missile scientist said today.

He listed this technically possible timetable for space accomplishments:

A manned space station in 6-7 years.

First flight around the moon in 8-10 years.

"Technically we are capable of having manned orbital gliders in five years."

Ike Golfs

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2 —(AP) —President Eisenhower presided for an hour and 40 minutes over a full Cabinet meeting today and later spent 15 minutes hitting golf balls from a back terrace of the White House. White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said the President also "hopes and expects" to attend the opening of a briefing of congressional leaders tomorrow.

Hagerty did not disclose the golf shooting until after photographers outside the White House fence spotted an attendant tossing golf balls back to an unseen golfer.

'Unholy Alliance'

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 2 —(AP)— Saudi Arabia accused Fsance and Britain today of entering into an "unholy alliance" aimed at preventing effective U.N. action on both Algeria and Cyprus.

British Official Visits Campus

An official of the British government was on campus this past weekend and yesterday to study certain phases of the University.

The British government hopes to get ideas that might be included in college and universities it has already established or is planning to set up in its colonies or former colonies.

The official from England, Ian Maxwell, was rounding up a three month visit to colleges and universities in this region when he came to Chapel Hill last Friday.

Maxwell was especially interested in the University's extension division, communications center, Journalism School and the Institute of Government.

Maxwell's official title is assistant secretary to the Inter-University Council for Higher Education Overseas.

This council is concerned with the development of British overseas education and especially with development and growth in colonies and former colonial territories.

'Judith' by Giradoux Will Open Saturday

The Petites Dramatiques production or Judith—starring Carolyn Marsh, Leon Rooke, Harry Moore, Anthony Wolff and Ann Bachman—will be presented in Graham Memorial main lounge this Saturday and Sunday at 8 p.m.

Judith, by Jean Giradoux, will be the initial production of this year's program of Petites Dramatiques.

Directing this play will be Nancy Green, graduate English student from Winston-Salem. Miss Green, a former Playmaker, has acted with the Barter Theater, Circle Theater, Little Theater of the Rockies, in "Unto These Hills," and "Horn in the West," in addition to her off-Broadway work.

This play, taken from the Book of Judith in the Apocrypha, is the story if a young girl chosen according to a prophecy to save Israel from the Assyrian invasion. Through her sacrifice she discovers herself and through this learns a new way of life.

Carolyn Marsh of Memphis, Tenn., a graduate student in English, will portray the title role. In the past Miss Marsh has played Salome in "Salome," Elmire in "Tartuffe," and earlier this season she played Yolande in "The Lark." She has also modeled and has done television work.

Leon Rooke will play Joachim, the Grand Rabbi of Israel, who sends Judith out on her mission to the enemy. Rooke has recently won the Frederick Koch Playwriting Award and the Betty Smith Playwriting Award. Last year his play, "The Thief and the Hunchback" was presented by the Playmakers. Rooke began his acting career at Carolina with the role of Helicon in last year's "Caligula."

Playing Holofernes will be Harry Moore, graduate art student. He has worked previously on "Medea," "Joan of Lorraine" and "Murder in the Cathedral." Moore recently won the first prize at the 1957 State Art Fair for sculpture.

Anthony Wolff, sophomore from New York City, will play the part of John, the faithful suitor of Judith, and the role of Susanna, the courtesan, will be portrayed by Anne Bachman of Baltimore, Md.

Betty Rhodes, dramatic arts major, will be Sarah, the proud procuress who knows no allegiance. Frank Clymer, will play Joseph, Judith's shrewd but loving uncle.

James Tyndall will portray Egon, the mannered lieutenant of Holofernes, Larry Anderson will be the Cantor, and Hal Williamson will act the drunken guard.

Others in the play are Gail Rice as Daria, the mute, Michael Okun as Little Jacob, William Ridenhour as the servant, Curtis Gans as the Prophet, Lewis Hardee and John Hodgkins as the Courtiers of Holofernes.

Producer Seamon Gottlieb, Chairman of the Foreign Film and Drama Committee of GMAB has announced there will be no admission charged. Students, faculty, and townspeople are all invited, according to Gottlieb.

Rocket Trouble

MISSILE TEST CENTER, CAPE Canaveral, Fla., Dec. 2 —(AP)— Trouble was reported to have developed today in the second stage brain" of the Vanguard rocket being readied for an attempt to propel an American baby moon into space.

An informed U. S. Navy source said technicians are working around the clock to clear the bugs out of the second stage which houses the control and guidance systems of the 72-foot rocket. This stage has not been tested previously.

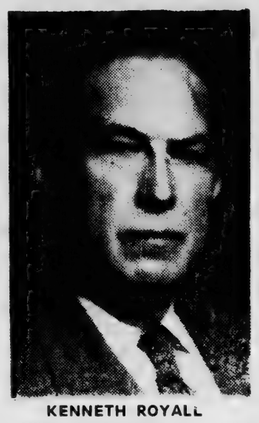
History Professor Hurt In Accident

A bicycle-riding UNC instructor was in "fair condition" today after a collision Friday with a car operated by a Duke University Law School student.

Dr. Richard B. Barlow of the UNC History Department was admitted to Memorial Hospital about 10 p.m. Friday with a fractured knee, fractured skull, contusions and bruises.

At the time of the accident, Dr. Barlow was riding his bicycle on Cameron Avenue near the Carolina Inn. According to Dr. Barlow, the car containing four Duke students swerved into the path of his bicycle. The car struck Dr. Barlow, knocked him to the street, and completely demolished the bicycle.



Although he will be forced to wear a cast on the fractured knee for eight weeks, Dr. Barlow has said that there is a possibility that he will be able to meet his classes within several weeks.

The police who have investigated the accident have stated that the fault of the accident appears to be that of the driver of the car involved.

When the collision occurred, Dr. Barlow was returning home after having been to the movies.

Although there have been rumors that several UNC students were involved in automobile accidents over the Thanksgiving holidays, there has been no offical confirmation of this.

Inquiries made at the offices of Student Affairs and at the Infirmary have yielded no information concerning any accidents involving students this past week end.

KENNETH ROYALL

N.Y. Doesn't Offer Only Opportunities

By ED ROWLAND

Former Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall told UNC law students last night to "work hard, and if you do, luck is very liable to hit you in the face."

Mr. Royall spoke at Manning Hall in the third of the Heck Lecture Series sponsored by the Law Students Association.

A Goldsboro native, Mr. Royall compared law practice in small towns with practice in New York. He is a senior partner in the New York and Washington firm of Dwight, Royall, Harris, Koegel and Caskey.

"Practice in one of the large New York firms is very enticing to a young lawyer, as it should be," Royall said. "There is the real big-time in law practice, and the keen competition is thrilling."

But in telling why he turned down offers in New York in favor of private practice in Goldsboro after graduation from the Harvard Law School in 1917 he said, "There I was in closer contact with the law. I was my own boss, independent, and had a variety of work."

Royall, who gained national fame in 1942 when President Roosevelt appointed him chief counsel for the defense of nine German saboteurs who entered this country by submarine, said New York practice invariably forces a man into a niche where he will remain until e hleaves the firm. "This is not what a young lawyer needs," he declared.

"In North Carolina a lawyer automatically is somebody and is a part of a growing community. This same feeling of belonging is very difficult to duplicate in New York," he said.

Royal listed the starting salaries of New York lawyers as between $4500 and $6500, depending upon qualifications.

Graduates from Harvard, Yale and Columbia law schools are in positions to get the best jobs, he said, because they have a good reputation, both with the firms and with the clients. But many other factors, such as grades, military status, manner, personality and recommendations enter into the hiring decisions.

After two years on the firm a lawyer is on his own as far as advancement is concerned. If he advances normally he will become a junior partner after 10 to 12 years with a salary of about $15,000.

Royall emphasized to the audience that all lawyers need trial experience. "I will almost go so far as to declare," he said, "that a lawyer who cannot try cases in court is no lawyer at all."

Royall, the last Secretary of War and the first Secretary of the Army, said he was extremely luck to step into a New York firm at the top in 1949. "But unless some miracle like that happens. I would advise those just starting out to weigh the advantages on both sides, make a decision, and stick to it," he said.

He concluded by advising: "Take every case you can in the beginning and win 'em all. By determination and hard work you can win many more cases than you should."

UP Sets Meet Tonight At 7

The University Party will meet at 7 p. m. today in the Roland Parker Lounges of GM, according to UP Chairman Harry Braxton.

The meeting is being held to elect new party officers, according to Braxton. Positions to be filled include those of chairman, vice chairman, secretary and treasurer.

New officers will be installed tonight and will serve during spring elections.

Schooner

MOREHEAD, N. C., Dec. 2 —(AP)— Five men and two women whose pleasure cruise turned into a nightmare because of a storm pondered today whether to continue on to Florida.

The Coast Guard cutter Chilula towed a Pennsylvanian and six New Jersey residents and their disabled 66-foot schooner Yankee Girl 11 100 miles into this port late last night.

That ended a two-day ordeal for the party which had set out from Atlantic Highlands, N. J., a week ago on a trouble-plagued trip to Palm Beach, Fla.

Student Party Plans Elections

The Student Party will hold its semi-annual elections next Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Roland Parker Lounges of Graham Memorial, according to the party by-laws, elections must be held after each campus election. The postponement was due to the special election last week.

All offices with the exception of treasurer will come up for consideration at this time. The party by-laws call for the election of the treasurer immediately before campus elections in order that financial continuity may be maintained. Also on the agenda is the filling of legislature vacancies.

Maneuvers

FORT BRAGG, N. C., Dec. 2 —(AP)— A big, two-week maneuver known as Exercise All-American starts here tomorrow.

Four Army units from Georgia and Kentucky, totaling close to 1,500 men and officers, will join a team from Kansas in staging mock warfare with Bragg forces.

IVA KITCHELL

Iva Kitchell Show Here Tonight

World famous dance-satirist and comedienne, Iva Kitchell, will appear in Chapel Hill today at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall under auspices of the UNC Student Entertainment Series.

Miss Kitchell, known as "Impish Iva," has packed theatres in the United States, Canada and South America. She is known for her one-woman shows that sparkle with brilliant dancing and imitations of people who take themselves too seriously.

While dancing with the Chicago Opera Ballet some years ago, it occured to Miss Kitchell that serious modern dancing is sometimes ridiculous. When she mimicked her ballet master during a rehearsal, instead of scolding her, he gave her a comedy solo spot in the ballet.

Since that time Kansas-born Iva has entertained audiences with her impersonations of all sorts of people seen at parties, in shops or on trains, as well as star figures of the theatre and the concert stage.

Phi Society To Meet Tonight

The Philanthropic Literary Society will meet at 8 p.m. today on the top floor of New East. The subject of discussion will be a bill advocating a "socialistic government for the United States."

The bill states, in part, that a "socialistic is the ideal form of government; and for many years there has been a growing tendency to socialize the government of the United States."

The bill asks that a socialistic government be established for the United States of America by Jan. 1, 1960."

The public has been invited to attend the meeting.

Business Seminar

R. E. Davis of Akron, Ohio, will address the UNC Economics and Business Seminar ta 4 p.m. today in Caroll Hall. He will discuss the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company's program of business research.

Di Will Debate On SSL Tonight

The Dialectic Senate will hold its weekly meeting tonight in the fourth floor of New West.

The bill of the evening is commendation of the State Student Legislature and a recommendation that in the future delegates be elected by popular campus-wide voting.

The public has been invited.

Travel Lecture Slated Tonight

Miss Carrie Smeltzer, Assistant Director of Educational Travel Inc., will deliver a lecture at Carroll Hall today at 7 p. m.

Immediately following her short lecture on foreign travel and study abroad, two movies will be shown and the speaker will entertain questions.

According to Miss Smeltzer, many tours are offered by Educational Travel at prices below regular commerical plans. This is made possible by the low overhead and the small amount of paid publicity.

The organization is operated primarily as a service and not for profit, and is a subsidiary of the National Student Assn.

Miss Smeltzer is sponsored by the local NSA Committee. Students interested in foreign travel have been invited to attend.

WINS UNC AWARD—Wilson Burton Partin Jr., center, student from Scotland Neck, has won the annual Student Government Scholarship Award, given to the self-help student maintaining the highest average during the freshman year. Step Forward In Journalism Is Aim Of Campus Paper

Today's publication of The Daily Tar Heel marks a new era in newspaper history at the University of North Carolina—an era which, we hope, will long be remembered as a step forward in campus journalism.

We stepped into the race for editor because we felt—like many other students at UNC—that broad improvements could be made on The Daily Tar Heel. Now that race has been won, and we shall strive endlessly to achieve the task before us.

Over two years ago, when we were cutting teeth on our own hometown newspaper, we learned early that a publication must seek to better the community in which it is printed. At times it is controversial; at times it is not. But always it must be aimed at the betterment of the society wherein it exists.

To that end we have pledged ourselves for the forthcoming months. It is a goal made even more worthy of achievement by the magnitude of impending challenges and countless tasks to be met in a period of crisis and change at the University of North Carolina.

It also is a period wherein the future of our state and our nation is being moulded, a time of scientific development and social revolution in the four corners of the world. Legion are the problms confronting man today.

You, the students, recognizing the role which students and their newspaper must play in this challenge, have chosen us for a post among the most responsible on the University campus. It shall be our unending effort to succeed well in that office.

In our approach to the numerous challenges, we shall, at times, disagree with those who chose us editor of The Daily Tar Heel. Other times we will hold similar opinions about problems which confront us as students and as individuals.

But regardless of differences of opinion and opposing approaches to our common problems, it should be our mutual aim to provide solutions to those problems, that our answers will work for the benefit of the masses through the efforts of all.

We must, therefore, look to the future with wisdom. And in so doing we not only request, but urge student expression on the issues which we, as your newspaper editor, will comment in the forthcoming months. We have been charged with a high office on The Daily Tar Heel: the publication still belongs to you.

Only though responsible administration should the newspaper be allowed to remain in the hands of university students. It is that challenge which we have accepted; may God help us to achieve it.

Patience Is Asked While Daily Tar Heel Revamps

With a new editor-in-chief in the offices of the Daily Tar Heel, some time will be needed for establishment of a better campus newspaper.

Running a newspaper is a difficult task which demands much on the part of staff members and business personnel. It is a task which must be performed well, day-in and day-out, if the product is to be a good one.

For that reason we will spend much of the next several days in the assignment of news "beats" and editorial column space to persons who will do a good job for The Daily Tar Heel.

As we said throughout our campaign, there will be no wholesale housecleaning of staff members and other personnel in our Graham Memorial offices. No one has been "fired," although some have resigned.

Our sole purpose as editor of The Daily Tar Heel is to produce a better newspaper. Improvement will take time, and we ask your indulgnce during that period.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Sunday, Monday and examination and vacation periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill N. C., under the Act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: mailed, $4 per year $2.50 a semester; delivered, $6 a year $3.50 a semester.

Safety Devices Could Decrease Big Death Toll

The time has come for American automobile producers to pay more attention to safety precautions and accident-preventative devices than to hopped-up motors and bigger speedometers.

Witness to that fact lies in the grim report of traffic accidents occuring over the Thanksgiving holidays: at least 507 killed between 6 p.m. Wednesday and midnight Sunday.

The toll shattered National Safety Council predictions for fewer traffic fatalities over the weekend, and jumped way ahead of the number counted dead during Labor Day and Fourth of July holidays.

We don't discount the role of alcohol and irresponsible driving habits in the total death count; but we do feel that improved safety devices would contribute immeasurably to safer driving on our highways.

A second factor for consideration in the total death count lies in the nation's highways themselves — links between our cities whose improvements have fallen far behind the stepped-up traffic volume which they carry.

In some cases, one-time modern expressways have become little more than secondary roads handling more traffic today than when they were cut through the hills and vallevs of our nation.

Fortunately, we have come to recognize this problem of depreciating highways and the federal government has begun a broad program of inter-state systems to handle our traffic volume of the future.

But when that program is completed, it then will be time again for further construction and increased expenditures to keep pace with production of automobiles and commercial vehicles.

SIMON'S WORLD:

Jazz, Popular Singers Have Record Boom

The current boom in record sales has sponsored a recurrence of the popularity of the singer—jazz and popular. Among the singers to reach the heights of popularity have been Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzerald, Johnny Mathis, and Anita O'Day. Not all have been good, however; there are a great many mediocre singers around, and a great many of them have albums released. It seems worthwhile to examine a few of the latest vocal recordings with the hopes of discovering the relative merits of these singers.

The latest release of the ever-popular Nat "King" Cole on Capitol records—"Just One of Those Things"—is perhaps one of the best things this durable favorite has ever done. It's theme is songs of broken love with a swinging beat, and the master does well with all. Most enjoyable for this reviewer are "When Your Lover Has Gone" and "A Cottage For Sale," two bouncing renditions of long-time favorites. The backing is by a swinging Billy May band, and it is continually amazing how these two men work together.

Ella does not fare as well with her latest, a Verve release called "Like Someone In Love." The backing is by a medium sized string group plus the always tasty tenor of Stan Getz, and it only proves the point that Ella sounds better with a trio than a large orchestra. The pre-release ads claim that "anyone who is in love, is about to fall in love, or has ever been in love" is going to love this record, a statement which I found entirely false. There are at least seventeen tunes on the disk, all of them good ones, but somehow the seemingly unbeatable combination of Ella, Getz, and good music just doesn't come off. Let's hope Mr. Granz can do better by Ella next time.

The Voice — Mr. Sinatra of course—is at his lyrical best on a collection of lonely-lover ballads called "Where Are You?" Instead of the usual Nelson Riddle backing we're given Gordon Jenkins and, although at times he gets a little over-stringy, the combination is a good one. "I Think of You," a beauty of a tune—no wonder it was stolen from Rachmaninoff's First Piano Concerto—is the real gas of the album, but Frankie does well with such standards as "There's No You" and "I Cover the Waterfront."

Perhaps the most over-looked record of the year is a Columbia release by Tony Bennet titled simply "Tony." Mr. Bennett has never been known as either a jazz singer or a particularly good singer; this time, however, he fills all the requirements and fills them admirably. The big surprise of the disk is an almost forgotten Kurt Weill tune called "Lost In the Stars." Bennett does it with the simple backing of a guitar and the Percy Faith chorus, and succeeds in producing a truly deep emotional experience. If you don't like the sound of a slightly strained voice I wouldn't recommend this record, but if you like your music emotional and exciting, this is it.

"How Did You Say Their Election Came Out?"

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

America: Pacifist Nation Where Education Is The Latest Extreme

By CURTIS GANS

Americans have been in the habit of going to extremes. In this lies a great danger.

Americans have been fiercely pacifist prior to wars, and have led the country almost to lose its honor among nations. Then, Americans have turned rabidly pro-war and proceeded to put out several effective fighting forces. After the war, Americans have been again violently pacifist, and the cry "bring the boys home," has wrought no little havoc with national security.

Americans again have a chance to go from one extreme to another, and the latest policy pronouncements from Washington indicate that this is just what the nation will do.

The extreme lies in the field of education.

For years now the scientist in America has been pictured as a freak of nature. He has been looked at in terms of ivory towers, white coat, and vertical intellectual development. He has been sort of a god—far off and austere. There have not been many who have tried to emulate this ideal.

With the successful firing of Sputnik and Muttnik, American leaders have realized the need for developing the scientific manpower resources of the nation in order that the U. S. may defeat the Russian challenge.

The need is there, and the need must be met. However, there remains the chance that the people of America will do a complete about face, and look with condescension on the liberal arts man or the business man.

There is also another danger inherent in the initial American effort to overhaul its etducational set-up. The U. S. is looking to Russia as one model for its educatin system, and has been talking in terms of aptitude tests for high school freshmen and channelling those with scientific fields. The danger here is that selecting the field of interest for anybody is anti-democratic.

The danger then is two-fold. Primary is the danger of running counter to the basic precepts of democracy, and secondary is the danger of breeding a vertical development in the realm of science and leaving the country barren of liberal arts and men who are going to guide, finance, and lead the national scientific endeavor.

The case of Robert Oppenheimer is an illustration of the type of vertical development involved. For what led to Dr. Oppenheimer's downfall in the world of science is his basic lack of knowledge of the realities of politics and the strategic necessities of the U. S.

Another illustration is the average American who looks with wonder at the atomic bomb and the guided missile and proceeds in his ignorance of matters scientific.

To project this into the future, if the American people become so science conscious that they lose sight of liberal arts, the U. S. will have irresponsible governmental officials, incapable teachers, and people who are unable to get along with one another.

Science is but one avenue to truth. There are others in the field of social science, mathematics, language, and many others. To be a citizen the scientist cannot forget the importance of these areas of thought, and must be versed in these other areas in order to avoid the vertical development that is inconsistent with responsible citizenship. At the same time the liberal arts man must have an awareness of what the scientist is doing in order that he can put scientific needs in the proper scope and proportion with the rest of society's had mankind's needs.

The U. S. must build up its scientific resources, not at the expense of other fields, but with the assistance of the others. It must be both a horizontal and vertical development. It is important that the scientist learn not only science but the other fields, and the liberal arts man not only liberal arts, but also science. Then and only then will a truly responsible community be developed.

There is a maxim in education that one should learn a little about everything, and a lot about something. This might be a good guide.

MOUTHS TO FEED:

Americans Feast; World Is Hungry

By FRANK CROWTHER

. . . and so we gathered round the tables last Thursday, gave thanks and filled our stomachs full of rich, nutritious foods. Many sat in harmonious groups afterward, picked their teeth and spouted platitudinous cliches of the wonders of America: Life, liberty and the persuit of the dollar . . . opportunity for all, two cars in every garage and "where, oh where, but in America?" There were even kindly thoughts that Santa Claus was just around the corner and that the great American tradition will triumph over all.

While we were stuffing, however, two thirds of the world spent another day of undernourishment. At the day's end, there ere 125,000 new mouths to feed in the world. By the year 2025, there will be a total of 13 billion mouths to feed. And in Russia, where they do not celebrate such a day, I suppose that there were several hundred men concentrating on intricate plans for bigger and better ICBM's. In America, everybody was burping and passing gas.

Our leaders in Washington, however, keep telling us that all will be well. They have known all along that the Russians were producing missiles and that, though we are slightly behind, the great American system would soon move itself and surge once again to the head of the track. In fact, they tell us that there were reports of the Russian's surprising advancements as early as 1953, and that, in 1955, they even tracked great numbers of them on our long-range radar installations on the border of Turkey. They knew this, they say, but decided that there was no need to tell the people. Of course not, let them wallow in their sweet little pools of plenty. Let them be entertained, but not informed. And, if we should have to inform them, let's hope they don't ask "why?"

We are, on the other hand, educating more people than any other country in history, are we not? But, comes the reply, look at these disturbing facts: only 49% of the high schools in the U.S. teach any Physics; of our graduating high school students, only 5% have had Physics, 7% have had Chemistry, 13% have had Geometry, and 16% have had Algebra; of the 1,500,000 graduating high school students in Russia, EVERY SINGLE ONE has had 5 years of Physics, 5 years of Chemistry, 5 years of higher math, 5 years of English, 10 years of Russian, and 10 years of History. A blind man can see that we are behind in the Sciences.

Our professional educators point out, quickly, that we have placed more emphasis in this country on the Humanities. This is reassuring to me, especially since I have decided to major in humanities. But, again, I look around at my fellow classmates and find this hard to believe. We are not even learning the humanities well. There are exceptions, granted, but what of the average, mass-produced student? What are his interests? What does the "Great American Experiment" mean to him? Apparently, not very much.

The creative and imaginative students are few and far between. This inner-directed handful in our youth is seemingly ostricized from the onset. It appears to be disrespectful to have a penetrating, questioning mind. The worst sin of all is asking a troublesome question which requires considerable thought. Don't try to encompass too much, we are told; find your proper field and plunge into it. So we have developed what Ortega Y. Gasset called "barbarians of specialization." Men of action, they call for, not those of thought or feeling. We have developed a country which is overly concerned with pragma and rarely with theoria.

It reminds me somewhat of Saint-Exuperey's Little Prince who, when he visited the fourth planet, came upon a businessman who was busy counting the stars which he claimed belonged to him:

"And what do you do with them?" (said the little prince).

"I administer them," replied the businessman. "I count them and recount them. It is difficult. But I am a man who is naturally interested in matters of consequence."

The little prince, however, argued for his own interpretation of matters of consequence:

"I myself own a flower which I water every day. I own three volcanoes which I clean out every week (for I also clean out the one which is extinct; one never knows). It is of some use to my volcanoes, and it is of some use to my flower, that I own them. But you are of no use to the stars . . ."

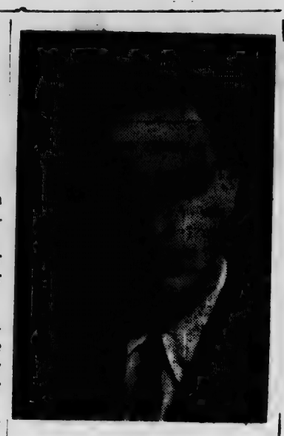
The businessman's mouth dropped open and he had nothing to answer. As the little prince left, he said, "The grown-ups are certainly altogether extraordinary."

Yes, grown-ups assuredly are extraordinary. They are necessarily concerned with their matters of consequence: Mickey Mantle's batting average, the number of crows in Marked Tree, Arkansas, who's who in Who's Who, how much money their neighbor has . . . the old weakness of being well-informed with non-functional facts. These are matters of consequence . . . which will eventually blow away like a puff of smoke.

And so this is what has come of the "Great American Experiment." With potentially the greatest country in the world — not only in riches but in wealth of achievement, unabused freedom and honest communion of human beings — we find America now setting out to "get what is coming to us." How long will it take for the dollar sign to replace the cross? We have progressed from the "free-holders" of 1789 to the "free-loaders" of 1957.

AFA Applications Being Accepted

Applications are now being accepted for nomination to the cadet class which will enter the U. S. Air Force Academy on June 27, 1958, according to Capt. Thomas R. Humphrey, Liason Officer for the Academy.



A total of ten vacancies is to be filled by North Carolina residents. To be eligible for nomination, applicants must be male citizens of the United States, between five feet four inches and six feet four inches tall, between 17 and 22 years of age, and must never have been married.

All candidates must pass the Air Force Medical Examination for flying training.

Persons interested in making applicantion to the Academy have been asked to see Capt. Humphrey in the AFROTC annex for further information.

JERRY OPPENHEIMER

Symposium Program Committee Begins Working Toward Week-Long Event Scheduled In March

By DAVIS YOUNG

The program committee for the 1958 Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs has gone into full swing under the chairmanship of Jerry Oppenheimer.

It is in charge of establishing the program and of securing speakers for the week-long event to be held in late March.

The purpose of the Symposium is "to bring together . . . outstanding minds speaking in open forum on critical problems of our times."

This year's program as outlined in the pre-Symposium brochure published by the Executive Committee will be based upon "The Dimensions of Survival." It will be divided into three sub headings, namely: physical survival, our immediate problem; cultural survival, a long range view and American values in this crisis and the fate of our traditions.

Sonny Hallford, chairman of the General Symposium, stated last week in the brochure: "In the course of Symposium week in March a great variety of distinguished speakers will come to the University campus for seminars, classroom discussions and formal addresses. We expect broad participation . . . in what we hope will be a most stimulating series of experiences."

Oppenheimer gave the following statement to the The Daily Tar Heel yesterday afternoon: "We feel of all the many topics that could be discussed, this is the most timely and significant. It confronts not only we here at Carolina, but the state and the nation."

"We hope to have speakers comparable to those oft he 1956 Symposium. Their names will be released in the near future." Some of the speakers in '56 included: Dr. Ralph Bunche, General Carlos A. McKnight.

Oppenheimer has been active on the Carolina campus throughout his stay here and is a member of the Order of the Golden Fleece, Order of the Grail and Order of the Old Well. Beside his Symposium job, he has served as chairman of orientation, president of his fraternity and chairman of the Interfraternity Court.

A Good Season Despite Loss To Virginia

That shadow which just whizzed past was Carolina football 1957. It's all over now and, all things considered, it was a good year for the Tar Heels, much better than had been predicted.

The season ended on a sour note with the loss to Virginia Saturday but nothing can detract from the sensation of beating our Durham neighbors two weeks ago. Lot's of people think that the win over Duke killed the Tar Heels for Virginia. We can't quite go along with that conjecture.

The Cavaliers were just as "up" for the Carolina game as the Tar Heels were for Duke. Coach Ben Martin's group simply didn't make any mistakes and therein, we believe, lies the answer to the question, what happened to the Tar Heels?

Nobody who watched the contest can honestly say that the Cavaliers didn't deserve to win it. Carolina is always the big game for Virginia and the Cavaliers utilized their every resource to stop the Tar Heels. Add to this the fact that their brilliant fullback Jim Bakhtiar watched from the sidelines and you have the ingredients that blended together to give the Cavaliers the incentive to go out and salvage a little something from this season. (their final record was 3-6-1).

Costly to the Tar Heels was a total of 84 yards in penalties and three fumbles which the Virginians grabbed. The Tatummen made mistakes and the Cavaliers capitalized on them.

Still a 6-4 season is nothing to be ashamed of—especially from a team which, before the season, would be fortunate to break even.

In some respects, it was an odd season. For instance, the Tar Heels lost every game in which they were favored, except Wake Forest, and won everytime they were given the underdog label. The Tar Heels were rough on the oddsmakers, that's for sure.

Final Roster Minus Five Players

The roster was minus five players by season's end, two by injury and three by suspension. Quarterback Curt Hathaway broke his arm in the eighth game and Jack Lineberger, a guard, went out in the sixth with a neck injury. Dave Reed, Leo Russavage and Bernie Donitelli were suspended before the Wake Forest game for breaking training rules.

As always, the season had its outstanding newcomers. Sophomore signal-caller Jack Cummings was the most prominent of this group. Cummings took over in the Wake Forest game and handled the team like a veteran the rest of the way. Sophomore Ralph Steele also came on like a house afire. Steele wasn't even in the top 22 when the season started but worked his way up to a starting guard slot in the latter part of the season.

Converted quarterback Ron Marquette emerged as a fine offensive and defensive halfback in his senior year Of course the big man for the Tar Heels was captain and end Buddy Payne. Payne is a cinch to win All-Conference honors and has already been given some All-American recognition. The Norfolk, Va. senior must rate high among the nation's most improved ball players.

These, naturally, are only a few of the reasons for the Tar Heels' success in Jim Tatum's second year at his alma mater. The Tar Heels have played some very fine football this season, leaving the prospect for next season very bright.

A Few Memories Of The '57 Season

Our thoughts now turn to Carolina's national basketball champs but still fresh in our mind are some of the memories of the 1957 football season. Thinking back over the season we have decided to put together a few superlatives for some of the outstanding incidents during the year. Here is the way we remember the Tar Heel opponents.

Best blocking team: Tennessee . . . Best running team: Tennessee . . . Best passing team: Virginia . . . Best offensive team: Tennessee . . . Best defensive team: N.C. State.

Individual performers: Best backfield opponent: Bobby Gordon, Tennessee . . . Best line opponent: Ron Breedlove, Maryland . . . Best individual play: Ted Kershner's 81-yard TD run in Maryland's 21-7 win over Carolina.

And for the Tar Heels:

Best first half: against Miami . . . Best second half: against Duke . . . Best 60 minutes of play: against South Carolina . . . Biggest thrill of the season: Carolina students hauling the Victory Bell across Duke Stadium for the first time since 1949 . . . Biggest disappointment: The Tar Heel's 21-7 loss to Maryland.

Freshman Cagers Open Season Tonight

Perform In High Point At 8 P.M.

By DAVE WIBLE

The 1957 edition of Carolina's freshman basketball will make it's debut tonight when it travels to High Point to play the High Point College —Jayvees at 8 o'clock.

This year the Tar Babies are coached by a former member of the Carolina varsity, Ken Rosemond. Coach Rosemond was a valuable reserve on last year's National champions and is now doing graduate work here.

Top Prospects

Compared to the 14 freshmen on scholarship at State, Frank McGuire and his recruiters went after quality instead of quantity this season awarding scholarships to only three players, Doug Moe, Hugh Donohue, and Larry Brown.

Injury depleted this number to two when Brown suffered a broken bone in his hand several weeks ago. He will be out of action until after Christmas.

Starting Five

Donohue is the squad's only big man, standing 6-8 and weighing in at 220. A New York City boy, he made the All-Catholic team while in high school, and played on the All-Star Catholic touring team.

Moe is the squad's number one forward. He is 6-5 and weighs 200. From Brooklyn, he was the outstanding player on the Bullis Prep school team which played the Tar Babies last year.

Rounding out the starting five, will be Pete Longenecker 6-4 forward from Sedgeley Farms, N. J.; Tam Shuford 6-2 guard from Salisbury, and Bill Hart a 6-0 guard from Henderson. Both Hart and Shuford were high school All-State last year.

Carolina fans will have their first chance to see the Tar Babies in action next Saturday afternoon when they meet Duke after the varsity game with Clemson.

UNC-Tigers Open TV Slate

An 11-game Atlantic Coast Conference basketball television schedule will start over WBTV Saturday, December 7 at 2:00 p. m.

Telecasts will originate from the campuses of ACC schools and all the games will be televised on Saturday afternoons through March 1. Tipoff time each week will be at 2:00 p. m.

There will be no telecasts on December 21 and 28 due to Christmas vacations at the colleges.

The UNC-Clemson encounter will mark the first time in the history of the ACC that a regular season basketball game has been televised on a regional basis.

Every team in the conference will participate in at least one televised game with the champion Tar Heels scheduled for tive appearances.

Maryland will play Navy on February 1 in the only non-conference affair.

Jimmy Simpson will describe the play-by-play action and Bill Creasy will handle the color commentary for the telecasts. The complete schedule is as follows:

Dec. 7—UNC vs. Clemson; 14—UNC vs. S. C. Jan. 4—S. C. vs. Va.; 11—Duke vs. N. C. State; 18—UNC vs. Clemson; 25—TBA (probably UNC game). Feb. 1—Navy vs. Maryland; 8—UNC vs. Duke; 15—N.C. State vs. Maryland; 22—S. C. vs. W. Forest. March 1—S. C. vs. Maryland; 8—ACC finals (tentative).

RAIN AND VIRGINIA

It Was A Long Afternoon!

By BILL KING

A lot of people reluctantly stayed away after it had rained all morning Saturday, but after it was over, they were glad they hadn't made the trip to Chapel Hill.

It was a miserable afternoon and Virginia was on hand to make it more devastating than old man weather possibly could.

Things looked fine for Carolina when the game started. The Cavaliers' tremendous weapon, Jim Bakhtiar wasn't in the starting lineup and there was a good chance he would make only a token appearance because of a back injury.

The first indication that the Virginians might provide formidable opposition came midway the first period when they got possession on their own eight. After a three yard gain, halfback Emo Randle passed to end David Graham at the Va. 35 and Graham ran beautifully, eluding Carolina tacklers, to the Tar Heel six. Only speedy Don Redding prevented his scoring when he hauled him down from behind.

Cavalier Tally

A two yard gain up the middle and a jump pass from quarterback Reece Whitley to end Fred Polzer gave Virginia six points. Bob Williams made it 7-0 with the point after.

This didn't bother the Carolina partisan much and four plays after the kickoff quarterback Jac Cummings hit end Mac Turlington on a play which covered 39 yards for a TD. But reliable Phil Blazer missed the point after for only the second time this year and the Tar Heels were down a point.

Much to the amazement of the 15,000 fans, however, the Cavaliers marched right back for another score and by the end of the first quarter were resting on the Carolina 29, close to a third scoring thrust. And six plays after the second quarter began, halfback Carl Moser went to his left from the six yard line and over for the score. Williams converted and Virginia had a 20-6 lead, the halftime margin.

During the intermission a tremendous wind came up and the temperature dropped quickly as the skies became very dark. A mass innoculation of alcholic stimulus and Tar Heel fans were ready to watch their club roar into high gear. The student section, far below its normal size, came alive and so did the Tar Heels, for a little while anyway.

Carolina Scores

The Tar Heels took the second half kickoff and powered their way forward 66 yards for a score. Daley Goff went three yards for the touchdown and Blazer's extra point try was good to make it 20-13, Virginia.

Tar Heel fans began resting easier after that. Sensing a Carolina rally, the flasks came and a new repetoire of Sputnik jokes made the rounds.

To make a long story short, Virginia didn't score again but neither did the Tar Heels and Jim Tatum's club left the field under the burden of its fourth loss of the year against six wins.

UNC Tops Statistics

Carolina had three passes intercepted Saturday and quarterback Reece Whitley was the villian everytime. Whitley played perhaps his finest game against the Tar Heels.

Carolina held the edge over the Cavaliers in every single statistical department, including fumbles and penalties. In total offense (ground and air) Carolina gathered 404 yards while the Cavaliers were getting 279.

Few fans left the game early since everybody felt that the Tar Heels would at least come back and tie the score. One the last play of the game, in fact, Jack Cummings fired a 44-yard pass to Buddy Payne which carried to the Virginia 22, but the clock ran out before the Tar Heels could get off another play.

Coach Jim Tatum was being philosophical about things after the game when he said that at least the loss cleared up any speculation about the Tar Heels getting a bowl bid.

'THE RIVALRY'—Martin Gabel and Agnes Moorehead present a scene from "The Rivalry" which will play here Friday night in Memorial Hall. Co-starring with them will be Raymond Massey. Tickets for the performance are available in the business office of the Carolina Playmakers—sponsors of the production—214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved.

By DAVE PETERSON

Martin Gabel, co-starred with Raymond Massey and Agnes Moorehead in the Paul Gregory production "The Rivalry" coming to Memorial Hall for one performance only, Friday, is the theatre's triple-threat man, having distinguished himself as an actor, director and producer.

What's more, he has been successful on the stage, in motion pictures, radio and television. Domestically he has done all right too, happily married to television's Arlene Francis.

In "The Rivalry" Gabel portrays fiery Stephen A. Douglas, who was a renowned Senator when challenged by the newcomer, Abraham Lincoln, in a series of debates, now famous as the Lincoln-Douglas debates on which "The Rivalry" is based. Miss Moorehead portrays his wife and advisor.

Gabel made his stage debut in 1933 in a one-line part in "Man Bites Dog." His work in radio soap opera introduced him to Arlene Francis.

As a producer with Jose Ferrer, Gabel brought to Broadway a revival of "Charley's Aunt." Recently he produced "The Hidden River" and "Reclining Figure." His plans for the future include the production of "Once More, With Feeling," the story of a symphony conductor by Abe Burrows and Harry Kurnitz, in which he intends to star Miss Francis.

As a director he has been applauded for Irwin Shaw's "The Assassin" and "The Survivors", which he also produced.

His most recent appearance on Broadway as an actor was in George Axelrod's "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter?" the comedy which introduced the world to Jayne Mansfield. In motion pictures he is currently seen in "A Tip on a Dead Jockey."

"The Rivalry" is making a cross-country tour prior to its Broadway opening on Jan. 27. Tickets for the performance are available in the business office of the Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved at $2.20, $3.30, and $4.40.

Maid Of Cotton Entry Deadline Is Extended

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 3—Deadline for entries in the 1958 Maid of Cotton contest will be extended until Dec. 6, the National Cotton Council announced today. All entries postmarked not later than midnight that day will be reconsidered.

The original deadline was set for Dec. 1. Requests from girls needing more time to have photographs made in order to meet the deadline prompted the extension, the Council reports. Two unretouched photographs, a portrait picture and a full-length pose must accompany the applications.

Complete details about the 1958 Maid of Cotton contest are available from the National Cotton Council, P. O. Box 9905, Memphis 12, Tenn. To be eligible, a girl must have been born in a cotton producing state and must never have been married. She must be at least five feet, five inches tall, and must be between the ages of 19 and 25.

Twenty girls, selected from the applications, will come to Memphis on Jan. 2-3 for two days of final judging. The 1958 Maid of Cotton will be chosen by a seven-member judging committee headed by Miss Gaile Dugas, nationally known newspaper woman.

The Cotton Belt beauty who wins the title will travel more than 50,000 miles on an international tour in 1958. She will visit more than 30 major cities in the United States, Canada, and Jamaica.

Permits For New Parking Lot Now Available To Students

Student car owners may now apply for permits to park in the new Bell Tower Parking Lot, according to an announcement by Ralph Cummings, chairman of the Traffic Advisory Board, and Sonny Evans, president of the student body.

During this week until Tuesday, Dec. 10, the Dean of Student Affairs office will receive applications to park in this lot. When all application are in, stickers will be given out. These special parking lot tickets will replace the regular parking permits isued at the beginning of the year.

However, since students with permits to the Bell Tower Parking Lot are assured of a place to park, these students will not be allowed to park in other student parking areas during the hours of 7 a.m. to 3 p. m.

It is expected that the parking lot located in Kenan Woods between the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower and N. C. Memorial Hospital—will be completed sometime this month.

The parking lot will have facilities to park 500 automobiles.

Cummings and Evans said that this new parking lot is the first step in a program designed to relieve the parking and traffic situation of the students at Carolina.

The Traffic Advisory Board is working to set up some priority plan for students to park in the new area.

Daily Tar Heel Staff To Meet This Afternoon

The news department of The Daily Tar Heel will meet this afternoon in the newspaper offices at Graham Memorial immediately following the general staff meeting at 4 o'clock.

All present news staff members, past workers and those interested in joining are urged to attend. Several important positions are open, according to Paul Rule, news editor.

New UP Officers Elected At Meeting In GM Last Night

New Plans To Simplify Admissions

Simplification of testing schedules in North Carolina high schools should result from the new entrance examination plan adopted by the Carolina, according to Ro Armstrong, director of admissions.

Under the new plan applants to the 1957-58 freshman class of the University will take the Scholastic Aptitude Tests prepared by the College Entrance Examination Board of Princeton, N. J. These tsts will University according to Ry Arm- Admissions Tests used previously.

"Since the Scholastic Aptitude Tests are acceptable for admission to any college or university, their use in North Carolina should lessen the testing burden on the high schools," Armstrong said.

Thirty-eight North Carolina cities have been designated as centers for the admissions testing, to be administered on Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 8, March 15, May 17 and Aug. 13.

Only four centers will offer the tests on all six dates; they are Asheville, Charlotte, Raleigh and Wilmington.

Armstrong reminded the high school students that they are resplication to take the Scholastic Aptitude Tests. Each applicant should to the College Entrance Examination Board, Box 592, Princeton, N. J.

Any North Carolina student who passes the tests and is admitted to the University will receive a $7 deduction when he registers for the first term, as a credit for the $7 fee charged for the Scholastic Aptitude Tests.

This credit will be given to entering freshmen at the University in Chapel Hill, Women's College in Greensboro, and State College in Raleigh.

The tests will be given on Dec. 7 and again on March 15 in 13 of the centers: Albemarle, Boone, Burnsville, Clinton, Franklin, Henderson, Hendersonville, High Point, Lumberton, Mount Airy, Roanoke Rapids, Siler City and Southern Pines.

Jan. 11 has been designated as the only test date for six cities: Elizabeth City, Hickory, Lexington, Murphy, Statesville and Windsor.

Other centers and dates for administering the tests are as follows: Chapel Hill, Jan. 11, Feb. 8, Mar. 15; Durham, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Mar. 15; Fayetteville, Jan. 11, May 17; Forest City and Rockingham, Dec. 7 and Aug. 13; Goldsboro, Jan. 11 and Mar. 15; Greensboro, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Mar. 15 and May 17; Greenville, Dec. 7, Mar. 15, and May 17; Jacksonville, May 17; Morehead City and Waynesville, Dec. 7; New Bern, Jan. 11, Mar. 15 and Aug. 13; North Wilkesboro and Rocky Mount, Jan. 11 and Aug. 12; and Winston-Salem, all dates except May 17.

Those students entering the University in January 1958 for the spring semester will take the admissions tests used previously, Armstrong added.

UP Elects Syd Shuford As Chairman; Lawing Is Chosen Vice-Chairman

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Sydney Shuford, a senior from Biltmore, was elected chairman of the University Party last night.

The UP voted to pay $75.02 for the material that was used in their campaign for Doug Eisele, UP-SP endorsed candidate in the recent recall election of The Daily Tar Heel editor.

Lawing, a sophomore from Marion, said, after being elected, "I will work as hard as I can to try to get the UP in there in the spring elections."

Jerry Jones (incumbent vice-chairman) was renominated but withdrew.

Saunders, a junior from Chapel Hill, commented, "I will continue to do my best to get the party really rolling."

In the race for treasurer Ed Levy (incumbent) was renominated but withdrew. Before withdrawing he told the party that its financial condition was "good."

He said that the party had more money this year than it had last year.

George Ragsdale asked the party to start looking and getting to know students to nominate for the spring elections.

He said that it had been a long time since the UP had won the position of Vice-President or President of the Student Body.

"I am fairly sure we have an individual who will be next Vice-President of the Student Body," he commented, however.

Speaking next, Shuford told the members that it was important for them to maintain interest in student government in their dorms, fraternities and sororities.

Urging the members to build up interest in the elections, he said it takes "a grass roots organization" to win.

Around 40 people attended the meeting.

The retiring officers are Harry Braxton, chairman; Jerry Jones, vice-chairman; and Ed Levy, treasurer.

"I would like to thank each and every member of the party for their wonderful cooperation during the last semester and especially during the fall elections," commented Braxton.

He went to say, "The UP is extremely lucky to have as its new chairman a man as fine as Syd Shuford.

"With his leadership and drive, the party should go far during the remainder of the year and should be victorious in the spring elections."

Symposium To Launch Drive To Obtain Funds

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Carolina Symposium funds have been swelling daily as contributions are now being received on a regular basis from many campus organizations.

To date, a total of $3500.81 is in the treasury. These contributions include a $2,000 grant from the student legislature, $500 from Graham Memorial, $75 from the Political Science Department through the Falk Foundation Grant and a sizeable donation from the Order of the Grail. In addition to this, all sororities on campus and four fraternities have contributed.

According to Al Goldsmith, Symposium treasurer, the anticipated total budget will be in the neighborhood of $5,000. It will go toward securing speakers, entertaining them and paying their traveling expenses to and from Chapel Hill.

In order to raise additional funds, the Symposium is now initiating a campus wide fund drive. During the next two weeks every fraternity and many other campus organizations will be visited by representatives of the Symposium.

Treasurer Goldsmith issued the following statement to The Daily Tar Heel from the Symposium office yesterday afternoon: "The program committee of the Symposium has planned an outstanding program and had drawn up a wonderful list of speakers.

"To make this program possible, it is necessary to receive the cooperation of every group on campus, especially in reaching our monetary quota. We hope that every fraternity and organization on campus will make at least a small donation to the Carolina Symposium."

Wage Demands

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 3. (AP)—Secretary of Labor Mitchell called on organized labor today to seriously consider a ban on 1959 wage increase demands.

President Eisenhower called on labor and management in his State of the Union message last January to exercise voluntary restraint in wage negotiations, Mitchell said, adding:

"If this is to meet the President's request of voluntary restraint it deserves deliberation and consideration."

Ike Wants Adlai

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3. (AP)—Adlai E. Stevenson said after a White House conference today that President Eisenhower wants him to attend the NATO summit conference in Paris Dec. 16.

The 1952 and 1956 Democratic presidential candidate said he probably will not make a decision for another week or 10 days, pending completion of his work with Secretary of State Dulles on preparations for the meeting.

Five Students Among Duplicate Bridge Winners

A bizarre but interesting run of hands provided many bidding and play problems in Monday night's duplicate game at Graham Memorial, and only five students were among the winners.

These were: John Gywnn and Bill Frye, second place, East-West; Dick Potthoff and Jap Memory, third place East-West. In the North - South direction, graduate student Bill Uzzle teamed with Economics professor, Dr. H. D. Wolf, and won fourth place.

Nine tables were in play.

Honor Council Issues Report On Violations

One case involving a violation of the Honor Code and 12 cases involving violations of the social rules were heard by the Women's Honor Council during the past two months, according to a report issued this week.

The Honor Code case involved a coed who allegedly lied before the Council in a previous trial. Her case was dismissed because of lack of evidence.

In its report, the Council expressed concern over the increased number of cases involving violations of social rules. The report said the Council heard twice as many such cases as were handled by the Council during a similar period at any time last year.

The Council said it felt a general lack of concern toward the social rules explain the increased cases, or the more numerous violations of social rules might be due to ignorance of the rules.

The twelve cases concerning social rule violations were as follows:

There cases for failure to sign out correctly for a weekend away from campus. Each coed involved received a one-night campus.

One case concerned a coed who was eight hours late. The student failed to speak to a member of the dormitory administration when she called the dorm to notify her house mother that she would return to campus a day later than she was expected. The coed received a three-nights campus.

A student who was ten hours late was given a three-nights campus because she failed to notify her dormitory in person of a change in the date expected to return.

Three coeds who were one hour late because of car trouble were excused by Women's Honor Council.

The Council excused one student who failed to return to the dorm on the day expected, since she contacted the dorm administration.

A four-nights campus and a Council reprimand were given to a coed who was two and onehalf minutes lates and had failed to sign the late-slip in her dorm until the next day.

The Council gave sentences of five-nights campus and reprimands to two coeds who were four minutes late and entered the dorm without being admitted by the dorm administration or without signing a late-slip until asked to do so.

Labor Should Weigh Proposal Of Union's Leader

It would be well for other union leaders to weigh the advice of Richard J. Gray, president of the AFL-CIO Building Trades Department.

Gray, speaking to delegates to the department's 50th anniversary convention in Atlantic City, N. J., called on 3 million construction workers not to ask for wage increases next year. This would, he said, be a major blow against inflation.

There is much wisdom in what the labor leader proposed—particularly when applied to manufacturing industries of the United States.

First, workers in manufacturing have hiked their average weekly earnings from $54.92 in 1949 to a record $74.78 last October, a figure recently released by the Labor Department.

And this $20 a week increase in average wages was realized despite a downward trend in the number of hours worked per week by employes in manufacturing industries.

Secondly, this country's "cost of living" index has been on a monthly increase for so long now that its continual climb is more the expected than the unusual when time comes to give the calendar another turn.

In fact, some people are saying that Sputnik had to reach far out into space to exceed the U. S. cost of living.

Our cost of living and our average earnings are inseparably related. Prices go up, and workers demand wage increases. Wage increases are granted, and prices again rise to cover the cost of production.

The construction industry has not escaped this leap-frogging. Only last summer hundreds of thousands of workers in the nation's cement industry went on strike for higher wages. An automatic hourly raise of 10 to 15 cents is scheduled for 1958.

Meanwhile, commercial, industrial and residential construction was slowed to a minimum. Work at some military installations was at a virtual standstill, and new streets and highways remained mud paths while empty train cars stood at cement production plants.

So now, a labor leader asserting that inflation is the nation's number one problem, has stood before the men whom he represents to unpopularly propose a slacking off in demands for increased hourly wages.

It was, indeed, a difficult proposal for a labor leader to make. Gray told the delegates they have a "grave responsibility to the American public," and that recognition is what makes the proposal admirable.

We hope it will be heard and discussed outside of Atlantic City.

THE DURHAM SUN:

If Anyone Can Help Little Kashmir, It's Dr. Graham

Dr. Frank P. Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, is going to try again to bring about a measure of friendship between India and Pakistan and to resolve the troublesome Kashmir problem. He has been selected by the United Nations as special envoy without specific instructions.

The United Nations has passed one resolution which proposed that Kashmir be cleared of Indian and Pakistani troops and be permitted to decide whether it wants to join India, unite with Pakistan or continue as an independent state. India, however, objects. Kashmir, it asserts, already is an Indian state and cannot be demilitarized until Pakistan's forces get out and stay out. Pakistan retorts that Kashmir was seized by India through force of arms and that Kashmir's people want to unite with Pakistan.

However, India is prepared, it states, to extend its "traditional hospitality" to Dr. Graham "or anyone" and Pakistan pledges its full cooperation to Dr. Graham, whom it "holds in high esteem."

It will not be an asy task. Indeed, Dr. Graham tried once before and the problem seemed and still seems well nigh insolvable; but, if any one can find an answer, it probably will be the persuasive Frank Graham.

Work Comes First, And Then Success

Though his address was directed to lawyers of the future, Former Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall drove home a point last night that speaks the truth for all business and professional workers in America.

"Work hard, and if you do, luck is very liable to hit you in the face," he declared in the third of the Heck Lecture Series at Manning Hall.

We agree that the trophies come after the hard work; but we're not so sure that luck must combine with labor to make the executive out of the plowboy.

Under our system—and heaven pray that it never changes—it is the person of sweat and toil who rises to the top of his industry—be it agriculture of manufacturing. And that is as it should be.

The time for Americans to start worrying is when the man who gives unselfishly of his time and efforts, and combines these with talents, remains at the bottom of the ladder. It's doubtful that this will ever happen.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

A Free Nation Where Sheriffs Ban Magazines

Gail Godwin

In my first moment of leisure over the holidays, I began rummaging through my father's magazine rack in search of the latest Playboy. There were the Mechanics Illustrated, Esquire, Gent, Nugget, and all the rest of Dad's favorites. But alas! The November Playboy was nowhere to be found.

"Daddy, where's this month's Playboy?"

A defeated looking magazine reader slumped into the den. His expression was one of stolid acceptance.

"It's been banned, dear. I'm going to have to subscribe to it now."

"Banned! Who banned it?"

"The sheriffs of this county. Said it was obscene," replied poor old Dad.

This is not a little piece of fiction written by your godmother to entertain you.

This is not an excerpt from a daily life scene behind the iron curtain.

This is not a personalized little history scrap from early colonial days when Cotton Mather preached against the "obscene" and when witches were burned to a crisp.

But a bunch of big brave locals wearing tin stars and cowboy boots have decided citizens need reading discipline.

It was bad enough when the Pope and the Cardinal told their church members they couldn't see "Baby Doll" and read Forever Amber.

Now the Sheriffs have become censors of literature.

The intention is well-meaning, but the results may be disastrous. When is the line drawn? Who decides just what is obscene?

Which is worse? A nice, spicy, magazine like Playboy, or a scandal sheet like Confidential? Which hurts more people? Yet Confidential still smiles at us from the stands. The sheriffs overlooked that one.

Americans are an individual lot. They don't like to be told what to read and what kind of pictures to look at and what to do for entertainment.

Bootlegging flourished under the eighteenth amendment.

I think I will set up a little organization which carries on the bootlegging of sheriff-suppressed periodicals.

Who knows? Pretty soon I might be bootlegging all the leading newsmagazines and ladies magazines. After all, I hear that in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING they have pictures of naked babies.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Carolina Is Dormant, But Deacs Full Of Life

Whit Whitfield

The people of the world have become immune at last to the trials and tribulations of the students of the University of North Carolina. No longer do the headlines burst forth with stories of the behavior of North Carolina's black sheep. The students ought to be concerned over this loss of prestige, at least moreso than they are.

Gone are the days when UNC was a hotbed of Communist activities, no longer do the newspapers call us radical integrationalists. We can't even support a decent "Ugly Club." Jim Tatum is firmly entrenched at the football helm, and a recall wouldn't even work the second time. We are fast running out of ideas.

But take Wake Forest, now that's the school with ideas and a flair for the dramatic. Carolina is a distant third with its recall, well behind Wake and Meredith and their dancing controversy. What could be more dramatic than burning in effigy the most prominent member of the Baptist Convention, dancing in the streets, and last but not least, staging a mass walkout. This is the real thing—the epitome of perfection in controversy.

After such initiative as this, on the part of the Wake Forest student body, UNC would have to purge the Board of Trustees, burn South Building, and sell the Sundial for scrap before it could even make the classified section of most papers. Further proof of Carolina's backward pace in headline grabbing is the fact that we had to share the SSL controversy with every other school in the state. This is indeed a sad state of affairs. The problem ougth to be brought before the Student Legislature for investigation. Something must be done immediately or we are doomed to oblivion.

We understand that the National Council of the American Association of Universities and Colleges is going to rate all schools on the basis of salaries paid to the teachers. The purpose of all this is to give the administrators who are concerned with pay standards some idea of where their particular schools rank. It is likely that they will be grouped as "A", "B"', "C", etc. This may prove embarrassing to some people in this area because there are only 26 letters in the alphabet, or at least that was the last official count. The council will either have to use another alphabet, invent another letter, or double them up as is done in Kenan Stadium. Regardless of which way they choose to do it, someone's face will be red.

Why Reaction To Baptists' Dance Bans?

EDITOR:

It is hard to understand why there should be so much reaction to the prohibition of dancing at Baptist-supported colleges.

After all, these are not state universities and colleges. These are schools maintained by a religious denomination and dedicated to instruct youth in the beliefs of the religious denominations. If they wished to teach dancing the authorities could do better by declaring their school public and turning it over to the state for use in the public school system.

If pupils at a religious school prefer dancing then they should seek to leave the school and matriculate at a state institution of higher learning. There they would find more student freedom and teacher freedom as well. This follows from definition of the two kinds of schools.

One should expect to sacrifice certain things by attending such a school. State institutions, however, have been established without special regard for any particular belief and therefore are more liberal in attitude; more progressive.

The writer is strongly reminded of a cartoon showing a small boy watching an outer-space TV show. The Martians had just captured an American space pilot. The boy's father put his paper down finally and told the boy:

"Well, why can't they take him prisoner? It's their planet, isn't it?"

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Life In America

Editor:

The Daily Tar Heel is not the only newspaper in the nation, though it may have the dubious distinction of being the only newspaper which elects (and recalls) its editor. This is a round about way of saying that I have just read the Sunday edition of the Montgomery, Ala. Advertiser which contains several items that may be of interest to Carolina students.

The Advertiser's lead story this Sunday was an account of Auburn's 40-0 victory over the University of Alabama. The victory provided Auburn with its first undefeated season in 44 years, and it insured the Plainsmen of a high national ranking when the final polls are released this week.

Buried in an adjoining column on the front page of this Sunday's Advertiser was a trivial story to the effect that the mechanical and electrical engineering departments at Auburn had just had their accreditation "temporarily withdrawn." This occurred for two reasons: first, the teaching load in these departments was deemed "excessive;" and second, faculty salaries were too low. The accrediting agency noted that these weaknesses have existed since 1940 and have changed, since then, "for the worse." By a remarkable coincidence, 1949 is the approximate beginning point for Auburn's rise to football greatness.

Now there will be some pundits uncouth enough to blame Auburn's academic troubles on its football coach, Ralph "Shug" Jordan. This is not only unfair to Shug (an estimable gentleman), but it completely misses the point. In capturing the national championship, or something very close to it, Coach Jordan has achieved precisely what he was hired for. The many thousands of Auburn fans, some of whom have actually attended the school, couldn't care less about the status of the mechanical and electrical engineering departments; the only concern of thees "fans" is to be able to yell WAR GODDAM EAGLE in every bar in the state, on every Saturday of every autumn. Here is where the blame lies, and thus we return to the society which surrounds and nurtures (poisons) the American educational system.

This brings us to a third story on the front page of Sunday's Advertiser. Headlined, "Two Injured In Stampede for Sputniks," the story deals with what happened when the downtown merchants of Montgomery showered redeemable premiums out of the sky in ping-pong balls. "Thousands of Montgomery residents dashed wildly for the ping-pong balls," trampling "about six fallen childen," including five-year-old Marjorie Loveland who is still under an oxygen tent and in critical condition.

All right, so the society is insane and the educational system is a joke—Leadership is then the answer: decisive, vigorous Leadership. But, regrettably, Leadership, like the educational system, is no better than the society from which it springs. This point, too, is illustrated by Sunday's Advertiser, only now we have to move to the trenchant editorial page under the direction of Grover Hall.

Item: Alabama's Highway Director, Herman L. Nelson, "is charged with misspending $310,000 in state funds." This is small potatoes compared with recent highway scandals in Pennsylvania and Indiana, but you have to remember that Alabama is one of the poorer "sovereign" states. Considering this handicap, Brother Herman did right well.

Item: "The entire insurance industry in Alabama is under suspicion today. During the past 18 months at least eight Alabama companies have gone broke, and in so doing they have left countless policyholders holding the bag. . . . Sharing the blame with the industry is the State Insurance Department. The people expect this department to protect them from the shaky, fly-by-night firms which are created for but one purpose—to fleece the ignorant public."

Item: "Right this minute some of the most 'solid' and influential people in Alabama are scooting around wiggling their antennae like roaches on the linoleum to determine which candidate for governor is likely to win so that they can put up a wad for his campaign and get it back later 20 times out of your tax money."

It could be argued that this was neither a typical week for Alabama, nor can the Alabama pattern (if such exists) be extrapolated to the national scene. It could be argued that way, but not in this letter. To the contrary, I argue that this analysis of Sunday's Advertiser highlights three important facets of what is reverently called, "The American Way of Life."

1. The American political structure, at all levels and in virtually all places, is so rife with special-interest corruption that stealing, usually in a clever variety of "legal" ways, has come to be the accepted norm.

2. The American educational system, lacking funds, recognition and support, has been submerged by a torrent of spectacular sideshows, of which King Football is only one among many.

3. The American citizenry, fired by a truly maniacal materialism, will not hesitate to run down little children in its frantic pursuit of premium gimmicks. All we need now is for our ailing President to make another unctous speech about America's "spiritual strength."

Taken together, what do these three concluding points mean? Well, if you're Bill Graham, you predict a Divine Judgement. If you're a scientist, you see America's approaching tragedy in terms of inexorable natural law. And if you're a subversive (the woods are full of them these days), the Marxian dialectic has registered another signal triumph. But maybe Polly Bergen, so sexy and sweet, has a better answer than any of these. Every week, Miss Bergen ends her TV show by singing, "The party's over . . ."

America, as it is now constituted, cannot possibly survive, and, in fact, does not merit survival. Perhaps, out of the rubble and the ashes, our purified remnants may be able to build a new America more worthy than the old.

PETER B. YOUNG

P.S. There were many other interesting and significant stories in this Sunday's Advertser, but I don't intend to write a book.

Foreign Flick Is French Film

Thursday night the Foreign Film Series of GMAB will present "Visiteurs du Soir," a French film, at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

Made in the style of Cocteau this film is taken from a 15th century French legend—"And so in the beautiful month of May 1485, the Devil sent on earth two of his creatures in order to drive the human beings to despair."

Though this film was made during the occupation of France there is a magical atmosphere permeating this film unlike the realism typical of the period.

This film is also known in America as 'The Devil's Envoys."

'Mixed' Bridge Tournament Set Next Week

An undergraduate "mixed" bridge tournament, sponsored by the tournament committee of G.M.A.B., will be held Thursday, Dec. 12, at 7 p. m. in Roland Parker lounges 1 and 2, according to Chairman Betty Reece.

The two best partnerships will be determined by elimination. Prizes will be given to the winning teams, and a special prize will be given to the poorest team. Dan Duke will serve as coordinator of the event.

Dorms, sororities and fraternities may enter as many teams of two as they wish. Names of all players must be turned in to the information office in Graham Memorial or to Betty Reece (8-9172) by Tuesday, Dec. 10.

Composed of two faculty members appointed by the Chancellor, four student members elected by the student body, and representatives from the Student Legislature, the Board has complete control over the finanical policies of the two publiciations.

Any interested student has been asked to contact Don Furtado, Pat Adams, or Al Goldsmith.

'Judith' Is Coming This Sunday, Monday

By CURTIS GANS

"Judith is Coming" and "Judith is coming to Holdfernes' have appeared on billboards througbout the campus. They herald the initial Petite Dramatique production of Jean Giradoux' "Judith" to be held in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial at 8 p. m. Sunday and Monday.

In the play, Judith, played by Carolyn Marsh, comes from Israel and gives herself to the barbarian King Holdfernes ostensibly in order to fullfill a prophecy that says Israel may be saved if the fairest and purest girl in Israel will give herself to the barbarian king.

Judith goes, but not after attempts to dissuade her by her Uncle Joseph, played by Frank Clymer and by her boyfriend John, portrayed by Anthony Wolff.

Helping to persuade her to go and revealing the hopelessness of Israel's situation without the intervention of a miracle, is the Grand Rabbi, played by Leon Rooke.

John makes a last effort to dissuade her by introducing Judith to Susanna, a courtesan, who is portrayed by Ann Bachman, who asks Judith to save her virginity.

Upon arriving at the camp of the barbarian king. Judith is taunted by Sarah, the Jewish procuress, played by Betty Rhodes; Egon, the effeminate lieutenant of Holdfernes, portrayed by Jim Tyndall; and Otta and Uri, lesser officers, played by Lew Hardy and John Hodgkins.

Finally in desperation Judith calls for Holdfernes, after she had attempted to kill Egon, whom she mistook for Holdfernes.

Holdfernes, played by Harry Moore, appears and beats down Judith's will to resist. Before entering Holdfernes' tent, Judith asks for a woman to help give her the resolution to give herself to Holdfernes. Daria, a deaf-mute, played by Gail Rice provides the necessary resolution.

In the third act, Judith completes the transformation from Judith the girl through Judith the woman to Judith the saint, through a surprise transformation of character.

Also in the play are Bill Ridenhour, as the servant; Mike Okun, as Little Jacob; Larry Anderson, as the cantor; Hal Williamson, as the drunken guard; and Curtis Gans, as the prophet.

Directing the play will be Nancy Green, graduate English student and former playmaker.

Seamon Gottlieb, producer of the play announced that there will be no admission charge. and that students, faculty and townspeople are invited.

Administration Officials Attend Virginia Meet

UNC administration officials are in Richmond, Va., now for the conventions of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and the Southern Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers.

Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences will be chairman of a discussion session on "The Liberal Arts College in the State University" at a meeting of the secondary schools and colleges convention.

Roy Armstrong, director of admissions at UNC and president of the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers, will be the main speaker at a luncheon meeting of the admissions officers' convention.

Quarterly Deadline Is New Year's Day

Christian Lefebure, editor of the Carolina Quarterly, has announced that January 1, 1958, is the deadline for submissions to the next edition of the Quarterly.

Lefebure said that any art work must be in black and white or can be sculpture.

The editor will be in his office in Graham Memorial every day from 3 to 5 p.m. to receive any art work or poetry or fiction submissions to the Quarterly.

Student Leaders To Meet Here

Plans are now under way for a Jan. 11 meeting of student leaders from the two Carolinas and Virginia to discuss Southern problems here in Chapel Hill.

According to Student Body President Sonny Evans, the meeting will be a planning session in preparation for a spring conference of southern leaders to be held in Nashville, Tenn.

Similar planning sessions are being held in Atlanta, New Orleans, Miami, Birmingham and Nashville.

Evans said invitations have been sent to representatives from student government, YM-YWCA, Hillel, Newman and Protestant groups from various colleges and universities in the three-state area.

Major Southern problems will be discussed at the Nashville spring conference.

CAMPUS CLUES

By CAROLYN

Yes, JULIAN'S Got It . . .

Not the little Miss Santa Claus, but he has got something to make this Miss' or any other's heart beat a little faster.

What is it? A Carolina garter—just the tyne lacy, frilly thing a gal loves to wear.

Wouldn't one look dandy right there?

Why not give your best gal one? They're inexpensive. And they come in Carolina blue and white satin and lace or black and blue (for more formal affairs).

A Fabulous Find . . .

With talent, as well as looks, becoming more important to a gal, some of the campus' smartest and best-dressed girls create their own dresses.

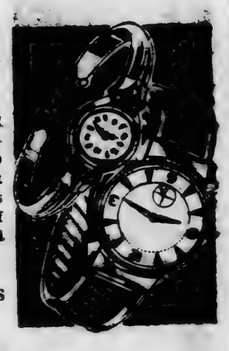
For these girls, who simply go mad over a pretty piece of material, a new store, the FABRIC CENTER, (located a mile this side of Howard Johnson's on the Durham Road) has everything.

Laces, nylon net, brocades, plus a wonderful selection of cottons, woolens, corduroys, velveteens and lots of fancy drapery material (which can be tailor-formed into a knockout of a dress) are available at the lowest prices we've seen.

Drop out—you can buy your patterns and all your other accessories there, too.

Dye Your Holiday Shoes To Match . . .

Whether you sew your own holiday fashions or buy them, you can add a very distinctive finishing touch with brocade or satin shoes dyed to match your outfit.



Mrs. Addison at ALEXANDER'S SHOE STORE is terrific at getting just THE shade you want.

Alexander's has white pumps and sandals in all heel sizes in satin and brocade to dye a pet color (or try a bewitching black satin pump).

When you're in Alexander's the next time look over the selection of bows and buckles. These will add a lot of pep to your shoe wardrobe, and also make a wonderful gift for just $2.50 and $3.

There Is Nothing Like A Watch . . .

Watches—a precious and lasting gift for a very special someone—start as low as $33.75 and go to $250. You're sure to find just what you want in either ladies' or men's watches from their huge stock of Elgin, Bulova, Hamilton, Relax, and Omega watches.

All of WENTWORTH & SLOAN'S watches carry a year's guarantee.

Basketball Bug Hits Carolina Campus

Basketball anyone?

Doesn't seem possible that the hardwood season could be here again, does it? But if you don't believe it, thumb your Tuesday morning paper and you'll find that Wake Forest, State and Duke have already opened the 1957-58 season and the Tar Heels will follow suit against Clemson Saturday afternoon in Woollen Gym. Tapoff time is two o'clock for this regionally televised ACC contest.

Coach Frank McGuire is real anxious to get started. The affable Tar Heel chieftain has been on the banquet trail over the summer months but he's stayed pretty trim. He doesn't mind telling you that the banquet sweep can be almost as grueling as the route to a national basketball championship.

But McGuire, or any other coach, is mighty happy to be in demand —Only thing required for this is to keep winning ball games and that's exactly what he's trying to do this season.

Lots Of Experimenting Will Probably Be Necessary

The Tar Heel cagers may answer a lot of questions in their opener Saturday, but more than likely it'll be a little while before any concrete predictions can be made concerning the fortunes of Tar Heel basketball.

There's a lot of talent on the Carolina squad. Some of the best in the land as a matter of fact. But some of it's a little raw right now and McGuire's chief problem will be a process of experimentation that will evolve the combination which can best keep the Tar Heel's rolling. This is going to take time.

Those who know McGuire and his assistant Buck Freeman know that they are a couple of mighty tenacious fellows who'll work diligently to bring the squad around to its maximum efficiency. There's likely to be a lot of shifting at the first of the season. Actually the problem of a first five is only a problem for "two more." Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns are sure starters. The question is, who is going to fill the vacancies left by Joe Quigg and Lennie Rosenbluth.

There are several capable men around who could step in and take up the slack, and if all goes well, there should be no pessimism about the showing this year's club will make. The Tar Heels will be right in there all the way.

Wolfpack Should Be Admired On Bowl Stand

Although some people may not care particularly for N. C. State, Wolfpack officials and followers must be admired for the way they have silently accepted the fact that a basketball probation has kept their football club out of the Orange Bowl. At first it was rumored that some officials would start a hassle about the probation, but nothing public has been said.

Probably one of the chief reasons is that football mentor Earle Edwards has refused to have anything disparaging to say about the basketball probation retarding his football team. Edwards is one of the finest people in the coching ranks and he has accepted the penalty without a complaint.

While we're on the subject of the Orange Bowl, many feel that the ACC had at least two better representatives than Duke. But the fact remains the Blue Devils got the bid and even the strongest Duke "dislikes" in the area should support the Blue Devils against mighty Oklahoma.

Basketball Brochure Dedicated To Quigg

The 1957-58 Carolina basketball brochure is dedicated to Joe Quigg. A hole cut in the center of the front page has a picture of Quigg and reads: "Dedicated to Joe Quigg." A fine tribute to an athlete with a lot of heart.

The new freshman basketball coach is not new to the Carolina campus. Ken Rosemond was an outstanding reserve on last year's national championship team. Rosemond is a smart basketball man and should turn in a fine job with the Tar Babies this season.

Giles Gaca, a senior fullback who came on fast at the last of the season to win a starting berth with the Tar Heel footballers, suffered a reoccurrence of a knee injury against Virginia Saturday. Giles was using a cane earlier in the week, but said his knee was okay, "just a little stiff."

Here's hoping that halfback Don Coker will fully recover from injuries and have himself a big year next season. Don is only a sophomore but has only one season eligibility left. The ACC ruled him eligible after a year of ineligibility because of some recruiting misunderstanding. But the conference only gave him two years.

Frosh Down High Point Jayvees 84-75

Moe Leads Scoring With 32

By DAVE WIBLE

HIGH POINT—Carolina's freshman basketball squad opened its season in the right direction last night when they defeated the scrappy High Point College Jayvees 84-75 at High Point. Doug Moe, a 6-5 foreward from Brooklyn, N. Y. took the role as leader for the Carolina yearlings as he grabbed top scoring honors for both teams with 32 points. In a game that was never one-sided, Moe played steady offense and defense while doing an outstanding job at rebounding.

HARD BATTLE

The Tar Babies looking a little rough around the edges, did not take the lead until minutes were left in the first half. They did not relinguish the lead from there on out but the High Pointers would not let them build on it. The greatest spread was 11 points early in the second half.

Carolina hit 50 percent of their shots from the floor. Pete Longenecker had 20 from his foreward post; center Hugh Donohue, the squads only big man at 6-8 had 14; guards Bill Hart and Tam Shuford had 9 and 11 to their credit respectively.

Foreward Bob Deaton and guard Bill Hart were the only Tar Baby substitutes who hit the scoring column. Deaton had 5 and Hart 9.

HIGH POINT SCRAPPY

The Tar Babies had a lot of trouble in the first hlaf at hanging on to the ball. Jim Short of High Point gave Carolina the most trouble in the first half at hanging High Point's littlest man, he scrapped all the way and stole the ball several times.

At halftime the Tar Heels had a 42-36 lead. They came back after the intermission fired up and it looked as though it would be a one-sided contest but their attack faltered after a few minutes and they had to fight for the victory much less a big spread. It was not until late in the game the outcome was definitely decided.

Wrestlers Prep For Opener At Va. Friday

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The varsity and freshman wrestling teams will swing into action this weekend when they journey north to take on Virginia Friday night and Washington and Lee the following afternoon.

Varsity Coach Sam Barnes is hoping for a repeat performance of victory over the Cavaliers. In their last meeting, the Tar Heels took Virginia by one point, 16-15 but had to settle for a tie with Washington and Lee.

The present tentative varsity lineup lists two sophomores and six returning lettermen. Curt Champlin at 123 and J. W. Welborn at 147 will be the first-year men on the starting team. At the moment, Henry Rhyne and Perrin Henderson are scheduled to open at 130 and 137 respectively.

Team captain Kenny Hoke will be at 157; he will be followed by David Anderson who will wrestle at 167. The two heaviest weigh classes, 177 and heavyweigh, will be filled by Bob Boyette and Jack Gray.

SUB FILLERS

Freshman coach Jim Carse is also hopeful of wrapping up two victories in this weekends meets. Several members of the freshman team have come to Carolina with successful records compiled in high school. Chip Woodrow, Peter Marks, J. L. Henderson, and Phil Davis are expected to add strength to the lighter-weight classes. Positions in the heavier divisions have not been settled yet.

Arrested

CHARLOTTE, Dec. 3. (AP)—The FBI announced here today the arrest in Benson of a California teenager who officers said drove the get away car used in the $33,000 robbery of the Angier branch of the First Citizens Bank and Trust Co. of Smithfield.

M. P. Chiles, special agent in charge of the Charlotte FBI office, said James Edward Oloizia, 18, of Fresno, Calif., was taken into custody at 1:30 p.m. today in a Benson tourist court.

Clemson Will Get First Crack At Tar Heel Cage Record Saturday

By BILL KING

Over in Y-Court there's a big silver trophy on display recognizing the Carolina Tar Heels as national basketball champions in 1956-57.

It's a permanent trophy but it signifies only that the Tar Heels were top team in the land last season —it does not say a thing about the 1957-58 season.

But there are about 14 boys and a couple of real fine coaches on the campus who aren't contenting themselves with riding the laurels of last year; and there are about 7,000 students plus a multitude of Carolina followers who are mighty anxious to see just what is going to happen this year.

OPEN SATURDAY

The first opportunity comes Saturday afternoon in Woollen Gym at two o'clock when the Tar Heels put their 32 consecutive wins man on the line against the Clemson Tigers. And everybody gets a chance to see it. Woollen Gym will be filled to capacity in just a matter of minutes but the crowd won't be a problem since the game will get regional television coverage.

Yep, it's basketball time once again and all eyes are on our Tar Heels as they embark upon a long, rocky schedule which will find everybody in the land striving to knock the props from under Frank McGuire's high-flying assemblage of hardwood finess.

McGuire, a bit weary from the long speaking engagements grind which accompanies famous coaches but anxious to get the season underway, is taking every precaution against his club's letting up after such a great year last season.

CONTRACT RENEWAL

The handsome Tar Heel mentor, who just put his John Hancock on a five-year contract, has predicted that the loss of center Joe Quigg ruined Carolina's' chances of repeating as national champs. McGuire says that the club is due for some bad breaks and doesn't count on anything like the fabulous winning streak of a year ago.

But Carolina fans know that the Smiling Irishman is not the most optimistic fellow around (and what coach is?) and they've got a lot of confidence in him and his very capable assistant, Buck Freeman.

The loss of Quigg and the graduation of All-American Lennie Rosenbluth pose as McGuire's biggest headache and probably he'll have to do a good deal of experimenting at the outset of the season to determine just who is the most capable to fill the shoes of these two gigantic contributors to Tar Heel success a year ago.

McGuire figures that his club will have rough going over the mouth of December and part of January in which he'll have to vary his lineup in an attempt to strike up a winning combination.

The Tar Heel coach isn't all frowns, however. He still has Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns, two of the finest guards around, and Pete Brennan, a tremendous forward from Brooklyn, N. Y. All three were starting members of that fabulous '56-57 team and any one of the trio could come off with All-American honors this year.

In addition, Danny Lotz, a versatile center-forward veteran and guard Gehrmann Holland and forward Roy Searcy were members of last year's club who should aid the Tar Heel cause.

The success or failure of the Tar Heels, though, lies in one of the finest potential arrays of sophomore talent to be found anywhere. Harvey Salz, a dead-eyed soph from Brooklyn and a freshman star two years ago is being counted on for heavy duty this season. Salz was not in school last year and neither was 6'4" forward Ray Stanley who built a terrific reputation as a freshman.

Dick Kepley and Lee Shaffer, a couple of freshman stars last year, could give the McGuiremen a tremendous boost as could such boys as Mike Steppe and John Crotty. The four were the crux of the fine freshman team of a year ago.

Grey Poole, ex-high school great at Raleigh and Wally Graham, a star at Miami Senior High are probably a year off, but could come on fast to give valuable assistance.

McGuire has the nucleus of another outstanding ball club. Should the new talent come along as quickly as expected, the Tar Heels could grab all the cookies again this season.

Bryant Inks 10-Year Pact At Alabama U.

HOUSTON, Tex., Dec. 3 (AP)—Paul Bear Bryant today signed a 10-year contract as head football coach and athletic director at the University of Alabama.

In Lexington, Ky., Dr. Frank Rose, president-elect of Alabama, said Bryant would receive $17,500 a year.

"We have secured in our way of thinking the best football coach in the country," added Dr. Rose.

In returning to his alma mater, Bryant received permission yesterday from Texas A&M officials to be relieved of seven years remaining on a 10year contract there.

MISSILE TEST CENTER, CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Dec. 3. (AP)—The Navy's mighty Vanguard rocket was reported ready tonight for a predawn shot that may hurl the first American "moon" into space.

"There were a few bugs in the rocket," said a high level source from the Office of Naval Research.

Cage Clinic For Murals Begins

Intramural Basketball officials will participate in a clinic tonight, tomorrow night, and Friday night according to Coach Walter Rabb, Director of Intramural Activities. Anyone interested in officiating basketball is requested to contact the office and be present at the opening of the clinic on Thursday night at 7:30, in 301-A, Woollen Gym.

Officials will be paid on an hourly basis. Details of the earning power of the official may be secured by contacting the intramural office.

North Carolina Athletic Officals Association members, Don Atkins, Wayne Wright, and Tom Johnson will conduct the clinic. Atkins is the intramural superviser in charge of all officials.

There will be a thorough discusion of the rules and rule changes with some actual of games under supervision. Each official will be required to pass a written examination.

Prop Simplicity Seen In 'Judith' Production

By CURTIS GANS

Simplicity of stage and costume will be one feature of the Petite Dramatique's initial offering, "Judith" by Jean Giradoux, in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial, Sunday and Monday at 8 p. m.

Using four platforms and a minimum of props, the play will be done in a theater in the round style.

Starring in the play will be Carolyn Marsh, graduate English student, in the title role. Miss Marsh previously studied at Christian College and Southwestern at Memphis, and has been a member of several theater groups including the Memphis Little Theater, Christian College Theater, Southwestern Players, Center Players, and Carolina Playmakers.

She has also had some television experience and has won the Southwestern Design Award for her costuming of "Hamlet" at the Memphis Sakespeare Festvial in 1956.

Holofernes, the barbarian king to whom Judith gives herself in order to save Israel and to realize herhelf, will be played by Harry Moore, graduate art student.

Moore, a painter and sculptor, won first prize in sculpture at the N. C. State Fair. He was also one of 60 selected from a group of over 300 to have his sculpture displayed at the N. C. Artist's Show. Currently he is competing for a $300 scholarship as a result of his artistic endeavour.

Leon Rooke, winner of the Betty Smith Playwriting Award and the Koch Playwriting Award, will play the role of the Grand Rabbi of Israel who persuades Judith to go to Holofernes.

John, Judith's finance who tries to dissuade Judith, will be portrayed by Anthony Wolff, former columnist and drama critic of The Daily Tar Heel. Wolff is a sophomore from New York City.

Ann Bachman, senior European history major, will play the part of Susanna, the prostitute who tries to take Judith's place.

Directing the play is Nancy Green, graduate English student from Winston-Salem. Miss Green is a graduate of UNC and a forcer Playmaker. She has acted and directed with numerous dramatic groups, and has had off-Broadway theater experience.

The play will be produced by Sea-

Iva Kitchell's Satiric Dances Bring Laughs

By RUTH WHITLEY

The unique one woman show of America's number one dance satirist, Iva Kitchell, created quite a sensation in Memorial Hall Tuesday night.

Miss Kitchell, sponsored by the Student Enterainment Committee, changed costumes, shoes and hair styles on stage and talked to the audience between dances.

In addition to her hilarious takeoffs on such dancers as Isadora Duncan, the petite dancer from Junction City, Kan. also entertained with pantomimes and serious dancing.

Miss Kitchell performed "Danse Espagnole," a satire on Spanish Dance, which was a great success and repeat performance number in South America.

The music for three of her dances: "Coloratura," a take off on modern dance; "Maisie At The Movies," a pantomime; and "Pseudo-Voodoo," a satrie on Voodoo Dance, was composed by Harvey Brown, Miss Kitchell's accompanist.

SSL Bill On Slate

PRINGLE PIPKIN
and EDITH MACKINNON

The State of the Campus Address by Student Body President Sonny Evans and one "controversial" bill will be featured in tonight's schedule of the Student Legislature.

Legislators will convene at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

In his address Evans said he will mention "challenges Student Government must meet in the future as well as a resume of the past and its effects on the future."

The student body president said he expects, in this his one major address to the campus, "to set a tone for the future and to make definite assertions as to what he considers the goals of student government to be."

John Brooks' (SP) bill "to establish the N. C. State Student Legislature of UNC as an independent organization with its members subject to the approval of the Student Legislature of UNC will probably be hotly debated.

Speaker Don Furtado said, "I think the debate on the SSL bill will be, to say the least, lively; and the students might find it interesting to attend."

Charlie Gray's (UP) resolution "concerned with the conduct of the State Student Legislature" was held in committee.

The resolution calls for a censure of the SSL action regarding interracial marriage and a repudiation of the idea that the SSL is "truly representative of the student bodies of the participating schools."

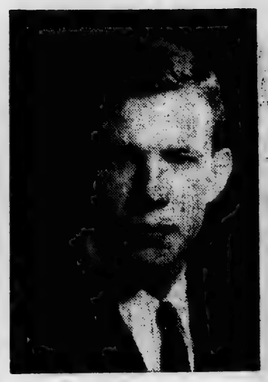
Al Goldsmith's (UP) resolution "urging the athletic department not to schedule home football games during the Thanksgiving Holidays" will also come before the Legislature.



Wayne Bishop, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, said he thought the bill was a "wonderful idea" and agreed that it would be "a good policy for both the student body and the team."

"But since there are only so many Saturdays in the year," Bishop said he is not sure a different schedule could be worked out.

Bishop added that he felt sure that Coach Jim Tatum and Athletic Director Chuck Erickson were not in favor of scheduling home games over the holidays.

One member will be appointed from the Legislature to the Carolina Forum. A similar representative will be appointed to the Carolina Quarterly.

Also to be introduced in tonight's session is a bill to provide $100 to the NSA Committee for the purpose of defraying expenses to the regional assembly to be held at N. C. State Dec. 12-14.

Agnes Moorehead Of 'The Rivalry' Is Star Of Both Stage And Screen

Agnes Moorehead, who co-stars with Raymond Massey and Martin Gabel in the Paul Gregory theatre presentation, "The Rivalry," has achieved stardom on both stage and screen.

In this new stage play, written and directed by Norman Corwin, Miss Moorehead will be seen in person at Memorial Hall for one night only, Friday, as the wife of Sen. Stephen A. Douglas, who opposed Abraham Lincoln for the presidency.

Miss Moorehead, who also appeared in Paul Gregory's stage success, "Don Juan in Hell," was born in Boston, Mass., and attended the University of Wisconsin, where she obtained her Master's degree in English and public speaking.

After a season coaching a local drama club, she went to New York and enrolled in the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

Following graduation, she won immediae stage success with roles in "Scarlet Pages," "All the King's Men" and "Candlelight."

Between stage assignments, she appeared in 27 major motion pictures, and her second film, "The Magnificent Ambersons," brought her the Academy Award nomination as well as the New York Critics' Award for the best actress of the year. She was also nominated for her performance in "Johnny Belinda."

When Paul Gregory made theatrical history with "The First Drama Quartet" presenting George Bernard Shaw's "Don Juan In Hell," Agnes Moorehead was co-starred with Charles Laughton, and Charles Boyer.

Tickets for "The Rivalry" are available at 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved at $4.40, $3.30, and $2.20.

Yule Empty Stocking Adoptions Must Be Made Before Dec. 9

The Empty Stocking Committee wishes to emphasize that adoptions must be made now. All adoptions will be stopped Monday Dec. 9, and 165 needy families listed with the Empty Stocking Fund are still unadopted.

Delivery of boxes should be made to the bus garages behind the Sinclair Service Station in Glen Lennox from 1-5 p.m., Dec. 9-14. Boxes will be picked up by the families the next week.

All of the families that are "up for adoption" are certified by the Orange County Welfare Department. Most of them will have no Christmas whatsoever if the Empty Stocking Fund, through the residents of Orange County, does not provide it. Interested persons are asked to call Mrs. Charles Dixon, 8-0955 to make an adoption.

Recent adoptions are Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, AFROTC, Mrs. H. R. Chamberlin, Mrs. B. D. Cameron and mother, Vernon Culpepper, Baptist Church, Raymond Dawson, Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. C. F. Falconer, Alpha Delta Pi Sorority, Mrs. V. A. Hawkins, Aldersgate Methodist Church, Leon Harris, Theta Chi, Smith Dormitory, Mrs. W. T. Kohn, Ruffin Dormitory, Margaret Moore, Physical Therapy.

Special Section Of English 50 To Be Offered

Registration is restricted in numbers and is limited to seniors. Any senior with a "B" average or better who is interested should register for either one of the regularly scheduled sections of English 50, and on the first class day apply for membership in the special section.

Limited enrollment will permit time for discussion and reports on topics of interest to the individual student.

Sputnik Odenik

LONDON, Dec. 4. (AP)—Moscow Radio waxed poetic today over the Soviet Union's two earth satellites.

The radio's North American service broadcast an "Ode to a Sputnik" it said it was sent in by a New Yorker. It did not give his name.

These were some of the verses:

Little Sputnik, flying high
In the earth's surrounding sky,
Can you tell me from up there
If the earth still looks as fair?
Promise me, my little sphere,

Never, never to interfere
With old Santa and his deer
Flying through the atmosphere.

Say hello to mother witch
As she rides by on her switch,
And to that proverbial cow
Jumping o'er the moon somehow.

Change Is Asked In Excuse System

A proposal to make a significant change in the present system of issuing class excuses will be presented to the Faculty Council tomorrow afternoon.

The advocates, in a statement to The Daily Tar Heel, stressed that the proposal "is concerned solely with the granting of excuses, rather than with regulations on class attendance."

"The decision by the administration, during the recent outbreak of the flu, to make class excuses purely a matter to be settled by the student and his professor, was," according to the joint statement, a "mature and wise decision."

"The students at the University of North Carolina have operated under an honor system for 83 years. We believe that this proposal is unquestionably within the concept of personal honor and within the concept of the Honor Code."

The advocates of the change concluded their statement by saying:

"At present, the students live under the Honor Code both inside and outside the classroom. It is a paradox that the University's trust in the individual student does not extend into the area of class excuses.

"It is unreasonable for the University to trust a student only partially, if it is agreed that he is to be trusted at all, and that the Honor System is a basic part of his education.

"In view of these facts, uor proposal is:

1. That the present system of issuing class excuses be abolished.

2. That the person who grants the excuse from a given class shall be the instructor of that class.

3. That no "official" excuse from any other person or office shall be required by the instructor.

4. That the instructor shall accept, as official, the word of the person who seeks the excuse.

5. That the office(s) which now have the authority to grant excuses shall retain that authority so that it may be exercised whenever it shall, for any reason, become necessary."

Phi Downs Socialistic Proposal

The Phi literary society turned "thumbs down" on a proposal "that a socialistic form of government be established for the United States by 1960" in a spirited debate Tuesday night.

The topic of discussion, introduced by Clarence Simpson, was based on the reasoning that since total socialistic government is the "ideal form of government," and since the United States is "tending toward it anyway," it should be put into effect.

Simpson opened the debate by advocating socialism as a means to keep this country free and equal. He rapped capitalism as a waste and exclaimed that under socialism you have only one product, and that is the best product.

Government," he said," would absorb losses while the worker would keep getting his salary without fear of lay-offs."

Opposition to the bill was then forwarded by Dave Matthews who defended capitalism as a protector of initiative and our way of life. "If we want to foster initiative," he stated, "then we've got to say let the best man win."

Matthews was followed by a series of speeches urging a "no" vote for the bill. Included were deliveries by Don Jacobs, Warren Coolidge and Jack Lewis, who took first place and tied for second in the society's top speaker awards.

Coolidge, chairman of the Phi ways and means committee, announced that next Tuesday's topic will be "Should a Bill be passed to the School Constitution, preventing the enrollment of Women Students to This University?"

Sixty-two People Are Killed As Trains Crash Amidst Pea-Soup London Fog Tuesday Night

LONDON, Thursday, Dec. 5 (AP)—A freakish railway crash in a London pea-soup fog wrecked two trains and an overpass bridge at the rush hour peak last night and killed at least 62 commuters.

Many aboard the trains were early Christmas shoppers carrying gifts homeward.

More than 120 persons were injured seriously by the telescoping of the trains and by the bridge girders tumbling down on the mass of train wreckage.

After 7 1-2 hours of toiling in almost impenetrable gloom of night compounded by fog, rescue workers called off their efforts until daylight—if the fog lifts for light.

A police spokesman said 50 bodies had been recovered and another 12 still were pinned in wreckage awaiting removal after dawn.

The rescue by regulars and neighborhood volunteers at the South London crash scene was imperiled by parts of the bridge teetering near collapse upon them and by a third train that all but crashed down with the bridge.

The third train was derailed just short of disaster and was virtually undamaged as it approached the bridge, but it still hung as something of an added menace over the rescue teams.

One fire officer said the fog made it impossible to determine whether hundreds of tons of bridge steel still hanging over the wreckage was about to collapse.

He said it would probably be necessary to shore up the wrecked bridge with timbers before any more wreckage could be pulled apart.

The major disaster brought an official message of sorrow from Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip.

The disaster was the third biggest of its kind for Britian in this century. The largest was in May, 1915, when two troop trains collided in Scotland, killing 227 people.

The second was a three-train pile-up at the suburban London station of Harrow where 112 people died, on Oct. 8, 1953.

Fog for the past two days has been the thickest for Britain and parts of the continent in recent years.

The wreck was blamed on the disjointing of train schedules and near zero visibility.

As one train smashed into the rear of the other standing outside St. John's station, the bridge struts were struck and tons of steel girders fell. Some smashed down on two cars of an already wrecked train.

Doctor were pushed into smashed compartments to give pain-killing injections to living passengers lying moaning with bodies piled about them.

Rescue workers ran out of stretches. They improvised litters from doors wrenched from the wrecked compartments.

The police headquarters in nearby Lewisham ordered squads of bobbies to the area on bicycle after patrol cars were stalled by near zero visibility.

Dozens of ambulances and fire engines groped slowly toward the wreck scene. The bobbies guided mercy teams with flares and headlamps.

Police said railway officials had asked for several trucks to remove the dead.

Neighbors said the fog hid the sight of the collision except for the blue flash.

Survivors told of a terrifying crash as the two trains collided.

"Our compartment stopped on its side," Mrs. Vivian Ratfell said. "We were one struggling mass of arms and legs. Then a man said 'Let's have cigarettes all around.'

"When rescue workers arrived with arc lamps I saw that both his legs were badly torn and bleeding.

"Somewhere nearby a girl's voice was crying 'daddy, daddy'."

There were other road collisions in Britain during the fog. Six huge doubledecker buses crashed in southern England. A train collision at Romford, Sussex, blocked main lines.

Reader Says Editor "Dead" When Paper Supports Issue

To the Editor:

In today's edition of the Daily Tar Heel you ask for the patience of the student body while the DTH "revamps."

Patience be damned!

I write to inform you that I represent a powerful clique dedicated to the high and noble purpose of inaugurating recall proceedings to change the editor of the DTH.

The petition has been drawn up and bears some 2,000 signatures. The petition has a blank space where the charges will be filled in as soon as you give us just cause.

It is highly doubtful that you will be able to avoid this movement to replace you.

If you support Jesus Christ, Mickey Mouse, democracy and Santa Claus, you will be subject to recall and charged with incompetence and failure to take a stand on controversial matters.

If you attack Communism, professional athletics, veneral disease and inflation, you will be recalled as a wild-eyed fanatic and labelled a sophomoric witch hunter.

You see, sir, there is no escape. You are enjoined, however, not to feel that you are being discriminated against. We also have a petition ready to be used in ousting your successor.

It isn't that we do or do not like the DTH or anyone connected with that publication. We just happen to like the excitement of campaigns and elections. Who knows? Perhaps you will be able to run for editor again before your college career is finished. It is quite possible that we shall replace and recall several hundred editors before our supply of names in local cemeteries is exhausted.

Incidentally, failure to print this letter in its entirety will constitute just cause for recall. On the other hand, if you do print it you might possibly be charged with "poor taste."

"Serene I fold my hands and wait." Just make one simple, direct declarative statement in the DTH and —— you are dead!

Sincerely,
ROY B. HODGE

From The Editor:

We guess that by writing this letter we are, if Mr. Hodge can be believed, "dead." But so long as the blood still runs warm in our veins, we shall continue to make "declarative" statements in The Daily Tar Heel.

It comes as a surprise to us that a man of "Roy B. Hodge's" popularity is not known in the university. It seems a person with 2,000 followers either in have his name registered either in Hanes Hall or at the information desk at Graham Memorial.

But personnel at both offices said his name was not on record—jects enumerated by "Roy B. Hodge' were a student at the university.

As for threats of a recall should we take a stand on various subjects numerated by "Roy B. Hodge," we must plead guilty to what Mr. Hodge calls an "attack" on Communism, professional athletics, venereal disease and inflation.

For, while Mr. Hodge's letter was coming through the mail, we were suggesting editorially that the nation's labor leaders evaluate the proposal of one of their fellow leaders, who called for a levelling-off of workers' wages as a "major blow against inflation."

So, Mr. Hodge, you have material for "the charges" which you will place in the blank space at the top of your petitions. But our sophomoric witchcraft tells us that it would do even a man of your following little good . have a thousand such allegations.

And that same sophomoric witchcraft, coupled with "wildeyed fanaticism," tells us that you will have less trouble stealing names off cemeteries for letters than you will in finding "several hundred editors" for The Daily Tar Heel.

If your threats are to be carried out, Mr. Hodge, then our name soon will come up again for the job.

UNC Officials Should Alter Plan For Cuts

Three student leaders—Sonny Evans, Don Furtado and George Ragsdale—will meet with university officials tomorrow to discuss a proposed change in the issuance of excuses.

They point out that it is not a proposal for changes in "class cut" procedure, but that it applies only to the method by which students will be excused when absent from class.

In short, it would put a student on his honor to explain reasons for his absence—just as occurred during the influenza epidemic here—and the instructor would accept, as true, the word of the student.

The proposal merits considered study.

Under a true honor system, the word of the student always should be accepted as valid. And when evidence exists to indicate a student has violated the trust of the honor code, then courts exist before which he can be tried.

The honor system, we feel, is working effectively at the University of North Carolina. There is no reason why, unless the privilege were exploited, it should not be extended to include the area of class excuses.

We feel university officials should cooperate with student leaders in an effort to establish the honor system method of granting excuses to students who are absent from class. It would eliminate running from one end of the campus to the other for an excuse.

Once the system is adopted, it then would be the responsibility of the students to make it work. If the system then should be exploited, the responsibility of university officials would be to reinstate the old method.

Music Lovers Should Begin Yuletide Rush

By JONATHAN YARDLEY

With the Christmas rush about to start, record stores will be overflowing with customers, the best records will be out of stock, and a general feeling of insecurity will pervade the hassled record purchaser. To stem this tide of ill-feeling I would suggest getting to the stores now instead of three weeks from now, and taking a good look at some of the recordings mentioned below, as they should satisfy any recipient.

If the lucky person likes jazz you have an almost limitless library of disks to choose from: sadly to say, the multiplicity of recordings has produced a great many inferior ones, and a flashy cover is often a poor guide to buying. Among the best of the 1957 releases have been Duke Ellington's "Such Sweet Thunder," Contemporary's "The Poll Winners"—featuring Barney Kessel, Shelly Manne, and Ray Brown—Miles Davis' "Miles Ahead," and Dizzy Gillespie's "Dizzy In Greece."

If he - or she, depending on your sex and tastes—goes for tasty pop vocalists, the field is unlimited. Mr. Sinatra has about ten albums out, all excellent and all guaranteed to satisfy a discriminating listener. If you feel wealthy, give Ella Fitzgerald's two record set of the music of Rogers and Hart, or Sarah Vaughan's set of great broadway tunes. And you can't miss with Johnny Mathis—either "Wonderful, Wonderful or "Warm" will be received with open arms. A singer no one has ever heard of is a guy named Jackie Paris, who is as good as they come. He has a record out on Brunswick called "Skylark" which is one of the most romantic and pleasing records of the year and would come as a welcome surprise to any jazz or pop music lover.

For the person who just likes music or is just beginning to learn about it there's Leonard Bernstein's performance of Handel's "Messiah." This isn't the best recording of the durable classic, but it's very nice, not very expensive, and a worthwhile addition to anyone's library.

Finally, Verve has just released fourteen disks from the 1957 Newport Jazz Festival, and there's one for almost anyone in this swinging potpourri. Among the best are the records featuring Dizzy Gillespie, Count Basie, and the Roy Eldridge-Coleman Hawkins ensemble. I'll have more to say next week after I've had a chance to hear them, I was there, but the records and the real thing always differ, as witness the best selling Ellington recording from the 1956 Festival. Until then, keep swinging.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Education I: The Challenge To U.S. Stimulation Of Individual Initiative

Curtis Gans

Education is probably the key to a capable and responsible democracy; indeed it is integral to any government to put out a capacity performance. It is a field that is sorely neglected and lacking in the U. S.

The children of the U. S. are being fed with so much group psychology that whatever they possess of innate individualism and initiative is being rapidly snuffed out and stifled. The U. S. is breeding a group of Joneses without any Joneses to grasp for.

To this end bright students are being sacrificed in order to hit the "golden mean." Slower students are being forced to proceed at a pace over their heads in order to have this "golden mean." The gold is a bit tarnished, and the idea of a mean is worthless and slightly undemocratic.

If American society is really democratic, then there is no excuse for forcing students to sacrifice their innate intellectual advantage for the good of the "group." It is also against democratic principles to force slower students into shoes that it is impossible for them to fill. The system must be revamped, before America loses its respect in the community of nations and all leadership potential goes down the drain.

The U. S. must stimulate initiative and build individualism rather than tear it down

Perhaps the fundamental object of education is to stimulate thought and to give the students the tools of thought—language, mathematics, scientific method, and others.

In this week's U. S. News and World Report Admiral Rickover talked of the Russian superiority in the field of education. He said that the Russians realizing that much of education was non-political in nature adopted much of the European educational system.

The two central facts in this appraisal are the facts that education is in the main non-political, and that Russia has developed a better educational system than the U. S.

Yet, in America the politicians seem to feel that education is involved in politics and that politics takes precedence over education.

In the past two years, there have been bills up in Congress for aid for construction of schools. Both were defeated. With them went hope for another year that children will be able to get more individual attention and be taught in facilities that will give them the best chance to develop their potential.

More than anything else the U. S. needs more teachers. It needs also an upgrading of standards, for colleges are no longer institutions of higher learning. They are little better than advanced high schools. Educationally the U. S. needs to catch up. The U. S. needs to stimulate and challenge the intellect of its youth—the nations only brain resource.

There seems to be a slight awakening of interest in Washington to this problem, but the need is urgent and funds must be supplied quickly. The U. S. is charged with the dual responsibility of encouraging educators and building facilities in which teachers can give their pupils maxmum attention and have at their fingers the best possible means of illustrating that which they want to teach.

The U. S. is charged with a responsibility of meeting a deadline. The deadline is that time when Russia has amassed such superiority that it can feel free to dictate to the U. S. At the present rate of U. S. improvement, this date is not far off.

To not make the best use of potential is dangerous to a good democracy. In this, the space age, it may be disastrous.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

All Were Friends & All Gangsters

In Appalachian, New York, recently, an assemblage of 65 notorious hoods met at the home of Joseph Barbara during an illness. Many of those in attendance had previously been questioned by authorities in connection with the murder of gangster Albert Anastasia. (Of course they were innocent.) Old Barbara himself has been exonerated of four murders. When the state police broke up the meeting, Barbara had this to say, "They just happened to drop in at the same time to pay their respects." (It was reported by police that they left the same way.)

Among the notables were bookies, dope peddlers, racketeers, reputed heads of the infamous Mafia, murderers, blackmailers, and some honest businessmen. This is indeed noteworthy, when such a group as this come, all at once, to visit a sick friend.

One more interesting item: all racketeers aren't doing so well these days. One was driving an old model car ('56 Cadillac) and another had only $450 in cash on him at the time, but he may have been a chauffeur. The police didn't say.

What we need in America is more of his. In all our hustle and bustle we sometimes forget our sick friends.

A Mebane halfback, Phil Medlin, was a star in his own right last week in a state high school football game. He ran over three touchdowns, and passed to end Allen Rhodes for a fourth. Not only this, but he carried the ball eight times for a total gain of 245 yards, an average of 30.6 per carry. The question is, how did he do it? The coach swears that the other team fielded 11 men. We wonder if Coach Tatum has signed him up yet. No doubt he has. He would make a terrific substitute for next year's frosh.

We are indebted to Bill Gold of the Washington Post for this gem: "When you start worrying about where this modern generation is heading, you've got to remember that it's not doing too badly—considering where it came from." Gold didn't say where he got it.

UNC Students Destroy Posts, But No Arrests

Editor:

As everyone is well aware, thanks to the Raleigh News and Observer, there was quite a scandal regarding the goal post incident at the State-Carolina football game at the beginning of the season. In fact, several of our State College students suffered various punishments as a result of the event; State College in general suffered too. Perhaps we were wrong in attacking the goal post, but I certainly don't think so.

Specifically, last Saturday at the end of the Duke-Carolina game, Carolina students encountered no opposition from police or anyone else when they tore down the Duke goal and carried it away, possibly back to UNC. They faced no charges of vandalism, disrespect to officers, resisting arrest, or theft, etc. The TV announcer made several comments as the goal post strained, swayed, and hit the dirt. The announcer stated something to the effect that this is an old tradition that is upheld at all college football games such as this. Perhaps he should have added, "EXCEPT WHERE STATE COLLEGE IS CONCERNED."

Now I have my gripes as far as the Athletic Department's treatment of the State College students is concerned, and I believe that they are typical of those of the vast majority of my classmates. Therefore, I will not state all of them now because it would consume too much space and time.

However, in regards to our college spirit being so low in comparison to that of other local colleges, I'd like to say that I believe it is right where the responsible departments of this college have put it. Every time the State students try to show a little college spirit and support their team, they are accused of every crime that can be applied to the situation—being disorderly, ungentlemanly-like conduct, etc., and consequently condemned for their actions. As a result, the students are forced to guard their actions fearing that "Big Brother" is watching and may not like what he sees.

Why can't we have a little support and consideration from all departments concerned? It could do a lot for our college spirit; after all, spirit can not be forced on a person, it must come from within him.

"Static" Not New

Now they tell us that "static" has developed in the second stage of the Vanguard rocket, and it could delay the launching of America's first earth satellite.

The grapefruit-sized mechanism probably already would be spinning overhead if "static" had not developed a long time ago between our rivalry-ridden armed forces.

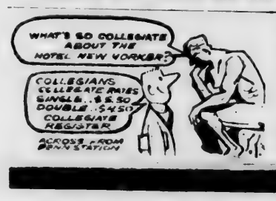
But, then, that's the purpose of the multi-million dollar Pentagon Building. It puts all our armed forces under one roof so that plans can be worked out more efficiently and peace will remain in the family.

New Course In Philosophy Dept., 'Science And Values' Is Offered

Contingent upon approval by the Administrative Board of the College of Arts and Science, the Department of Philosophy will offer a new course in the coming spring term designed for superior students at the junior-senior level.

It is Philosophy 70, "Science and Values," to meet Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at 11 a.m. It will be limited to 15 students who have a cumulative average of B (2.0) or better.

The new course will be taught by Prof. Jason L. Saunders assisted by Prof. Everett W. Hall, and will use the latter's Modern Science and Human Values as text, supplemented by source readings.



To be conducted in seminar-discussion fashion, the course will be concerned with the rise of modern scientific thought out of medieval philosophies and idea-systems and the impact of the scientific tradition upon the study of values up to the present time with especial emphasis upon current skepticism.

Philosophy 158, "Recent and Contemporary Philosophy," though not new, will have a new instructor this spring. He is Prof. Maurice Natanson, who received his M.A. from New York University, his Ph. D. from the University of Nebraska, and took post-doctoral work leading to a Ph.D. in Social Science at the New School for Social Research where he also taught on the graduate staff.

He comes to UNC from the University of Houston. In Philosophy 158 he will emphasize recent European philosophy, particularly various forms of Existentialism. The course is open to graduates and advanced undergraduates.

Professor Natanson is also teaching Philosophy 107, "Foundations of the Social Sciences," meeting Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 10 a.m.

Philosophy 53, "Introduction to Scientific Method," offered for the first time last year, will be repeated this spring under the instructorship of Douglas Dorrough.

Japanese Diet Leader Visits UNC

A Japanese political leader, now on a special mission in Washington, is making a side trip to Chapel Hill on a sentimental journey—his first visit to his Alma Mater since he left in 1917.

Hiroshi Momiyama, floor leader of the Liberal-Democratic Party in the Japanese Diet, arrived yesterday by plane at Raleigh-Durham Airport, is staying until Friday at the Carolina Inn and will meet with student and faculty groups here and will lecture to classes in political science.

Momiyama will have a special opportunity to talk with Dr. J. G. DeRoulhac Hamilton, retired Kenan Professor of history, under whom Momiyama studied when he was a student at Chapel Hill from 1914 to 1917. Momiyama received the master's degree in economics in 1917.

Dr. C. B. Robson, head of the Department of Political Science, will be Momiyama's official escort in the University and will present the Japanese statesman to Student-faculty seminars.

Momiyama was once a counsellor in the Ministry of the Navy, but was not in court circle favor with the Tojo group prior to World War II and was temporarily retired from political life again in 1952 and was elected President of the Diet Members' Association of Kaishnito (The Democratic Party.)

He is also author of several publications, among them works on revision of election laws, currency, trade, taxation, and naval affairs.

Relaxed Gridders Can Review Season

A cheerful squad meeting, looking to the future, this week ended the labors and play of the North Carolina football squad for the season just ended, and coaches have already deployed on recruiting assignments, checking high school prospects.

Most of Coach Jim Tatum's staff this week is in Charlotte for the Shrine Bowl practices and games. There will be the interlude of the Atlantic Coast Conference meeting in Greensboro, and then Tatum will speak Saturday at the Atlantic Coast Conference Club's awards dinner in Washington.

Tatum Booked Up

Tar Heel supporters are looking back on what was a generally successful season, the best since 1949, and its the consensus that the Tar Heels are well on the way back to football prosperity.

Captain Buddy Payne, who concluded his eligibility, had a brilliant season as an end, and shared the team's top honors on all-star selections with tackle Phil Blazer, who has another year here. Both were named on the All-Atlantic Coast Conference team.

Payne caught 12 passes for 204 yards and three touchdowns and was a standout in every game as the Tar Heels won six while losing four. Halfback Dalry Gaff, who also has another year of eligibility, caught 10 passes for 134 yards. Halfback Emil DeCantis and end Mac Turlington were the other top pass catchers, with Turlington, a junior, considered by many to be the most improved player on the squad at season's end.

Fullbacks Lead

Fullback Giles Gaca (4.5) and fullback Ed Lipski (4.1) were the team's top rushers, percentagewise. DeCantis, however, was the busiest workman, running 80 times for 289 yards.

Brightest star to be born during the season was sophomore Jack Cummings who took over the first string quarterback in mid-season and did a tremendous job. Tar Heel supporters believe he is far and away the best North Carolina quarterback since the Justice began using the Split-T.

Cummings passing and kicking proved to be sensational. He threw 74 times with 30 completions for 640 yards and four touchdowns. He averaged 38.4 yards on his punts, a shade behind Don Coker, who kicked 29 times for a 39.5 average. His poise and field generalship was highly impressive.

Frosh Ragged In Opener; Duke Saturday

By DAVE WIBLE

The Tar Baby's cage victory over the High Point College Jayvees Tuesday night was a welcome one, no doubt, but according to freshman coach Ken Rosemond the contest did not indicate how strong his squad would be this year.

"We really could not tell too much about the team since High Point pressed us the whole game," the yearling coach stated. "It turned out to be a ragged affair—both teams doing a lot of running but little real team play."

According to Rosemond, Doug Moe and Tam Shuford did the most outstanding jobs on the hardwood Tuesday. Moe a 6-5 forward was top scorer with 32 points and did a fine job under the backboards. Shuford hit 11 from his guard spot. Rosemond call Shuford the best nonscholarship boy to date.

The Tar Babies first real test and probably their toughest will come Saturday when they play the Duke frosh in Woollen Gym after the varsity contest between Carolina and Clemson. Duke head coach Hal Bradley calls this year's Blue Imp squad his best yet. In a practice game the Duke varsity edged their frosh by only one point.

The Tar Baby depth was greatly strengthened Tuesday when four freshmen footballers exchanged their armor for basketball shoes. Rosemond feels these four, Mike Greenday, Dave Beck, Russ Hollers and John Hickey, will be a big help. He is especially pleased with Greenday whose 6 feet 5 inches is needed to back up the squad's only other big man Hugh Donohue.

Bear Bryant Got Name But Forgot The Cash

DALLAS, Tex., Dec. 4 (AP) —Paul Bear Bryant, new head football coach at the University of Alabama, got his nickname the hard way, and a bear trainer still owes Bryant some money.

Bryant, a native of Fordyce, Ark., had been plowing for 50 cents a day, and when a bear trainer offered $1 a minute for anyone brave enough to wrestle the animal, it loooked like a lot of money.

The coach related that he noted the bear was muzzled.

Bryant said twice he charged the bear and they both went down.

"He got to his feet for the third time," Bryant related, "and I was all set to charge him again.

"Then I felt something kind of warm running down the side of my face. I rubbed my face with my hand and when I looked at it, it was covered with blood.

"I looked at the bear. While we were wrestling, that muzzle came off his mouth.

"That's was enough for me. I jumped out of the ring and ran all the way home.

Not Just Talent

'56-57 Cagers Had Superstitions Too

By BOB MYERS

Skill, height, determination weren't the only qualities that led Carolina's National Champion basketball team to 32 straight wins last season.

There was superstitution and it all comes back now with a new basketball season on the threshold.

There was Pete Brennan's old Buick which the 6'6" forward and other players declared was the good luck charm that made the team unbeatable.

Car Junked

Somewhere in the junk heaps of Chapel Hill are the grotesque remains of Brennan's old car, towed away by the local police department after the miraculous season. For 15 months the thing had rested in front of the UNC Monogram club near Cobb Dormitory where its owner and several other believers in its mystic powers lived.

Shortly after the Tar Heels embarked on the season, police threatened to haul in the delapidated crate, the most immobile mobile in Chapel Hill, but Coach Frank McGuire explained how much the car meant.

Priceless To Team

"It wasn't worth $50 for junk," Brennan said, "but it was worth a million to the team." The good luck charm stayed put.

The night before Carolina was to down neighbor N. C. State 86-57, unidentified persons swabbed N. C. S. in red on the car, but failed in efforts to confiscate the relic because of its dead battery and defective engine.

It is a new season. Carolina puts the old car's unbeaten record on the line against Clemson's Tigers in a regionally televised conference tilt here Saturday, Dec. 7, at 2 p. m. Again the Tar Heels have height, and determination.

And Pete Brennan has a new old car. It's a 1947 Chevrolet that has replaced the old Buick.

Brennan's new car is like Coach McGuire would have his charges operate this season.

Whatley Elected

James Everett Whatley, senior from Atlanta, was elected captain of UNC's track team for the coming season at a squad meeting yesterday afternoon.

Whatley, a distance runner, was the captain of this year's conference champion cross country team.

As a sophomore, he was the third best miler in the conference behind former Tar Heel great Jim Beatty and Maryland's Burr Grim. Last year he was runner-up to Grim in the ACC mile.

Track coach Dale Ranson predicts that the slender Atlantan, who is an English major, will be a 4:10.0 miler this season.

Monogram To Meet

An important Monogram Club meeting is scheduled tonight at 7:30 in the Monogram Club. Track pictures will be taken and all members are urged to attend. Dress for the pictures is white shirt, tie and monogram sweaters.

Female Cage Club

The Women's Basketball Club will meet today at 4:30 in the women's gym. All coeds who are interested are urged to attend this organizational meeting.

Evans Delivers 'State Of Campus' Address To Student Legislature

President's Comments Cover Numerous Topics

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Speaking before the Student Legislature, President of the Student Body Sonny Evans last night delivered his State of the Campus Address, which dealt with problems in seven fields of Student Government.

By a unanimous voice vote the Legislature passed John Brooks' (UP) bill "to establish the N. C. State Student Legislative Delegation of UNC as an independent organization with its members subject to the approval of the Student Legislature of UNC."

The bill as approved was amended by one article which stated, "the UNC delegation to the SSL shall not in any way be considered as officially representing the University or the students attending UNC."

Brooks, who called this bill "a piece of legislation which meets all the requirements" of the SSL Constitution, was the only one to speak on it.

COBB DORM

In speaking on "athletics and housing," his third topic, Evans said, "if you believe that a student is a student first and whatever else he is second, then the segregation of football players is wrong."

Referring to the Negro students who have to live in Steele dorm, he asserted that the "Student Government by its silence sanctions this principle of second class student citizenery."

"Problems such as the drinking rule which undermines the entire Honor system . . ., the discriminatory clause . . ., the presence of book reports and themes . . ., have gone unnoticed by responsible citizens for too long a time," he said in reference to fraternities and

Evans emphasized the need to enlarge the facilities of the present Student Union. He said that the Union had been the "programming arm of the Student Government," and the two do not compete against each other.

"Dormitories should be complete living units, both socially and academically, and they do not fulfill these needs for a variety of reasons," he stated.

NO QUIET HOURS

He listed these as no real quiet hours a lack of counselling for the students in the dorms, the smallness of the Student Affairs Office and a physical plant which needs improving.

"On Friday, we go before the Faculty Council to present a proposal for placing the granting of excuses for illnesses as a matter of honor between the instructor and the student," Evans said.

Evans mentioned these problems with respect to expected increased enrollment and the arrival of a new Chancellor, which has made this year "one of great potentiality."

In concluding Evans said, "It is with great courage of conviction that I have spoken to you tonight on the ways, the only ways, I think we can justify our existence."

The entirety of the address will be published later in The Daily Tar Heel.

The Legislature passed unanimously Al Goldsmith's (UP) and Pat Adams (SP) bill to provide $100 to the National Student Association Committee to defray expenses to the regional assembly.

HOME FOOTBALL GAMES

The body unanimously passed Brooks' bill to appropriate $100 as an honorarium to a team of debaters from Scottish universities.

By special orders the Legislature passed Rudy Edwards' (SP) bill "commending the UNC football team for its victory over Duke." and Caleb Whites' resolution calling for the resumption of classes on Jan. 3 (instead of Jan. 2).

A bill to add "Peanuts" to the comic of The Daily Tar Heel, one to get a street light between Lenoir Hall and Raleigh Road and another to appropriate money to enable the presentation of certificates to freshmen who make the dean's list were all introduced.

Earthquake

A violent earthquake was recorded on the seismograph last night—so violent that a University Geologist said it was impossible to figure out either the direction or the distance to the quake scene.

Earlier experts at the University of California and an Italian observatory had reported a recording of a violent quake. California scientists said the tremor probably centered in North China, and the Italian scientists said the quake jarred their seismograph so they could not determine the direction.

Dr. Gerald R. McCarthy of the UNC Geology Department said the quake was recorded at 10:51 p. m. EST and was so violent that he figured it was either one of the greatest earthquakes the world has felt in many years or was very close.

'Terror'sm'

WASHINGTON (UP) — Chairman McClellan D-Ark said today his Senate Rackets Investigating Commite has evidence of organized terrorism by the Teamsters Union in the Southern states and failure of law enforcement officials to investigate it.

McClellan's assertion was in a statement prepared for the opening of public hearings in which a truck driver who survived a blast of gunfire from ambush was scheduled as a key witness. The driver was identified as Ray Byrd of Batavia, Ohio.

Atomic Ship

LONDON Dec. 5 (UP) — Russia scored another first today, launching the first atomic-powered surface ship.

The 16,000-ton icebreaker Lenin slid down the ways in Leningrad, Moscow radio announced. Shipyard workers had originally hoped to launch it at the time of celebrations Nov. 7 of the Bolshevik Revolution's

Death Toll

LONDON (UP) — Rescue teams tonight removed the last bodies from the wreckage of a disastrous two-train pileup. The immediate death toll was fixed at 84.

Another 174 persons were injured, 107 seriously, in the crash last night of two trains jammed with London commuters and Christmas shoppers.

"FIDELIO" TO BE AIRED

Tomorrow evening "Let's Listen to Opera," the University of North Carolina's Extension Division's weekly complete operatic broadcast, will present Beethoven's "Fidelio" in a recorded performance conducted by the late Arturo Toscanini. Norman Cordon will be the commentator.

PHARMACY WIVES CLUB

The Pharmacy Wives will meet this evening at 8 o'clock in the Institute of Pharmacy to make Christmas favors for the children in the Pediatric Ward at Memorial Hospital.

TO SPEAK HERE—In a news release yesterday from the Carolina Forum, it was announced that Abba Eban, Israeli ambassador to the United States would be brought to the Carolina campus by the Forum.

Carolina Forum Brings Israeli Ambassador Here

Dr. Abba Eban, Israeli Ambassador to the United States since 1950, [illegible] of the speech would probably deal with Israel and the Mid- East.

don on Wednesday, January 8, 1958. Dr. Eban, who will speak at 8 p. m. in Hill Hall, is being brought here as the second presentation of the Carolina Forum.

will deliver an adress in Chapel Hill

"I am glad he is coming; we have been after him for quite a while," said Jim Holmes, chairman of the Carolina Forum.

As to whether the Forum would have an Arab spokesman later in the year to give the Arab point of view, Holmes said it would depend on the subject matter of Eban's speech and popular demand.

Although the Forum schedule is now well set-up, Holmes said, "If there is enough demand for an Arab, we will get one."

He explained that last year, the Forum had tried to bring an Arab spokesman to the campus but had not been able to work it out.

Dr. Eban, a prominent scholar of Middle Eastern Affairs, was born in South Africa. Raised in England, he attended Cambridge University and later became a member of the Cambridge faculty as an authority on Hebrew, Arabic, and Persian literature.

An active member of the Zionist movement, Dr. Eban appeared before the Political Committe of the United Nations in 1949 to plead the case for Israel's admission to the United Nations.

When appointed Ambassador to the United States he was the youngest official to hold a position of such rank and importance in Washington.

The Carolina Forum has invited all students and other interested persons to attend the address and a reception for Dr. Eban, which will be held in Graham Memorial immediately following the speech.

Phi Betes To Initiate 33

Thirty-three juniors, seniors and UNC graduates will be initiated into Phi Beta Kappa honorary fraternity this afternoon at 4:30 in Di Hall, according to Dr. E. L. Mackie, dean of awards.

The names of the 33 will be withheld from publication until after the initiation.

Officers of Phi Beta Kappa will conduct the initiation. The officers are: Graham D. Holding, president; John Agust Mraz, vice-president; George Bryce, recording secretary; and Dr. Mackie, corresponding secretary and treasurer.

Dr. Mackie said 11 of the 33 initiates graduated from Carolina in June or during the summer. The others are members of the junior and senior classes.

Panty Raid Is Topic At IDC Meet

"In the future, IDC members will be present at all panty raids,"

This statement came forth in the discussion by the IDC concerning the recent panty raids on campus. It was not a suggestion of participation, however, nor a condoning of the recent doings.

It was merely a warning that the IDC intends to make a stand and take action against any future such events.

Having been informed by one of its members that the administration is "sort of peeved" that the student government has not taken any de-raids, the IDC moved to adopt a resolution condemning such behavior on the grounds that:

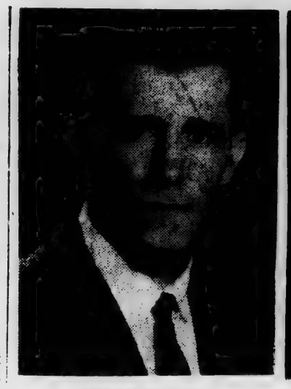
1. They are detrimental to the reputation of the University.
2. They are destructive to personal and public property.
3. They are an infringement on quiet hours.
4. They reflect immature behavior.
5. They are an infraction of the campus code, the University housing regulations ,and often lead to honor code violations.

Also of prime interest to the members of the IDC at the Wednesday meeting was the discusion of plans for the up-and-coming IDC-IWA Dance.



The dance will be in Cobb Basement on Dec. 14. It will last form 8 p. m. until midnight and music and refreshments will be furnished.

Owners May Register Cars

Carolina car owners still can register their automobiles without any penalty, according to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs.

However, after Dec. 10, the Student Traffic Council will begin calling before them students who have not by then registered their cars.

Car registration is being conducted in the Dean of Student Affairs office. It was reported that about 35 cars were registered Wednesday and Thursday.

BUDDY PAYNE

GAIL WILLINGHAM

PETE BRENNAN

Cager Pete Brennan 'Slain'; Buddy Payne Held In Case

Fete Brennan, star forward on the national champion UNC basketball team, was knifed to death last night in front of the Delta Delta Delta sorority house by football star Buddy Payne.

Brennan was pronounced dead on arrival at N. C. Memorial Hospital immediately after the stabbing.

It was the second major blow to Carolina's basketball team this year. Joe Quigg, big 6-7 center, was sidelined for the season two weeks ago with a fractured knee.

Sheriff Carl Churchill arrested Payne on a preliminary charge of murder and said he would hold Payne pending a complete investigation.

Sheriff Churchill said the murder appeared to be caused by jealousy over a coed, Gail Willingham.

Payne told officers he did not bring the knife used in the killing with him. Sheriff Churchill said he searched Payne and found a pistol.

It had not been fired.

Miss Willingham told officers she witnessed the killing. She said she was waiting on the porch of the Tri-Delt house to see Brennan, whom she said she had warned 30 minutes earlier of threatening calls by Payne.

She said Payne and Brennan met on the walk in front of the house, began arguing and wrestled each other to the ground.

Payne came out on top, she sobbed, and both men struggled over possession of the knife.

Survival Subject

Prominent Speakers Being Invited To Symposium Week

By NANCY HILL

"The Dimensions of Survival: American Culture in World Focus" will be the area examined by prominent speakers here next March in the 1958 Symposium on Public Affairs.

The topic was developed by Symposium Program Committee, headed by Jerry Oppenheimer.

In a prospectus published by the Symposium recently, the general topic was outlined in the following categories: Physical Survival, including discussion of the technology of survival and the political strategy of survival; Cultural Survival, including "transmission of our cultural heritage" and "other cultures in relation to our own;" and American Values in Crisis, including "The Fate of the American tradition" and "Religious, moral and ethical values: traditions and change."

DETAILED TOPICS

More detailed topics will include the following: "The Threat of Military Science," "The Promise of Non-Military Science," "A Scientific Program for the Immediate Future," "Organization of Peace and Security," "Our Relations with Allies, Neutrals and Potential Enemies."

Also included will be: "Our Formal Education System," "Our Mass Communication System," "Literature and the Fine Arts." "Political Democracy," "National Security," "Individual Freedom," and "Private Enterprise."

TWELVE SPEAKERS

Twelve principal speakers are being invited to participate in this spring's Symposium, according to Symposium Chairman Sonny Hallford. Hallford stated this week that he anticipates releasing the names of the speakers within the next week.

Approximately 12 additional speakers will participate in the Symposium on the seminar and classroom discussion level, Hallford stated.

The committee on seminar and classroom discussions, headed by John Raper, is working toward a more concentrated series of informal discussions, including prominent off-campus lecturers, than was planned for the 1956 Symposium, Hallford said.

SURVIVAL

Chairman Hallford stated in the prospectus concerning the purpose of this years topic: "The 1958 Symposium is attempting to focus the attention of the University community on the key issue of our times: survival. It will explore the various dimensions of this question, from the point of view of the immediate aspects of the problem and its long-range complexities.

"In the course of Symposium week in March a great variety of distinguished speakers will come to the University campus for seminars, classroom discussions and formal addresses. They will offer a variety of viewpoints. We expect broad participation in these activities by students, faculty and citizens in what we hope will be a most stimulating series of experiences."

WEIL LECTURES

The Symposium will be held in conjunction with the annual Weil Lectures, to be given this year by W. D. Brogan. Brogan's topic will be "Concepts of Citizenship in Britain, France and the United States."

The Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs was first organized in 1956, as a revival and reorganization of the Institute of Human Affairs, which was established in 1927.

The 1956 Symposium had a threefold topic: "Old Problems in the New South." "The Emerging World Community — Problems and Prospects," and "The United States in the World Today."

Carolina Playmakers Begin Work On Third Production

Rehearsals are now in progress for the Carolina Playmakers third production of the theatrical season, "What Every Woman Knows," scheduled for Dec. 11-15 in the Playmakers Theatre.

In this situation comedy of the early 1900's, Robert Kettler, Wyncote, Pa., and Carolyn Myers, Raleigh, take the leading roles. Kettler the play John Shand, a man in the public eye. Miss Myers is Maggie, the woman-behind-the-man.

Others in the cast are Pat Mulvihill, Evanston, Ill., as Alec Wylie, the father of Maggie; Ross Baumstone, Woodside, N. Y., as the brother, David; Harvey Knox, Greensboro, as James Wylie, Maggie's second brother; Taylor Williams, Dunn, as Charles Venable; Lore Schedule, Wadesboro, as Grace; Warren Heeman, Chapel Hill, as Thomas; and Jim Potter, Goldsboro, as Fieke.

Reserved seat tickets for the production are now on sale in the Business Office of the Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall, and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are $1.50.

Victory Village Shelter To Be Built Soon

A shelter will be built for the children in Victory Village, Al Alphin, chairman of the Veterans Affairs in Victory Village Advisory Commission, announced yesterday.

Alphin said that Director of Operations J. S. Bennett said this shelter would be built for the 20 to 25 children who have to await the school bus.

"Something will be done in the next couple of weeks unless something unforeseen comes up," promised Alphin. He explained that Bennett had been tied up recently with the construction of the new dorms.

The State Highway Department has been asked by Bennett to put up some more caution signs in the Victory Village area.

Seventeen Promoted

Federal Inspection Unit Visits AFROTC

The team received a briefing by a board of cadet officers prior to the Parade-Review cermony given for the inspectors at 12:30 on Emerson Field yesterday.

The inspectors will interview detachment and cadet personnel and monitor air science classes during the remainder of their visit.

"The purpose of the federal inspection is to develop and exchange ideas on ways to improve the AFROTC Program and to give the cadets the best possible instruction," an AFROTC spokesman said.

Seventeen Promoted

Seventeen AFROTC cadets have received promotions, the UNC unit announced yesterday.

Promoted from Cadet Captain to Cadet Major are William M. Aldred, Durham; Howard C. Barber, Chapel Hill; Victor K. Goodman, Chapel Hill; and William D. Lackey, Statesville.

Commission

Captain Charles J. Hall, Air Science IV instructor, has been selected to receive a regular commission in the Air Force. He was notified of his promotion by General T. C. Rogers, commandant of the AFROTC, last week.

Captain Hall was selected to receive the commission from thousands of reserve officers of the basis of interest and ability displayed during his Air Force career, said the unit information office .

Democracy, Compromise & What Socialism Could Mean

We were glad to see that the Philanthropic Literary Society turned "thumbs down" on a proposal that the United States assume a socialistic form of government.

Proponent Clarence Simpson, asserting that socialism is the "ideal form of government," said it should be placed into effect in the United States since this country is "tending toward it anyway."

Whether socialism is ideal is, obviously, an academic question, over which some of the world's greatest minds have disagreed. In our own time we have seen political leaders stand to oppose the cancer-like growth of socialism, lest it eat away at the core of our democracy.

The question confronting our nation today, however, is not which of the two forms of government is the most "ideal," but to what extent can they be compromised, while at the same preserving democratic principles and offering the best services to our people.

TVA has its good points, as did much other legislation growing out of the Franklin Roosevelt administration. Indeed, much of FDR's socialistic-tinted legislation has been carried down to the present day, giving to Americans old age benefits and protection from erosion and flood. Yet our democratic way of life has remained in practice.

Nor do we agree with proponent Simpson's assertion that under socialism "you have only one product and that is the best product." The very core of our economic system has been competition within our numerous industries, and the United States can show the world what this competition has wrought.

It appears rather, that democracy offers a prize for personal ambition and expendable energy, while at the same time preserving for the public the ownership and administration of production facilities, although federal regulations are often placed on the goods produced.

Our nation was founded less than 500 years ago. Yet since that time we have plunged to the fore among nations of the world, and stand today as the example of invention and aggression. It was not with a socialistic form of government that this came about.

Economically speaking, socialism is only a step away from communism. The Russians have developed their Sputniks and ICBM's, under the banner of Communism, but all at the expense of the individual, his wants and needs.

Here in America, we haven't a hammer and sickle to wave over the heads of industry. But we do have cars, and homes, and radios, and refrigerators, and telephones, and all those things that are America.

We would prefer to keep it that way, even if we're forced to compromise.

Understanding Of Democracy Comes To Girl

Thursday's mail brought the following letter from Khalil H. Mancy, student at UNC from Cairo, Egypt.

We felt it was worth reprinting here to remind Americans, who sometimes forget the freedom under which they live, that blessings we posses are often yearned for by other peoples.

There's an old saying about not being able to see the forest for the trees. Apparently Miss Mancy has witnessed a broad view of our vast America.

The letter:

"To the U.S.A. To the University of North Carolina.

"Now I can see and understand. I came here to study and learn.

"When first I came, I used to pass all my time among books in the library. Yet I did not understand.

"I used to pass all my time studying and searching in the laboratory. Yet I did not understand.

"At last I have found it.

"I found it in a Thanksgiving party while carving a turkey with my professor.

"I found it in the honor system that gave me much confidence and self-respect.

"I found it in the people, among my colleagues and classmates.

"Now I can touch and feel the true sense of democracy. This is what makes from this nation a great country and this is what makes from this university a great school."

Republicans Have Problems: For '64

Republicans today are probably more worried about what would happen to their own party rather than to the nation's economy if serious illness should force President Eisenhower from the White House.

Some people are saying the Wall Street quotations would plunge downward in event of a serious illness of the President, but everyone knows Richard Nixon would go upward in case of such an occurrence.

That's where the Republican problems begin. For Nixon is apparently being fattened out for the presidential race not only of 1960, but of 1964 as well.

The 22nd amendment, passed during the Truman Administration, prohibits a president from serving over two terms. And it also says that a vice president serving out more than one-half of his predecessor's term shall be considered as having served a whole term.

Thus, if Nixon should be called to the White House before Eisenhower completes at last two years of his current term, the young California Republican will be eligible for only one other presidential election: that of 1960.

And then in 1964 the Republicans will have to turn elsewhere for a candidate whom they had fattened during the Nixon administration—if, indeed, he ever gets to the White House.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Ellis Island, Bob Hope And New Oddities

Whit Whitfield

According to the Associated Press the government has been unable to sell Ellis Island in New York Harbor, and is now willing to give it away if it can be used for a worthwhile purpose. This should prove no problem. There are any number of worthwhile organizations that might be interested in this strategically located piece of real estate.

The Southern Baptist Convention could always use a new place to train missionaries, especially one so near their foreign missions.

The 27 odd acres it encompasses would be just large enough for a casino and night spot, IF the interested parties can afford to move it beyond the limit.

The University might do well to request it for a field headquarters for athletics, and coupled with the previous idea, it would be a perfect place to throw victory celebrations after NCAA championships.

The problem would seem to be not whether the government could get rid of the property, but which organization would use it for the most worthwhile purposes.

Bob Hope is quite concerned with current affairs just like everyone else these days. In a recent TV show, he came out with several gems on the subject (Thanks to his writers). About Dulles: "The United States has every right to feel as proud as Russia. After all, Dulles is two laps ahead of Sputnik." About scientific development: "The United States is really serious about recent developments abroad, so much so that they are pulling the scientists off the Rolaid commercials." About Ike: Eisenhower wants to send a man up in our first satellite, but Faubus won't go."

The Democratic Digest (A prejudiced mag) has complimented Vice-President Nixon for realizing the present danger of Soviet advances and asks, "Does his 20-20 hindsight qualify him as a national leader in these fast moving times?" This is an excellent question, and we'd like to answer it objectively, showing no partisanship, prejudice, or bias. In a word, NO.

Believe it or not: Mrs. Catherine Withers, a 60 year old clerk in a Philadelphia shop, told a would-be holdup man (complete with mask and gun) to get out. He did.

Again: When 3-year-old George Wilkins' mother found him playing with matches in the Wilkins home in San Antoni, Tex., she picked him up to warm his seat. She didn't have to. It already was warm. Matches in Georgie's hip pocket had set his pants on fire!

Will The United States Experience Downfall Similar To Roman Empire?

Editor:

Is our inevitable destiny to be the same as that of Greece and Rome? It seems that we have been in our Arete Pride, and now we are rapidly moving through our Hubris Down Fall. Is our Nemesis Grief now as inevitable as the night after twilight?

What is this terrible thing that hangs over us like a shroud? Why do we, the people-the benefactors of the greatest democracy the world has ever known, stand idly by and let our life, liberty and pursuit of happiness be trampled under the hoof of stupidity, intolerance and Red aggression?

The answer! it must be found.

Are we to continue to travel the downward path to depravity and destruction? There isn't one single answer. We can't blame a 'golf ball completely, but unless we have someone to stop this senseless petty babbling between the arm forces and insignificant piddling of our Government, we certainly won't need to worry about it.

When the U. S. allowed a balding egghead in Russia to stir up the biggest weakness within our country, the segregation problem, and then fell for this, the oldest of tricks, it was set back in the eyes of the world at least thirty years.

Each and every day the newspapers and the educators scream out to us that Russia is graduating at least two physicists to our one each year. We must stop this. God help us if we don't.

Some of the questions can be answered. First we must have a strong man to lead us, a man who can say something and then back it up. We can not intercept a Ballistics Missile with a golf ball.

I want to cry out in rage and frustration when I look around me at the vacant and unknowing and seemingly uncaring faces of these desecrators of freedom.

If we don't put a stop to this wishy-washy leadership and our panty-waist politicians we, in all probability, will never see another election.

Pretty speeches and patriotic words are very inspirational, but they won't stop an atomic warhead.

The biggest answer isn't located at the top. It is in the grammar schools. Let's give our world a chance. We must have a new educational system. Let's start those physics and science courses early. The young minds are alert and can grasp it. We must not wait until they become set in their ways, it only makes it harder to learn. In all fairness to our very existance, the keen minds must have a chance. I do not wish to advocate a socialistic school system, but I do advocate control, firmess and seriousness in the schooling of the younger generation. If this isn't done they will never live to be an older generation.

It is a common belief that Russia holds back her war forces out of fear of the U. S. I think this is a complete fallacy. It appears to me that Baldy realizes that if we continue our backward movement, he will have much less trouble in a few years. Stop, think, we must awaken now lest we sleep forever. Please! let's stop our Hubris.

If we expect our children to be raised in a democratic nation (if they are raised at all), we can not, we must not allow a race of people, (who in actuality are better off as they are), along with conflict between the arm forces and dissension in our government, destory us.

We must look to the East and straighten up and face the situation. If we don't show the world that we can control our civil strife as well as any other aggression that threatens us, we can only follow the age-old pattern and our Nemesis will envelop us.

Let us, for our sakes and the sake of all humanity, reorganize our educational system, get our (elected) leaders off the golf links and the plush leather chairs, and prepare to fight fire with fire or we will be the only ones to be burned. If we can discipline ourself we can control any situation. "For God's sake," let's open our eyes and put our foot down. We can stop the pattern; Aret'e, Hubr.....!

Grown-Ups And The Little Prince

Frank Crowther

While rumaging through Saint-Exupery's The Little Prince, looking for a certain passage during the post holiday, I became possessed again by this gentle little fellow and his adventures, so I sat down and re-read the entire fantasy. (excuse me!)

Antoine de Saint-Exupery was a French author and aviator who spent a great deal of his life behind the controls of an airplane above Europe, Africa and South America. Some of his other works are as intriguing and captivating as Le Petit Prince; they include "Night Flight," "Flight To Arras," "The Wisdom of The Sands," and "Wind, Sand and Stars." Saint-Exupery was listed as missing in action while on a flying mission in 1944. He had written "The Little Prince" just a little more than a year previously.

Quoting from the jacket cover:

"The Little Prince lived alone on a tiny planet no larger than a house. He possessed three volcanoes, two active and one extinct, although, one never knows about volcanoes. He also owned a flower, unlike any flower in all the Galaxy, of great beauty and of inordinate pride. It was this pride that ruined the serenity of the Little Prince's world and started him on the travels that brought him at last to the Earth where he learned finally, from a fox, the secret of what is really important in life.

"There are a few stories which in some way, in some degree, change the world forever for their readers. This is one."

The story was told by an aviator who had made a forced landing on the Sahara desert and was faced with repairing his crippled engine. He was a thousand miles from help and running out of water. He was awakened one morning by an odd little voice which said: "If you please—draw me a sheep!" This was the beginning of his short acquaintance with the laughing little man who had golden hair and refused to answer questions.

The Little Prince was an inquisitive soul who couldn't quite understand grown-ups—he thought them very, very odd. After reading his story, we, too, might well think them extraordinary and odd. The following are just a few of his perplexing encounters with all sorts of creatures during his year away from his own planet.

On the second planet, the Little Prince met a conceited man who had a hat for salutes. He asked the Little Prince to clap his hands so that he could raise his hat in salute. The young prince did so, but then asked, "And what should one do to make the hat come down?" The man didn't hear him, however, for "conceited people never hear anything but praise."

On the next planet he met a tippler who was sitting in deep dejection.

"Why are you drinking?" demanded the Little Prince.

"So that I may forget," replied the tippler.

"Forget what," inquired the Little Prince, who already was sorry for him.

Forget that I am ashamed," the tippler confessed, hanging his head.

"Ashamed of what?" insisted the Little Prince, who wanted to help him.

"Ashamed of drinking!"

The Little Prince again thought that grown-ups certainly were very, very odd.

Later, the Little Prince came to the planet Earth, which is inhabited by two billion (now 2½ billion) people who could easily be put together in one public square twenty miles square. "The grown-ups, to be sure, will not believe you when you tell them that. They imagine that they fill a great deal of space . . . You should advise them to make their own calculations. They adore figures, and that will please them."

The first creature the Little Prince encountered was a snake. "Where are the men?" (he asked) "It is a little lonely in the desert. . . ."

"It is also lonely among men," the snake said.

After meeting a whole garden of roses, all similar to the rose on his planet, he met a fox who wanted the Little Prince to tame him.

"One only understands the things one tames," said the fox. "Men have no more time to understand anything. They buy things all ready made at the shops. But there is no shop anywhere where one can buy friendship, and so men have no friends any more." After taming the fox, the Little Prince had to leave. This saddened the fox, but he said that he would make his friend a present of a secret. "And now here is my secret, a very simple secret: It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye." This especially impressed the young prince. "Men have forgotten this truth," said the fox. The Little Prince repeated it to himself so that he would be sure to remember.

After a year, the Little Prince wanted to return to his own planet, so . . . . but I won't tell you the end of the tale. That always ruins a story. Anyhow, those of us who have already read the story know how it ends, and if we have forgotten, we can always go back and read it again. And for those who haven't read about our Little Prince, I certainly hope that you can find time to put down your facts and figures for a moment to take this trip on the desert. But, if you cannot, that is alright. We will know that you are busy with matters of consequence and we will not hold it against you. After all, we children "should always show great forbearance toward grownup people."

Sorbonne Scholar To Lecture Here Today

For the first time in this area, a French scholar from the Sorbonne will deliver a series of lectures here.

Prof. Raymone Lebegue of the University of Paris will be featured in three lectures, the first one of which will be held this morning at 10 o'clock.

Prof. Lebegue is considered one of the outstanding world authorities on French Renaissance literature. His visit to UNC is being sponsored by the Department of Romance Languages.

His first lecture this morning in 215 Murphy will be: "Comment Chateaubriand a presente l'Amerique aux Francais." This lecture and the other two will be in French.

Tonight at 11 o'clock in the assembly room of the Library, Prof. Lebegue will speak on "La Farce en France, de Pathelin a Moliere." The concluding lecture will be held Saturday morning in the assembly room of the Library when Prof. Lebegue will discuss "Erasme et Rabelais."

The University of Paris professor is currently a visiting professor at New York University.

While in Chapel Hill, Prof. Lebegue and his wife will be guests of Dr. W. L. Wiley, of the UNC Department of Romance Languages, and Mrs. Wiley. Dr. Wiley had met Prof. Lebegue previously and was instrumental in bringing the French Renaissance literature authority here.

Prof. Lebegue arrived here last night and will stay through Sunday.

Dean Of Women To Attend Inauguration

Dean Katherine Carmichael will represent the University at the inauguration of her cousin as president of Converse College in Spartanburg, S. C.

UNC's Negative, Affirmative Debate Squads Active In Two-Day Tournament At Wake Forest

The UNC affirmative and negative debating squads will be at Wake Forest College today and tomorrow for the annual Dixie Classic Debate Tournament.

Thirteen other colleges and universities in the country are expected to send teams to the tournament.

The UNC teams are composed of Tolm Long and John Brooks, affirmative, and Bill Willis and Glenn A. Price, negative.

The topic for debate is: "Resolved: That the requirement of membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment should be illegal."

Other college and universities participating in the tournament include: Notre Dame University, University of Florida, University of Miami, University of South Carolina, Howard University of Birmingham, Ala.; University of Pittsburgh;

Duke University, Wake Forest College, University of Richmond, George Washington University, Wisconsin State College, Ohio State University and Brigham Young University.

The tournament today and tomorrow is the first varsity debate tournament the UNC squad has sent representatives to this year.

WUNC-TV To Give Aid In Basketball Airing

Chapel Hillians and students who see the familiar WUNC-TV mobile studio parked down at Woollen Gymnasium for the first two Carolina home basketball games may expect to see the games on Channel Four. But it won't work that way.

Actually, WUNC-TV is providing the equipment and production staff for nine of the Saturday afternoon games in the Atlantic Coast Conference. But the University station here is not a part of the 20-station network carrying the games, since they are being sponsored commercially.

The schedule calls for commercial telecasts of four Tar Heel games, three of them from Woollen Gymnasium.

WUNC-TV plans two Channel Four basketball telecasts of its own, using the "broadvision" system. Plans are not yet complete, however, and no announcement can be made at this time.

Sure we want you . . .

IF

IF you show potential for success in your field

Union Carbide's engineers and scientists are among the best in industry—and we need top engineering and science graduates to move up with them as Union Carbide expands.

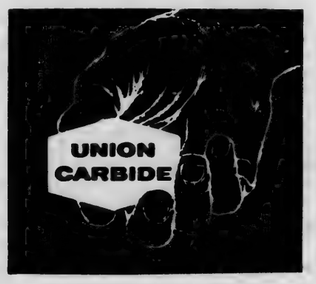
IF you're anxious to increase your skills and knowledge

Nuclear energy, extremes of heat, cold, pressure, and vacuum—Union Carbide people work with these basic tools over the entire scale of the physical sciences.

IF you can co-operate with others to get a job done

Union Carbide people extend the frontiers of science through teamwork—yet, since technical teams are small, you can achieve individual recognition early in your career.

IF you want to do what's expected of you — and more



Union Carbide people like their work, and consistently do more than is expected of them. They develop new products at the rate of two a month—and the rate is accelerating.

ENGINEERS—SCIENTISTS

Do you fit the bill? If so, we'd like to hear from you. There's a place for you at Union Carbide, helping to shape the future in alloys, carbons, chemicals, gases, plastics, or nuclear energy.

We have important openings for liberal arts and business school graduates as well.

Representatives of Divisions of Union Carbide Corporation, listed at right, will be interviewing on many campuses. Check your placement director, or write to the Division representative. For general information, write to V. O. Davis, 30 East 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

Tar Heel Lineup Not Set As Yet

Who's going to start tomorrow?

That seem's to be the question on everybody's mind as the Carolina Tar Heels begin defense of their national basketball title tomorrow afternoon against Clemson. It's probably a question that won't be answered until two o'clock tomorrow because Coach Frank McGuire probably hasn't decided himself.

Of course, Pete Brennan, Tommy Kearns and Bob Cunningham will take the floor at the tapoff of the 1957-58 season before a large regional television audience, but the other two starters are a mystery to Tar Heel followers.

McGuire has said all along that the first few games would have to be used for experimentation and he'll probably juggle his lineup considerably tomorrow.

SI Carries Big Spread On 'Dixie's Yankee Hero'

The latest issue of 'Sports Illustrated' has a tremendous spread about the Tar Heels in general and McGuire in particular. The article is titled: 'Dixie's Yankee Hero.'

Gerald Holland, the writer of this fine story, points out some of the trials and tribulations that the Smiling Irishman has encountered and overcome since his arrival here, and he throws in a few witticisms for which McGuire is famous.

The article gives a vivid description of the congenial Tar Heel coach and tells of some of the highlites of his coaching career. It points out that McGuire was quick to chose Buck Freeman as his basketball assistant here because Freeman was what he described as a "basketball genius" and he wanted him here "even if I have to pay him out of my own pocket."

Holland says that McGuire has dignity and humility and adds that, for him, politness comes as natural as breathing.

When the Tar Heels won the national championship last March, 'Sports Illustrated' gave them very poor recognition. Now, however, all is forgiven.

Minor Sports Season Continues

Wrestling, indoor track and swimming now occupy the minor sports scene at Carolina and all have the potential of another banner season.

The wrestlers, varsity and frosh, begin their season tonight against Virginia and meet Washington and Lee tomorrow night. The swimmers, under new coach Pat Earey, were undefeated last year and have the nucleus of another fine team this season. They open Monday night against East Carolina here.

Christy Deserved All-American Recognition

The Associated Press was wise in choosing Dick Christy to its first string All-American team. Christy is one of the finest ball players to perform in this area in a long time. Bill Workman, writing in the Charleston News and Courier, had this as his lead paragraph after Christy had scored 29 points to lead State over South Carolina, 29-26:

We do believe, however, that Carolina end Buddy Payne was overlooked when he was given only an honorable mention. Phil Blazer also received honorable mention.

Deacs Dubbed With Dubious Distinction

Dubious distinction department: Wake Forest came up with two gridiron records this year which it would just as soon forget. It was the worst record in the 69-year history of the school (0-10) and the '56 team gave up more points than any other Deacon team. The Baptist also tied the all-time mark for the least points scored in a season. Nothing to dance about, that's for sure.

According to a press release from Duke, Bob Vernon a senior Blue Devil guard is the possessor of "the best jump shot in the ACC. "That's a matter for conjecture.

Tallest man on the Carolina varsity cage squad is sophomore center Dick Kepley who stands at 6'9. Senior Tommy Kearns and sophomore John Crotty are the shortest at 5'11.

Last season's fabulous basketball team set 20 major records on the way to its 32-straight victories. Practically all the individual marks were set by now departed Lennie Rosenbluth.

Most improved player vote: Ed Sutton, former Carolina halfback now with the Washington Redskins. It was doubtful at the first of the season that Ed would make the grade with the 'Skins. Now the former Morehead Scholar is right in the running for Rookie of the Year in the NFL.

REPRINT RIGHTS SOLD

The University Press has just sold the Dutch and Japanese translation rights of their best seller "Bridge To The Sun" by Gwen Terasaki. "Bridge To The Sun" will be made into a major movie by Paramount in 1958. The book was featured in the September issue of the Readers' Digest. "Bridge To The Sun" has been on national best sellers lists since its publication in early September; it is now in its third printing.

Grapplers Open At Virginia Tonight

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The varsity and freshman wrestling teams open their seasons this weekend with two meets in Virginia. Tonight both squads take on the Cavaliers of Virginia at Charlottesville. Saturday the teams journey over to Lexington to meet Washington and Lee.

Coach Sam Barnes' team opens a ten meet schedule with this weekends matches. The varsity will have four matches before the Christmas holidays, but it will not open at home until January against N. C. State.

Hoke Is Captain

Captain Ken Hoke and five other mat lettermen will lead the Tar Heels into their opener. Two sophomores, Curt Champlin and J. W. Welborn, will wrestle at 123 and 147 respectively. The other division will be filled by veterans Hoke, Henry Rhyne, Perrin Henderson, David Atkinson, Robert Boyette, and Ray Russell. Jack Gray was scheduled to wrestle at heavyweight, but a sprained knee will keep him out of the lineup this weekend.

Freshman coach Jim Carse will send a team of seven into the two matches. Chip Woodrow, Peter Marks, and John Henderson will wrestle in the three lightest divisions. Phil Davis starts at 147 followed by David Turnbull, Jean Donohue, and John Matney in the heavied classes. Frank Walker will make the trip as an alternate.

Mermen Begin Monday Night

By MAC MAHAFFEY

Carolina's swimmers open their 1957 season here Monday afternoon in the Bowman Gray Indoor Pool against a strong East Carolina College team. E. C. C. won the Small School Championships last year at Illionis and should give the Tar Heels a good race.

Good Practice

Pre-season workouts have gone well and spirits are high as the team awaits its opening meet with East Carolina, with their eyes set on another undefeated season and ACC Championships.

The Freshman swim team opens it season Monday also, when they will go to meet Staunton, Virginia. This year's freshman team is reportedly "located" and should turn in a record that will stand well beside its varsity teammates.

Track Preparations

Carloina tracksters have exchanged their cross-country spikes for soft soled sneakers as they moved indoors this week to prepare for the indoor track season.

Actually there is no real indoor season since there are no officially scheduled meets, but the Tar Heels will meet Duke, State, and Wake Forest informally several times this winter. In the ACC, indoor track has only one official meet and that colorful ACC indoor track championships to be held here March 1.

For the next three months, Coach Dale Ranson and company will be making preparations to win the ACC title—which was taken last year by Maryland. Ranson has invited anyone who is interested in trying out for the indoor teams to come t the 4 o'clock workouts in the Tin Can.

Tar Heels' Statistics Show Cummings Tops

By BILL KING

Jack Cummings, a fellow who came on fast midway the past season, emerged as the most valuable ground- producer among the Carolina Footballers, the final seasonal record shows.

Halfbacks Daley Goff and Emil De Cantis fought a close battle for individual rushing honors with Goff coming off on top with a net of 272 yards in 69 carries for an average of 3.9. DeCantis carried 80 times for 269 yards and a per carry average of 3.3. Fullback Giles Gaca had the best pecentage among the Tar Heel rushers garnering 156 yards in 35 tries for a 4.5 percentage.

Lipski Second

Alternate fullback Ed Lipski was second, percentage-wise, carrying 50 times for 205 yards and a 4.1 average. Quarterback Curt Hathaway's 3.9 was third best. Other leading ground gainers were: Jim Schuler (152), Don Coker (135) and John Haywood. (69).

A three-way tie resulted in total points scoring between end Buddy Payne, Gaca and Goff, each gathering 18 points. Tackle Phil Blazer had 13 points on 15 extra point attempts for second place in the scoring column. Schuler, DeCantis and Dave Reed each scored twelve points for the Tar Heels.

Payne was also the top receiver, grabbing 12 passes for a total of 204 yards. End Mac Turlington was second with eight catches for 167 yards.

Individual punting honors went to Coker who booted 20 times for 791 yards, and a 39.5 average. Cummings was close behind with 883 on 23 kicks and a 38.4 percentage.

Procedure Inverted; Frosh Cagers Will Follow Varsity

Carolina's national champion basketball Tar Heels put their 32-game winning streak on the line in their opening game of the new season in Woollen gymnasium here Saturday afternoon when they meet the Clemson Tigers.

LENNIE ROSENBLUTH
They'll Miss Him

The 2 p.m. game is an experiment and something new in this area, being the first of the ACC regionally televised contests.

A freshman game between Carolina and Duke will follow the varsity engagement in the second part of a doubleheader. The Tar Babies opened their season earlier this week with an 84-75 victory over the High Point College Jaycees when Doug Moe of Brooklyn was the scoring star with 32 points.

The three sure starters for Carolina in the varsity game are foward Pete Brennan and guards Tommy Kearns and Bob Cunningham, who are the three returning members of the starting team of last season.

Joe Quigg had expected to be in that group, but he sustained a fractured leg in pre-season practice and is out for the season. High scoring Lennie Rosenbluth finished his eligibility last season and is now with the professional Philadelphia Warriors.

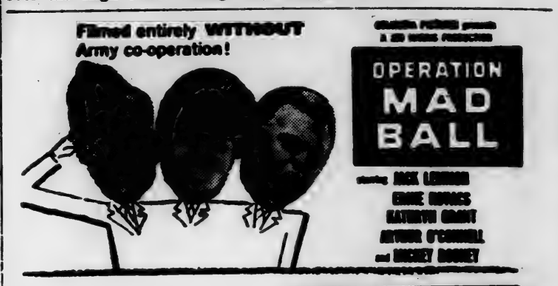
A Campus-to-Career Case History

"I looked at all the angles"

Howard R. Winter, B.B.A., Texas A. & M., '51, is now a Commercial Manager with Southwestern Bell Telephone Company in Houston, Texas. He's in charge of 30,000 telephone accounts and a staff of 36 people.



Howard's interest in a telephone career dates from his first interview with a telephone company representative. "I looked at all the angles," he says. "We discussed pay and chances for advancement, which looked excellent because of the rapid growth of the Bell System. We talked about many different kinds of work, and about what would be expected of me."

After receiving his degree in business administration, Howard joined Southwestern Bell's Commercial Department. "It was natural for me," he says. "I have a business background, I like to sell and make contacts.

"My training gave me a really solid foundation in the business. Two years in the Army interrupted it, by the way, but the two years were credited to my telephone company records and count toward all benefits. After I'd returned and finished my training, I was made a business office supervisor. And since February, 1956, I've been a Commercial Manager in Houston. Each assignment I've had has been a real challenge and has presented a tremendous opportunity to contribute to and advance in the business."

Be sure to investigate the career opportunities for you in the 17 Bell Telephone Companies serving all 48 states. On your campus the local company represents the others. National Cage Champs Open Season Here This Afternoon

Clemson Is First Foe For Tar Heels

By BILL KING

Carolina's magnificent national basketball champions will initiate the 1957-58 season against the Clemson Tigers here this afternoon before a capacity crowd in Woollen Gym and a large regional television audience. Tapoff is set for two o'clock.

With the inception of the new season, the Tar Heels extend a 32-game win challenge to Press Maravick's veteran Tigers in the unveiling of the 1957-58 edition of basketball a lar Tar Heelia.

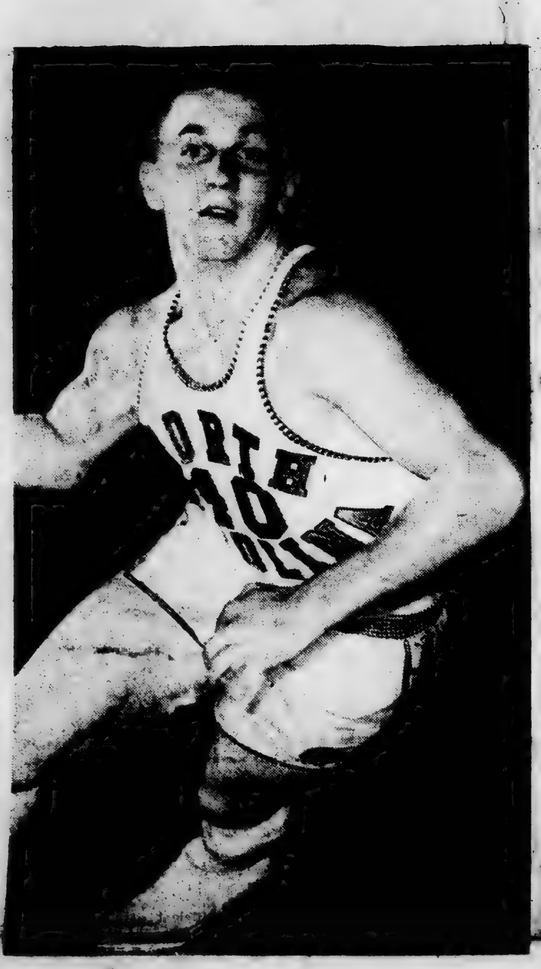
All basketball eyes in the land will be interested in the activities in this basketball-mad little village today as every team in the nation lieks its chops to get a crack at the enough to win the conference high flying charges of the Smiling championship.

Irishman, Coach Frank McGuire.

McGuire Philosophical

McGuire is philosophical about the entire situation. He's already averred that the loss of center Joe Quigg has desiccated his club's chances of repeating as national champs and gives strong indication that he figures to lose several games this year by stating that about a 9-5 record will be good

But Tar Heel followers can't go along with McGuire in this respect. They have taken the "show me" attitude, figuring the Tar Heels to be just about as strong and looking for another great season.



The loss of Quigg and the graduation of All-American Lennie Rosenbluth has depleted considerably the Tar Heel's stock of veteran material, but a host of highly-rated sophomores give Tar Heel followers occasion to smile.

Trio To Start

McGuire, 'Coach of the Year' last season, is looking at things with a cautious eye. He knows he has the material but is convinced that it will have to develop with actual game experience. Thus the friendly Tar Heel chieftain will begin an experimentation period this afternoon which he figures will last through December and part of January. He'll be juggling his lineup considerably in an attempt to come up with the "right" combination.

The only good thing about this afternoon's game is that it will be played and that veterans Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns will be in the starting lineup. After that, the matter of a starting five is left to the element of conjecture.

ALL-AMERICAN CANDIDATE—Tommy Kearns, 5-11 guard from Bergenfield, N. J. will begin his final season for Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Teels against Clemson here today. Kearns has been named to several pre-season All-American teams and is expected to lead the Tar Heels in defense of their national cage title.

Sam Magill To Instruct In Spring

Dr. Bernard Boyd, Chairman of the Department of Religion, announced today that Samuel (Sam) Hayes Magill, Director of student activities, will teach Religion 31 in the spring semester.

The course, "Christian Ethics and Modern Problems," is a consideration of the relevance of the Christian faith to problems of war and peace, economic enterprise, marriage and the family, and the functions of the state and international organization in he contemporary scene.

Magill graduated from UNC in 1950 and received his Bachelor of Divinity in Christian Ethics at Yale Divinity School in 1953. Shortly afterwards he was ordained minister of the Congregational Christian Church.

While a student at UNC, he was a star athlete in track and cross-country, president of the YMCA, member of the Order of Grail and Delta Psi social fraternity and received the Algernon Sidney Sullivan Award at graduation.

In 1953 he took a job as secretary of the YMCA at Davidson and in 1955 joined the UNC faculty.

This will be the first time he has taught this course here. It will be offered Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 9 a. m.

Phi Beta Kappa Initiates 33 In Ceremonies Here Yesterday

Phi Beta Kappa initiated 33 new members into the honorary scholarship fraternity here yesterday afternoon. Another honorary member's name was included on the list of initiates, but he was not present for the ceremonies.

Of the 33 initiated, 23 are from North Carolina. John Motley Morehead of New York City was initiated previously as an honorary member, but his name appeared on the list of members in the annual fall initiation yesterday.

Other Phi Beta Kappa officers this year are: John A. Mraz, vice-president; George W. Bryce, recording secretary; and Dr. E. L. Mackie, corresponding secretary and treasurer.

The new members tapped yesterday included:

Charles Harwood Bowman Jr., Southern Pines; Eppie Bennett Cox, Aurora; George Thomas Davis, Burlington; Dickson Brown Dunlap and Donald Lee Hardison, Chapel Hill; Ann Garner Eastman, Morehead City.

Ernest Kelly James Jr. and Elbert Richard Jones Jr., Winston-Salem; Harllee Wingate Lyon, Plymouth; Charles Rex O'Briant, Bunnlevel; Ann T. Powell, Durham; Sylvia Lorraine Phillips, Greensboro; Hoyle Lynwood Robinson, Ellerbe; Margaret Ellen Summerell, Gastonia; Michael Spencer Tanner, Rutherfordton.

Albert Marvin Waitman, Fayetteville; Verna Mae Brimm, Louisville, Ky.; Wilson R. Cooper Jr., Signal Mountain, Tenn.; Catherine D. Frost, Florence, Ala.; Susan Rosalie Gichner, Washington, D C.; Lois Naefach Glasser, Silverton, Ohio; Mary Laurin Gravely, Ringgold, Va.; Dana Tune Fryer, Chatham, Va.; Robert August Rechholtz, Syossett, L. I., N. Y.; Gary Ray Smiley, Spartanburg, S. C.; and John A. Sneden Jr., Tenafly, N. J.

The next initiation of new members will take place in May.

Death Came At 10:50

Manning County Sheriff Gives Details In 'Knifing'

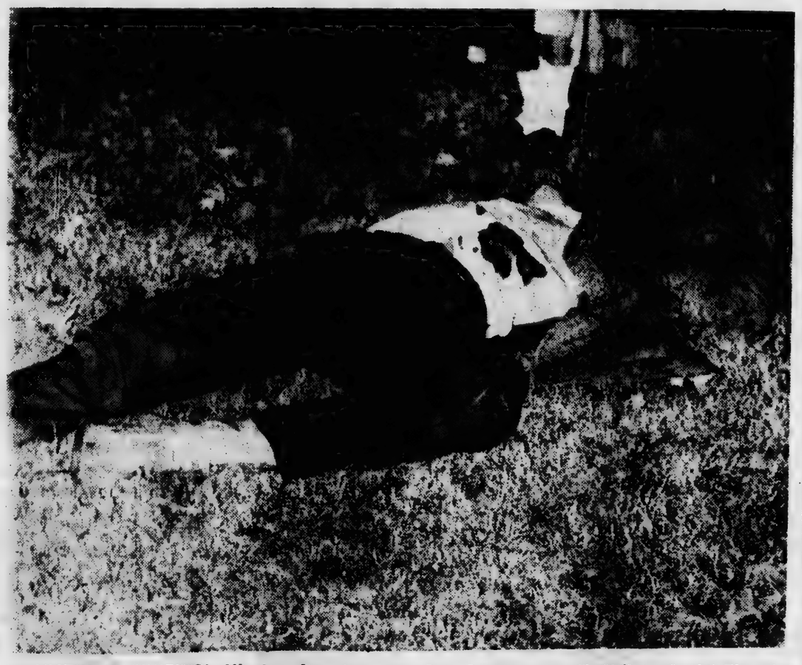
By ED ROWLAND

Pete Brennan scrimmaged with the varsity basketball team against the freshmen for over an hour before he was knifed to death in front of the Delta Delta Delta Sorority house Thursday, Manning County Sheriff Carl Churchill said yesterday.

The sheriff said Brennan left Woollen Gym approximately at 10:30 p. m., and apparently went immediately to the sorority house house on Pittsboro St.

The county medical examiner placed the time of death at 10:50 p. m. Thursday.

Sheriff Churchill said Brennan evidently was going to see Gail Willingham, campus homecoming queen and member of Delta Delta Delta, with whom he had been seen in the past few weeks.



As Brennan approached the house, he was met by Buddy Payne, star football player who has been seen in the company of Miss Willingham during the fall.

Miss Willingham was standing on the porch of the house and told Sheriff Churchill she saw a struggle between the two men. She said Payne fell to the ground on top of Brennan and a few seconds later Payne alone arose.

The medical examiner said Brennan's death was caused by a knife wound in the chest.

Payne was scheduled to be arraigned before a magistrate in a preliminary hearing today.

The event is part of the annual Mock Trial sponsored by Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity.

Moore Ineligible For 'Judith'

Actor's Withdrawal From UNC Cited As Reason For Decision

By CURTIS GANS

Harry Moore, 22, ex-graduate art student from Elizabethtown, has been ruled ineligible to participate in the Petite Dramatique production of "Judith," to be held in Graham Memorial's main lounge Sunday and Monday nights.

The initial ruling was handed down by Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver on Wednesday, after Moore had voluntarily withdrawn as a student at the University. He had been a student here since the first session of summer school.

HARRY MOORE

Chancellor William B. Aycock said in an interview yesterday that he, as chancellor of the University, takes full responsibility for Weaver's action.

Aycock said that Moore's withdrawal from the University was the generating circumstance for the action, and added that once Moore had voluntarily withdrawn he was no longer a student, and hence had no right to participate in student activities.

Weaver Comments

Weaver, commenting at the same interview, said that the policy of the University is that student activities exist for student participation, and it is student money that finances these activities.

Aycock said the fact that Moore is a non-student Negro was another factor in his decision. Aycock added that either factor—that Moore is an ex-student or that he is a non-student Negro—taken separately would have prohibited Moore's performance.

Both factors, taken together, were considered in the decision, Aycock said. He said, however, that there was no written policy concerning persons outside the university proper.

Moore Appeals

Moore has asked Consolidated University President William Friday for a ruling on whether there is any way Moore can participate in the production. Friday deferred ruling and statement until he confers with Chancellor Aycock and has become acquainted with the facts of the matter.

Moore said he might appeal an adverse decision to the board of trustees if time permits.

Seamon Gottlieb, producer of the play, said the play will be put on as scheduled, and that David Small, senior Playmaker who participated in "Brigadoon" and "Peer Gynt" last year will take Moore's place in event Moore is not in the play.

Hauser Case Cited

Dean Weaver cited, in support of the ruling, the case of Chuck Hauser, a student who had with drawn from the University and continued to write for the Daily Tar Heel. As soon as the administration was notified of Hauser's withdrawal, he was ordered to cease his extra-curricular University activities.

When asked about the fact the ten-year-old Mike Okun was in the play and is not a student, Aycock said that the ruling was on the basis of Moore's being an "ex-student."

However, he added that at the present time he felt the University would not feel free to have a Negro who was not a student participate in student activities. He further said that within the framework of University rules Negro students are given equal rights and privileges.

Statement Given

Commenting on the administration ruling, Moore stated, "I am no longer a student in this university; therefore, I may no longer participate in any extra-curricular activities of the university. This is the standing decision of the University as of this moment, and I must accept it. I should like to make my basic position clear, as follows:

"For several reasons, I have a deep personal desire to continue in "Judith." I like the play, and I feel a deep responsibility to the current production. Also, in the course of a month of almost constant contact with the cast, I

Bill Condemning SSL Is Debated By Legislature

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The only motion to cause debate at the Student Legislature meeting Thursday night was one by John Brooks (SP) to bring Charlie Gray's (UP) bill concerned with the conduct of SSL out of committee.

Gray's resolution would condemn the SSL for it stand on interracial marriage and would repudiate any claim that "the State Student Legislature is truly representative of the student bodies of its participating schools."

Brooks argued that the legislature had already made a stand concerning the State Student Legislature when it passed his bill which made the SSL delegation subject to its approval.

Jack Lawing (UP), chairman of the ways and means commitee, said he tought the bill could be "salvaged" and that the bill was too involved for the Legislature acting as a committee to work on.

He asserted that the changing of the bill was rightfully the work of his committee and that was the reason that his committee was created.

Brooks claimed that the Way and Means committee had done all it was going to do.

Criticizing two points in the bill, he said the bill condemned a particular stand of which the Legislature did not know the full details and it made claims for UNC as well as all the other schools participating in the SSL.

"I think the bill is a little superficial," he said and stated that his bill and Gray's bill were rather similar in the purposes behind them.

Lawing and Tally Eddings (SP), a member of the ways and means committee both said that they had not completed working on the bill.

Pat Adams (SP) said that some of the timeliness of the bill had gone although the issue was still somewhat alive now.

Al Goldsmith (UP) said that the Ways and Means committee might make it a more acceptable bill and that Charlie Gray, who was absent because of a quiz, should have a chance to speak on the bill.

Brooks' motion failed, and the bill will come before the legislature at the next meeting.

Adams introduced a bill to appropriate $28.75 to the Dean of Awards. The money will be used to print names on certificates to be given to freshman who make the dean's list twice.

The certificates have been printed for semesters, but all the money the Legislature appropriated at that time was used to print the certificates and none was left to pay for printing the names.

If the bill is passed, sophomores who made the dean's list twice last year will be given a certificate this year. From then on the certificates will probably be presented in September.

Glee Club To Sing At Game

The UNC Men's Glee Club will add a little spice to the initial performance of the Tar Heel basketball team today.

They will fill the gymnasium with music at the onset of the game and will provide harmonious entertainment at the halftime.

The 60-voiced group will render three or four numbers, including "Climbin' Up De Mountain," a Negro spiritual and "Down Among The Dead Men," an English drinking song.

"Hark the Sound" will be sung before the beginning of the game

Faculty Gets Five-Point Excuse Plan

A five-point proposal designed to revise the present system of granting excuses was presented to the faculty council yesterday by Student Body President Sonny Evans, Vice President Don Furtado and Honor Council Chairman George Ragsdale.

The Council voted to appoint a committee to investigate the proposals. No other formal action was taken on the bill.

The proposal presented to the group suggested that: "The present system of issuing class excuses be abolished.

"That the person who grants the excuse from a given class shall be the instructor of the class.

"That the 'official' excuse from any other person or office shall be required by the instructor.

"That the instructor shall accept, as official, the word of the person who seeks the excuse.

"That the office (s) which now have the authority to grant excuses shall retain that authority si that it may be exercised whenever it shall, for any reason, become necessary."

Evans pointed out that this basically is the same as the present rule, except that the infirmary and the deans' offices would be relieved of the extra load of handling excuses and the matter would be handled personally between the student and instructor.

Dr. E. McG. Hedgpeth, University physician, told the group that he knew of at least one institution where removal of restrictions brought an infirmary case level drop of 2,000. He did not name the institution.

Dr. C. A. Cathey asked if the change would not bring about "unlicensed practice of medicine in the dormitory" and cause some students to refrain from going to the infirmary when they need professional treatment.

Evans said he had called Dr. Hedgpeth about this and said the doctor told him that if a student is seriously ill he comes to the infirmary.

DENTISTS MEET TODAY

Dentists from throughout North Carolina are expected to meet here today for the third annual post-graduate dental seminar and homecoming day.

The meeting is being sponsored by the School of Dentistry.

Most of the morning session will be devoted to two television programs over the closed circuit TV hookup at the School of Dentistry.

The annual luncheon and business meeting of the dental Foundation of N. C. will be held at the Carolina Inn at noon.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Classes Should Be Cancelled

Much discussion and several proposals have been heard during the past several days about the UNC student body's return to classes January 2 after the Christmas holidays.

In this column today we shall attempt to explain the pros and cons of required class attendance the day after New Year's, with hopes that the administration will see fit to declare January 2 a day for "emergency" class cuts.

If such a declaration is made, classes would not be held January 2, but would resume on schedule at 8 a.m. Friday, January 3, two days after the New Year's holiday.

First, the administration points out the fact that, by January 17, —the end of the current semester —Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday classes will have been held only 43 times if students are required to return to Chapel Hill January 2.

Our semester system is built around 45 class periods in each subject, and that number already has been slashed to 43 for Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday classes by the dismissal of Saturday classes the day of the Chancellor's Inauguration and the day of the Maryland Caravan Weekend.

On the other hand, Monday, Wednesday and Friday classes have progressed as scheduled, and 45 class periods will have been held for each subject taught on those days by the end of the current semester, January 17.

Consequently, if classes are not held Thursday, January 2, the number of class periods for Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday will be slashed to 42 times—three below the regular 45 on which the semester system is based.

To lose sight of requirements of the semester system—that is, to flagrantly overlook and sway from the basis on wich the semester system is founded—is not a good practice at the University of North Carolina or anywhere else. But circumstances sometimes prevail which justify, non-conformity to practice, and we feel the New Year's holiday this year is one of them.

Reading day before examinations is one of the factors to consider in the current situation. That day has been set aside as the Saturday before final examinations begin, and does not count as a day of class periods. Consequently, as plans now stand, there will be no classes on Saturday, January 18.

One solution whereby students would not be required to return to classes January 2 is the switching of reading day—for this one time —from the Saturday before final examinations to the Friday before those exams. It would not set a precedent, because such a situation as now exists seldom occurs at the University.

Arguments do exist against returning to classes Thursday, January 2, and we feel they are sound ones. First, many students returning to Chapel Hill on New Year's day would be exposed to holiday traffic and the dangers it presents even to responsible drivers. Cold facts tell us that hundreds will lose their lives in the rush of New Year's travelling.

A second factor is that of the very return to Chapel Hill of students living hundreds of miles from North Carolina. Airplane reservations particularly will be difficult to purchase, which probably will result in the late return of many students, anyway. Briefly, New Year's Day is neither a safe time nor a good time for persons to expose themselves to distant travel.

If the administration finds sufficient cause to call off classes for Thursday, January 2, it could then do one of two things: either declare January 2 a day of "emergency" class cuts, with no classes being held, or change reading day to Friday, January 17, and pick up an extra day of Tuesday; Thursday and Saturday classes on the following day, January 18.

If the latter decision were made 43 class periods still would have been held for Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday classes, while Monday, Wednesday and Friday class periods would have been slashed from 45 to 44.

It seems to us that dropping one day of Monday, Wednesday and Friday classes could well be justified by the erasing of traffic threats and travel inconveniences which would result from the return to classes January 2.

We hope the administration feels the same way.

NC Hist. Should Be Required Subject

Now that the North Carolina Society for the Preservation of Antiquities has urged the teaching of North Carolina history in high schools of the state, the proposal should be examined closely by Tar Heel educators.

And if they approach the proposal with an open mind, a frequently-offered elective course will be added to the mandatory curriculum of our high school programs.

History is something the world will always have. It has existed since earth was flung into its present orbit, and it shall remain until our disintegration into space. North Carolina will remain a part of it.

In this day of controversy over states' rights and central government, when powers of individual states are being eaten away by federal laws, it would be well to remember that our country is but a unity of individual states cooperating in a national effort.

To better understand the evolution of state governments, their privileges and powers, with an eye to preservation of the state and its role in the national scheme, developing minds should be required to taste of the history of their state—be it North Carolina or California.

History, when observed through a broad perspective, gives meaning to the functions of people and the continuing evolution of the world. It makes books live and it explains the decisions, the advances, of mankind.

In brief, it is the subject on which all other areas of study are based, because it follows the progressing centuries and attempts to reveal underlying causes of past, current and future decisions, developments and inventions.

North Carolina history is a part of the total development of mankind. And North Carolinians should have enough interest in and love for their state to spend several hours a week studying about it.

Virtually any American knows when his country was discovered. But how many of us in Tar Heelia know when North Carolina became a member state of the evolving nation?

It's a simple question, but it points out the fact that there's much to be known about North Carolina. We feel students should at least be exposed to the high points in the state's history.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Yuletide Ideas And Advice On Carolina Music

By GARY NICHOLS

Warning to people in training for New Year's Eve! Watch which lamppost you lean against. Some of them are being painted. This warning is being passed on by courtesy of an occupant of Battle dorm who was camplaining to me about how hard it is to remove the green paint from your hands.

Speaking of New Year's Eve, there is much discontint around campus due to the resumption of classes on Jan. 2. This will necessitate many a student's travelling with a hangover to get back to Chapel Hill in time. Not to mention missing the bowl games on New Year's Day. Beware. South Building, revolt is in the air.

I'm crossing my fingers that no one spreads the word that they think Christmas is "Mickey Mouse." I'm scared stiff they might call it off. It's not very sophisticated, you know. I guess I'm just a big kid but I always kind of liked Christmas.

You know, I've been reading these helpful advisory articles on what to buy for Christmas gifts. The only thing they lack is advice on where to get the money.

Talking about sales advice. I crossed an enterprising salesman outside of Kenan earlier this season. He was selling the Glee Club's album of Carolina songs. Upon leaving the game I was brought short by the following pitch: "Here you go! Music to sober up by!"

Also seen at Kenan: During the Virginia game I spotted one young lady with two pennants (One Carolina and one Virginia) and two football pins (One Carolina and One (Ugh!) Dook). I've heard of fence sitting but carrying it out over a two-week period ought to be some sort of a record. She did confide, however, that she slightly favored Carolina.

Lingerie Theft Is For Children

Now comes the story that all IDC members will be present at future panty raids.

With, of course, the explanation that "it was not a suggestion of participation."

Further, the story reads: "They (panty raids) are destructive to personal property, or do they just result in the "loss" of "personal" property?

All told, however, IDC action condemning panty raids is to be commended. Because regardless of infractions of the honor code, loss of property, etc., they just don't speak well of mature citizens.

The Down-To-Earth Missile Race

(Herblock Is on Vacation)

Trouble With Students, Parents Is In Not Knowing Their Own Minds

BARRY WINSTON

Gentle reader . . . . . fair citizen . . . . . noble student, draw closer that I may speak to you in dulcet tones of a parable that once I heard. There was, so the story goes, a donkey, mild of manner and sweet of disposition. His owner, being of an inquisitive nature, chanced upon the idea to perform an experiment of sorts. Bright and early one morning, the owner led his donkey to a small bridge which spanned a creek, murmuring cheerfully nearby. Leaving the gentle beast at the very center of the bridge, our experimentor proceeded to stack two piles of hay, one at either end of this selfsame bridge. Whereupon, he withdrew a short distance to sit and wait and watch and see to which of the two piles of hay his noble animal would trudge. But the poor, dumb brute was torn by indecision, each of the two piles being of equal distance from him. Alas, he could not make up his mind. And do you know, gentle reader . . . . fair citizen . . . . . noble student, do you know what happened? The jackass starved to death.

And do you know what the moral of this story might be? 'Tis simplicity, itself. You are a jackass.

I repeat, for the benefit of those rapid readers who may, in their haste, have skipped the last paragraph: You are a jackass. Shall I elaborate? Very well.

You scream, in volume sufficient to deafen a sensitive man, "Defenses! We must have more defenses! We must catch Russia! Give us more scientists! Damn the torpedoes, full steam ahead!" Etc. etc. etc., ad nauseum. And then, scarcely stopping to draw a breath, you shout with equal vigor, "Tail fins! We must have more tail fins! We must catch the Joneses! Give us less taxes! Damn the consequences, full steam ahead!"

Does the description fit? "Not me!", you say? Try this one on for size, then: You will, if you are an average man, spend a sizable portion of your life imparting wisdom to one or more impressionable little jackasses. Your progeny. And in the course of this training, one of the more important virtues that you will attempt to imbed in their little minds is honesty. True? True. What, then, will be your reply when Junior comes up with a gem such as, ". . . . but, daddy, you just said the other day that it wasn't really stealing to cheat on an income tax form. They'll never miss it, you said. So why all the fuss when I cop a measley baseball bat from Schmaltz's department store? They've got hundreds of them . . . they'll never miss just one." Or, " . . . . . but why can't I tell the teacher that I was kidnapped by Martians if I'm late for school? You had Mommy say that you weren't home when that insurance salesman came around the other night."

Enough? Oh, You're just a student now, and when you get to be a parent, you'd never commit such an inconsistency? If you say so. Then how come all this yammer about athletes and academic standards? Why aren't you studying right now, instead of reading something that tells you that you're a jackass? Most of the contributions you make to the standards of this university are in the field of beer consumption, per capita. If you're so worried about academic standings why aren't you making five A's? If you're so concerned with education, why don't you try staying awake in class?

If you're so hopped up about Sputniks, and defenses, and scientists, why haven't you written a letter to your Congressman?

If you're so smart, why aren't you rich?

I'll tell you why. Because you don't even know your own mind, that's why. Because you're a jackass. And so am I, for that matter, for taking the time to try to tell you about it.

So let's just work our crossword puzzles, and forget the whole thing.

L'IL ABNER — by Al Capp

POGO — by Walt Kelly

IN DJILAS' BOOK

Communism Seen As Dying System

Frank Crowther

Milovan Djilas in his book, "The New Class," certainly reflects the decaying process in the core of modern Communism. Here we have a man who has run the gamut of every phase of Communism and, through a dispassionate and intellectually honest decision, has methodically demonstrated that eventually the young, thinking men of intellectual and personal integrity who are now part of the Communist system will themselves be compelled to condemn and destroy their own system. It is undoubtedly one of the brightest lights to shine from East to West in well over a decade.

Djilas has not written a Communist expose or a disgruntled political manifesto — this is purely a moral appeal to his fellow men to realize that freedom itself is the only intrinsic quality necessary at the basis of any political system. This is why, he says, Communism cannot escape its own contradictions and will eventually devour its own entrails.

There can be no substitution for reading the book itself, but I will include here some of the more cogent passages.

In the chapter on the "Character of the Revolution," he writes, ". . . no other revolutions have required so many exceptional conditions; no other revolutions promised so much and accomplished so little. Demagoguery and misrepresentation are inevitable among the Communist leaders since they are forced to promise the most ideal society and abolition of every exploitation.'" . . . "The fact is simply this: they were unable to accomplish that in which they so fanatically believed." . . . "In reality, the Communists were unable to act differently from any ruling class that preceded them." . . . "In contrast to earlier revolutions, the Communist revolution, conducted in the name of doing away with classes, has resulted in the most complete authority of any single new class. Everything else is sham and an illusion."

Continuing, in the chapter on "The Party State," he says, "Party control over society, identification of the government and the governmental machinery with the party, and the right to express ideas dependent on the amount of power and the position one holds in the hierarchy; these are the essential and inevitable characteristics of every Communist bureaucracy as soon as it attains power."

"Careerism, extravagance, and love of power are inevitable, and so is corruption . . . it is a special type of corruption caused by the fact that the government is in the hands of a single political group and is the source of all privileges."

"Founded by force and violence, in constant conflict with its people, the Communist state, even if there are no external reasons, must be militaristic. The cult of force, especially military force, is nowhere so prevalent as in Communist countries."

"(the people) still live (and) function against despotism, and they preserve their distinctive features undestroyed. If their consciences and souls are smothered, they are not broken. Though they are under subjugation, they have not yielded. The force activating them today is more than the old or bourgeois nationalism; it is an imperishable desire to be their own masters, and, by their own free development, to attain an increasingly fuller fellowship with the rest of the human race in its eternal existence."

In his charter on "Tyranny over the mind" he writes: "The proposition that Marxism is a universal method, a proposition upon which Communists are obliged to stand, must in practice lead to tyranny in all areas of intellectual activity." ". . . these unscrupulous procurers of the cheap and actually the only available consumer goods — these holders of obsolete, unchangeable, and immutable ideas— have retarded and frozen the intellectual impulses of their people. They have thought up the most antihuman words — 'pluck from the human consciousness' — and act according to these words just as if they were dealing with roots and weeds instead of man's thoughts."

"History will pardon Communists for much . . . but the stifling of every divergent thought, the exclusive monopoly over thinking for the purpose of defending their personal interests, will nail the Communists to a cross of shame in history."

Further on, in the chapter on "The aims and the means" he explains: "Honor, sincerity, sacrifice and love of the truth were once things that could be understood for their own sakes; now, deliberate lies, sycophancy, slander, deception, and provocation gradually become the inevitable attendants of the dark, intolerant, and all-inclusive might of the new class, and even effect relations between the members of the class."

Turning to "The present day world," he says that "the effect of atomic energy . . . will tend toward the further unification of the world. On the way, it will shatter inexorably all inherited obstacles — ownership relations and social relations, but above all exclusive and isolated systems and ideologies, such Communism both before and after Stalin's death."

In the concluding chapter, he sums up by saying, "In any case, the world will change and will go in the direction in which it has been moving and must go on — toward greater unity, progress, and freedom. The power of reality and the power of life have always been stronger than any kind of brutal force and more real than any theory."

Any man who cherishes his own freedom will cherish it even more after reading this book. The one wish that Albert Camus had for his fellow men when he received the Nobel Prize was "freedom." How little most of us know about that word.

Covering The University Campus

NEWMAN CLUB

The Newman Club will meet Sunday at 5:30 p. m. at the Catholic Church. After dinner is served, Miss Frances MacKinnon, associate professor of nutrition in the School of Public Health, will tell of her experience in Malaya during the past year.

In particular, she will discuss "The Problem of Islam and the Christian Religion," illustrating her talk with slides. All Catholic students have been invited to attend.

GMAB FREE FILM

The GMAB Free Film will present "Show Boat," the Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein musical hit, tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

UNIVERSITY ART LEAGUE

There will be a business meeting of the University Art League Monday night, Dec. 9, at 7 o'clock in the basement of Caldwell Hall. All members have been urged to attend, and new members may also join at this meeting.

FACULTY CLUB

Chancellor Carey H. Bostian of North Carolina State College will speak on the relationships of North Carolina State College to the Consolidated University at the Faculty Club luncheon, Tuesday at 11 p. m. at the Carolina Inn.

Members who wish to attend this luncheon have been urged to make reservations by Monday.

PHI DEBATE

Phi will meet Tuesday night at 8 o'clock on the top floor of New East to debate the following article:

Resolved: "The admission of female citizens as students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill be immediately discontinued."

JOINT LECTURE

A lecture sponsored jointly by the Philosophy Departments of Carolina and Duke University will be presented Monday, Dec. 9, at 8 p. m. in the Faculty Seminar Room, Carroll Hall, by Prof. R. M. Hare, Fellow at Balliol College, Oxford University, England.

Professor Hare, whose topic will be: "On Doing What We Ought Not To Do," has been in the forefront of controversy in the field of ethics in England and America, having written many articles and a book, The Language of Morals, which has caused a good deal of discussion. He is visiting lecturer at Princeton University this year.

LOVE IN THE LAUNDRY

Last month we got the following letter:

Dear Van Heusen, you rats:

Thanks mucho for breaking up the hottest romance since Scarlet and Rhett. Me and Laundry Mark x428Fy might be honeymooning in Palm Beach today if it wasn't for your so-called smart ideas. Go shoot yourselves in your ulcers. Respectfully yours, Dorothea Jomes.

We tracked down the story behind it and found that Miss Jomes worked a steam-iron at the Acme Laundry in Eastpox, N. J. Last year, while ironing a shirt belonging to Laundry Mark x428Fy, she had noticed a small piece of paper protruding from the slot on the collar. Curious, she pulled it out and read: "Whoever you are, I love the way you press my shirts. I think I may love you too. Interested?" She blushed, but daringly wrote her answer — "Interested, sorta," and slipped it in the collar-slot. Ten days later came another shirt from x428Fy and, sure enough, another note: "If you can cook like you can write I may be smitten beyond recall. Fascinated?" This time she almost swooned, and wrote back, "Wow, am I!" Anyhow, note followed hot note and Miss Jomes began thinking of turning in her steam iron for a marriage manual. Until one day tragedy struck. x428Fy's shirts arrived as usual, but when Miss Jomes turned to the slot she found it sewn-up. Frantic, she tried to rip it open. No luck. She could feel something thin inside, but she couldn't get to it. And that's how it's been ever since!

You see, x428Fy had switched to slotless Van Heusen Collarite shirts—with sewn-in stays! You should, too! These micro-thin stays can't get lost, keep your collar flat, and launder with your shirt! Specify Collarite next time.

And don't feel bad about Miss Jomes. She took her unhappiness out in hard work and was promoted to assistant manager. We expect a thank-you note from her any day.

have developed a strong feeling of friendship and close kinship with the other members of the cast and crew. I have good reason to believe that this feeling has been reciprocated; thus, I feel a personal responsibility to every member of the Petites Dramatiques group, as well as to myself and to GM.

"I feel that there should be some sympathy on the part of the administration for the efforts of all associated with "Judith," and that they might well have delayed their ruling in view of its possible consequences.

"My decision to withdraw from the University (the action which caused me to be withdrawn from "Judith") involves a personal conviction having no direct bearing on the matter at hand; certainly, when I withdrew from school I did so without any idea whatsoever of the consequences. Had I known that my dropping out of the university would have precipitated the current action, I certainly would have postponed that action until "Judith" was past.

"One other point I should like to make absolutely clear: in all my actions since I came to this university, I have acted for myself, and as myself. I do not represent or consider myself acting for any group; nor do I propose to become involved in any political controversy as a result of this situation.

"My one and only aim in this unfortunate affair is to be allowed to appear as Holofernes in the forthcoming "Judith."

Holofernes is the male lead in the play.

The play had been in rehearsal for three weeks prior to the ruling; however, Moore said that he had made up his mind to drop out of school prior to Thanksgiving. He added that he had cut his classes for two days before the holiday.

Va. Matmen Hand UNC Double Loss

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. —Carolina's varsity and freshman wrestling teams began the season on a sour note here last night, suffering a double defeat at the hands of the Virginia Cavaliers. The varsity lost, 25-11 and the frosh, 21-13.

The Tar Heel grapplers could never get started against the talented Cavalier teams as four Tar Heel varsity members were pinned and three frosh went the same route.

In the varsity event, Perrin Henderson at 137 J. W. Welborn at 147, and Dave Atkins at 167 were the only Tar Heels to gain victory. Henderson decisioned Everette. Welborn pinned Shephard and Atkinson decisioned Scuggs.

Russell Fills

Ray Russell, filling in for Jack Gray of Carolina in the heavyweight division suffered a pulled musicle and had to forfeit to Parrott of Virginia. Russell was ahead when he was injured.

In the freshman division, Chip Woodrow (123) pinned Florence of Virginia. Gene White at 167 pinned Rogers of the Cavaliers and John Matney of Carolina gained a decision over Harris, 5-2.

Coach Sam Barnes said after the match that the Tar Heels looked bad in their season opener but feels that his squad will come back strong against Washington and Lee in Lexington tonight. That match is scheduled to start at eight o'clock.

SUMMARY

123—Wise (V) pinned Champlin (5:08); 130—Richey (V) pinned Rhyne (4:54); 137—Henderson (C) decisioned Everett (5-0); 147—Welborn (C) pinned Shepherd (2:20); 157—Gaudry (V) pinned Hoke (5:06); 167—Atkinson (C) decisioned Scuggs (9-4); 177—St. Clair (V) pinned Boyette (5:32); Heavyweight—Parrott (V) beat Russell (default).

123—Woodrun (C) pinned Florence, 2:54; 130—Powell (V) pinned Marks, 7:23; 137—Dellar (V) pinned Henderson, 4:30; 147—McIver (V) decisioned Davis, 5-3; Baker (V) decisioned Turnbill, 5-0; White (C) pinned Rogers, 4:10; Matney (C) decisioned Harris, 5-2; Heavyweight—Evans (V) pinned Hurley, 3:50.

McGuire To Juggle In Cage Open

Sophomores will hold the key to the success of the Tar Heels and among the leading second-year men are Harvey Salz, Lee Schaffer, John Crotty, Dick Kepley and Ray Stanley. Veteran Danny Lotz also must be counted upon for plenty of action. From this group, McGuire is expected to select two men to go along with his great veteran trio, but all indications show that every one of them will get into this battle today.

Cunningham, Kearns and Brennan were all stars of that fabulous team of a year ago and either is capable of achieving All-American recognition. Cunningham and Kearns will probably be the starting guards with Brennan at one forward. If this is the case, then McGuire will probably go with the taller men, Kepley, Shaffer, Lotz and Stanley to fill the two vacant spots.

The Tigers are supposed to be a much-improved team over the one which last year finished with a 7-17 record. The club of veterans is led by high-scoring guard Ed Brinkley and forward shooting ace Vince Yockel.

Dave Scurlock Will Be Honored As All-American At Game Today

By DAVE WIBLE

Sophomore Dave Scurlock, Carolina's fabulous middle-distance and cross-country runner has been placed on the 1957 All-American Track Team for his outstanding performances in the 880 yard run last spring.

Scurlock will be presented a certificate in recognition of this award during the halftime of this afternoon's basketball game between Carolina and Clemson. Robert A. Fetzer—known in North Carolina track circles as the "father" of this state's track—will make the presentation.

880 Records

Scurlock, a 6-4 180 pounder from Greensboro, has ben setting track records since he was in high school. He is the only North Carolinian to run a half-mile under two minutes while in high school. He set the standing record of 1:56.2 at the 1954 State High School meet.

His best time for the event is 1:48.2 which is a University records. His greatest performance was at the NCAA Outdoor Track Championships held in Austin Texas last spring. He finished third with a 1:48.2, the third best time ever run in the 36 years history of the NCAA. The winner of the event was California's Don Bowden, the only American to run a mile under four minutes. Second was Ron Delaney who finished only one tenth of a second ahead of Scurlock.

Other Records

Scurlock also holds the school record in the 440 (48.4) and he anchored Carolina's record setting mile and 2-mile relay teams. He hold the freshman half mile and mile-relay record.

This past month, he was runner up in the ACC cross-country championships held at Wake Forest.

Last spring, Scurlock was voted cutstanding performer at the ACC track championships after winning the 440, 880 and anchoring the winning mile relay team.

Edwards Wins Top Honors; Tatum Third

Raleigh, Dec. 6 (AP) — Earle Edwards, coach of North Carolina State's Atlantic Coast Conference football champions, today was named by the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Assn. as The Coach of the Year.

Edwards received 58 first place votes from the 78 sportswriters, sportscasters and college publicity men balloting and scored 338 points out of a possible 390 to take the honors.

Frank Howard of Clemson was runner up with 159 points. The points were awarded on a basis of five for first, three for second and one for third.

Other coaches receiving votes were: Bill Murray of Duke, Tommy Mont of Maryland and Ben Martin of Virginia. Last year Paul Amen of Wake Forest won the award.

The popular Wolfpack mentor, in his fourth year at the head coaching position at State College, saw his team also take Big Four honors by beating Carolina 7-0, Wake Forest 19-0 and tying Duke 14-14.

State's record was its best since 1946 when N. C. State finished with a 8-2 record. The award was the second writers association honor to be won by N. C. State. Dick Christy, its All-American back, was named player of the year earlier this week.

Tar Babies To Battle Duke Following Varsity Contest

By DAVE WIBLE

Carolina's yearling cage squad, 1-0 for the season, will battle the very powerful Duke Blue Imps this afternoon in Woollen Gym after the Carolina-Clemson varsity contest.

Duke Tough

The freshman game promises to be a battle royal for the Duke's will be fielding what they call their finest crop of freshman ever. To prove that the pre-season predictions were correct, the Blue Imps almost defeated the Duke varsity in a practice game. The varsity came out on top by only one point.

Leading the Imps will be George Kistler a 6-6 high school All-American from Philadelphia and 6-6 forward Tom Hurt. Hurt scored 32 points against the Wake Forest frosh, when Duke took Wake in their opener.

Tar Babies Beat High Point

The Tar Babies only contest to date was an 84-75 win over the High Point College Jayvees last Tuesday night. The Tar Babies looked a little loose in their opener as the High Pointers pressed them the entire game. Six-five forward Doug Moe was high scorer for the night with 32 points.

In today's game freshman Coach Ken Rosemond will start the same quint that opened the High Point game. At forwards will be Moe and Pete Longenecker, who stands at 6-4. At center the Tar Babies will find their tallest and heaviest man, 6-8, 220 pounder, Hugh Donohue.

The backcourt duties will go to Bill Hart a six footer, and 6-2 Tam Shuford.

Strong Bench

Carolina has a good reserve crew this year, recently reinforced by freshman footballers who made the quick change, forward Bob Deaton and guard Dee Heather head the list, followed closely by former footballers Russ Hollers, Lenny Beck and John Mackey. Beck and Hollers were both football starters this year.

Sticklers!

ANY NORMAL DORM'LL be full of Lucky smokers! You can count 'em by carloads on any campus — and no wonder! A Lucky, you see, is a light smoke—the right smoke for everyone. It's made of nothing but naturally light tobacco . . . golden rich, wonderfully good-tasting tobacco that's toasted to taste even better. Find a set of dorms without Lucky smokers, and you've stumbled on a mighty Odd Quad! Don't you miss out—light up a Lucky. You'll say a light smoke's the right smoke for you!

STUDENTS! MAKE $25

Do you like to shirk work? Here's some easy money—start Stickling! We'll pay $25 for every Stickler we print—and for hundreds more that never get used. Sticklers are simple riddles with two-word rhyming answers. Both words must have the same number of syllables. (Don't do drawings.) Send your Sticklers with your name, address, college and class to Happy-Joe-Lucky, Box 67A, Mt. Vernon, N.Y.

SELF DEFEAT

VOL. LXV NO. 64 | Offices in Graham Memorial | CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1957 | Complete UP Wire Service | FOUR PAGES THIS ISSUE

Japanese Diet Member Visits UNC After 40-Year Absence

Hiroshi Momiyama, Japanese Diet member who is visiting in Chapel Hill for the first time in 40 years and lecturing to student and faculty political science groups, told a class here that "40 years may seem quite a long time to you. But I feel as if I have just come back to Chapel Hill to get ready for a new semester after a few month's vacation."

Momiyama received his master's degree in economics here in 1917.

Momiyama told the students and faculty that he went into an eclipse politically when Tojo and the militarists came to power in Japan. "I am glad to tell you, however, that in those dark and stormy days I never gave up my firm conviction," he said, "of freedom and democracy which student life at Chapel Hill gave me.

"My long political career has been a continuous struggle for the achievement of this cause, and it is not too much to say that I owe my political philosophy largely to my Alma Mater."

The Japanese political leader reviewed new economic and political progress in Japan since World War II.

Speaking of the changes in the campus here," Momiyama said, "You might well consider me a Rip Van Winkle returned from Japan. Both the town and campus are very much larger and busier than before. It is wonderful to be here, reviving many pleasant associations of those happy old days, and showered with your warmth and hospitality."

Momiyama will be in Washington, D. C. next week to continue a mission for the Japanese government on a matter affecting Okinawa.

'What Every Woman Knows' Is Next On Playmakers' Schedule

By DAVE PETERSON

Marion Fitz-Simons, star of the Playmakers production of "What Every Woman Knows," is a former teacher of drama, actress, illustrator and faculty wife. She will perform in her latest role Wednesday through Sunday in the Playmakers Theater.

In "What Every Woman Knows," Mrs. Fitz-Simons plays the role of the Comtesse de la Briere, a frolicsome widow who discovers the true reason for the political success of the leading man.

Married to Foster Fitz-Simons, director of the Playmakers staff, the versatile actress has played many roles with the group during her residence in Chapel Hill as a faculty wife. They include Lady Macbeth, Medea, The mother in "Blood Wedding," and the Dowager Empress in "Anastasia."

In addition to her work as an actress, Mrs. Fitz-Simons is the mother of four very energetic boys. Prior to her marriage she was instructor of drama at Hood College, Frederick, Md., and at Women's College, Greensboro. She has done summer stock work at the Yacht Club Theatre, Nantucket, Mass.; the Asheville Summer Theatre; "The Lost Colony", Manteo; "The Highland Call", Buie's Creek; and "Unto These Hills," Cherokee.

She directed "Heaven Bound," an all-negro show for the Federal Theatre in Raleigh in 1936, and "East Lynne" for the Burnesville Summer Theatre in 1949.

With her husband she wrote "We, the Women", served as an associate editor with Samuel Selden under Archibald Henderson for the Koch Memorial edition of the Carolina Playbook, and illustrated Josefina Niggli's "Mexican Village."

This production of "What Every Women Knows" provides another personal performance for the talented and capable artist. Tickets for the production are now on sale at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50..

STARRING ROLE—Marion Fitz-Simons, wife of Playmaker director Foster Fitz-Simons, will perform in her latest role Wednesday through Sunday in "What Every Woman Knows" in the Playmakers Theatre.

Tar Heel Cagers Overwhelm Hapless Clemson, 79-55 For 33rd Straight

UNC Leads At Half, 39-14; Kearn's 32 Paces Attack

Carolina's national basketball champions built up an overwhelming 39-14 halftime lead and coasted to an easy 79-55 victory over the Clemson Tigers in Woollen Gym yesterday afternoon in the Tar Heel's season opener.

The victory was the 33rd straight for Coach Frank McGuire's tall and talented cagers who handled Press Mavarich's charges with much the same ease with which they thrice mastered the Tigers on the way to the NCAA title last season.

A jam, packed crowd of about 6,500 screaming students and a tremendous regional television audience watched the highly-regarded McGuire machine build up that tremendous first half margin and then lose a little fire as the Tigers came back to outscore Carolina in the second half.

Little Tommy Kearns, the Tar Heel's 5'11 senior guard from Bergenfield, N. J. and an All-America pick in several pre-season polls, demonstrated the glittering prowess which gained him that recognition as he poured through 32 points and played an outstanding floor game.

It was never any contest but the vociferous Tar Heel cheering section made it seem like a repeat of the Kansas affair last March as they welcomed their beloved Tar Heels in the best Dixieland manner. The crowd cheered the Tar Heels individually, and as a group, it gave injured Joe Quigg and Coach Frank McGuire a rousing ovation, it welcomed the Tigers cordially and there was even a tiny murmur for the referees.

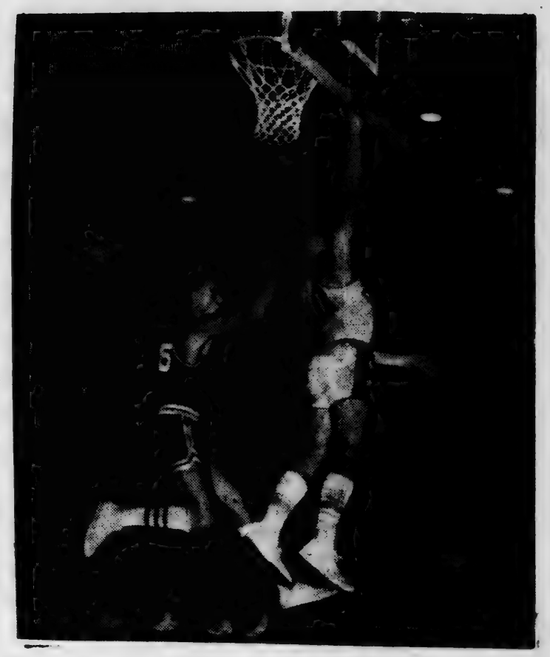
McGUIRE JUGGLES

McGuire juggled his lineup freely throughout this ACC affair as 11 Tar Heels took part in sending Clemson down to its third straight defeat. Sophomores Dick Kepley and Lee Shaffer started for the Tar Heels, Kepley at center and Schaffer at forward.

From the time Kepley dropped in the first basket with 23 seconds gone in the first half, it took the hapless Tigers almost a full seven minutes to register their first field goal. And the obviously nervous Palmetto representative could manage but five field goals during the entire first half as the Tar Heel's threw up a stout zone defense which kept the Tigers outside and allowed the McGuiremen to control the boards with exceptional ease.

The Tigers hit 12.8 of their shots in that half while the Tar Heels connected for 53.5.

CAROLINA OUTSCORED



Although outscored 41-40 in the final half, the Tar Heels were even more effective from the floor to hold Payne although Payne pleaded innocent.

Judith To Be Produced Despite Moore Decision

By CURTIS GANS

Jean Giradoux' "Judith" will be presented tonight at 8 p.m. in Graham Memorial's Main Lounge, without Harry Moore, former graduate art student from Elizabethtown, in the cast.

Moore last night decided not to appeal the decision of Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver that he was ineligible to participate in the play.

Weaver made the decision Wednesday after Moore had voluntarily withdrawn from the University.

Chancellor William B. Aycock in an interview held Saturday afternoon gave the basis for the ruling and said that we assumed full responsibility for Weaver's action.

Aycock said that the primary basis for the ruling was that Moore, as an ex-student, had no right to participate in student activities, which are financed by the students.

Weaver commented that student activities are for student participation.

Aycock added that the fact that Moore is a Negro had to be considered in making his decision. He said that at the present time University policy was that no Negro non-student could participate in student activities.

However, he pointed out that Negro students on campus enjoy equal rights, privileges, and responsibilities with the rest of the University communty.

Either factor—that Moore is an ex-student or that Moore is a non-student Negro—would be enough to disqualify Moore's participation in the play, according to Aycock. He added that both factors were taken into consideration before he made his decision.

Aycock (said) there was no written policy covering persons outside the University proper in regard to their participation in student activities.

Moore, when asked for comment on his decision not to file an official appeal with Consolidated University President William Friday, stated:

The administration has reached its decision on the basis of my status as an ex-student. I recognize that this is within their jurisdiction, and in view of this I have no intention of pursing the matter officially any further.

"However, because I do desire so strongly to participate in "Judith," I hope to talk as an individual to the other people involved, as individuals.

"I wish by so doing to insure that all the pertinent facts have been brought to light with consideration to all parties involved."

Davis Small, senior Playmaker will take Moore's lead role as Holofernes in tonight's production. Carolyn Marsh, graduate English student, will co-star in the part of Judith.

Indonesia

JAKARTA, Dec. 6 (AP) — Indonesia today began driving out the Dutch rearguard which held on after colonial days and ran the nation's rich oil, rubber and business empires.

With a show of grim determination in its pressure campaign to take over the jungles of West New Guinea, the Indonesian government ordered the Netherlands government to begin immediate evacuation of most of the 46,000 Dutch citizens here. One source said all would be expelled except skilled technicians. Many are Indonesian-born Eurasians who have never been elsewhere.

Counsel Unit Needs Advisors

The Campus Orientation Committee is looking for applications from students to serve as counselors for the second semester orientation program.

Any interested student should contact Jerry Oppenhemier, chairman of the Orientation Committee, or Mary Jane Fisher.

Students who previously served as counselors may also participate in the second semester orientation.

Oppenheimer said he hoped counselors who had served before would be able to help out again.

"Since this is a very short program, it is exteremely important that we have qualified counselors to help the new students make a quick and complete adjustment to Carolina," he said.

Orientation for the second semester will be held Wednesday and Thursday, January 29 and 30. Second semester classes will start January 31.

Yule Campaign Ends Monday

Monday is the last day for adopting a family in the Empty Stocking Campaign, according to Mrs. Mark Hanna, campaign chairman.

The Chapel Hill Junior Service League is sponsoring this campaign to provide for needy families in Orange County during Christmas.

Mrs. Hanna said cash donations are needed now, since many families remain unadopted. Junior Service League members will be operating a booth on Franklin street Monday to collect cash donations.

Latest cash donations include: Order of the Old Well, Rachael Lear, Memory A. Lester, Mrs. F. S. Cates Sr. and Mrs. P. Neal Johnson.

Seven-Man Committee To Study Cut Proposal

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Names of the members of a Faculty Council committee established to investigate the new class excuse proposal will be released after a special Faculty Advisory Committee meeting Wednesday, Dec. 8.

Chancellor Aycock said yesterday he will appoint the seven-man committee before the advisory committee meets and submit the slate to them for approval. The special meeting has been called to thin the group's heavy workload, said the chancellor.

At Friday's Faculty Council meeting Student Body President Sonny Evans, Vice President Don Furtado and Honor Council Chairman George Ragsdale answered faculty members' questions on the proposal.

If the proposal is accepted as it was submitted to the faculty students will be on their honor to notify their instructors when they miss a class due to illness.

When asked how such a system would be enforced, Ragsdale told the group that it would be easier to spot attendance violations than it is to pick out people cheating on exams. He pointed out that a person's roommate would know if the person was mising a class due to illness or if he was "just staying in bed reading a comic book."

Dr. Hedgpeth said that using illness for an excuse is not good for the students' mental health. He said the proposal would save the infirmary much "bargaining for infirmary excuses" by students.

Another member of the council pointed out that the way the proposal is set up, some instructors may not grant any excuses at all and others may be too lenient. Regsdale pointed out that the fifth part of the proposal leaves the final power to grant excuses with the offices which now have it. Students would appeal alleged abuses to these offices.

Students abusing the regulation would be violating the Honor Code and therefore subject to Honor Council action.

Evans pointed out that the system proposed by the student government is not too different from the present one. Uder the proposed system students would seek excuses directly from their instructor instead of from their dean or the infirmary.

Boyd To Speak At Nurses' Tea

Dr. Bernard Boyd, chairman of the Department of Religion, will be the featured speaker at a tea in the Nurses' Dorm at 4 p.m Tuesday.

Dr Boyd's talk on "The Role of the Counselor as an Example" will be the third in the series of In-Service Training Programs, sponsored this year by the office of the Dean of Women.

These programs are developed by dormitory hostesses working under the Dean of Women. They are directed toward the special needs of those working closely with the women's program.

Hostesses, graduate counselors, sorority alumnae advisors and other groups concerned directly with student personnel have been invited to attend.

Dr. Hardre To Deliver Lecture

Dr. Jacques Hardre will deliver the winter season Faculty Lecture in the Division of Humanities at the University of North Carolina on Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the auditorium of Carroll Hall.

A graduate of Guilford College, Professor Hardre received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at Carolina and has been a member of the faculty of the Department of Romance Languages since 1945. He was born in Dinon, France, and during World War II served in the French Army in 1939-40 and in the Free French Army from 1942 to 1945.

His interest in contemporary French literature has resulted in studies of the existentialism of Jean-Paul Sartre, literary critic. Professor Hardre is currently engaged on a full-length biography of Cavalier de la Salle.

Since 1944 the Humanities Division has presented the quarterly lectures by University faculty members teaching arts and literature. The lectures are held particularly for UNC undergraduates, but are open to all interested persons.

Legislature Is Responsible In Delegate Selection

The Student Legislature has defeated its own cause in passing a bill Thursday night that asserts "the UNC delegation to the SSL shall not in anyway be considered as officially representing the University or the students attending UNC."

In fact, by very virtue of passage of the bill, the legislature has made every future delegate to the State Student Legislature a spokesman for the University of North Carolina—regardless of whether opinion expressed there is representative of campus opinion.

The reason is this: Contained in the bill is a clause asserting that every future applicant for a seat at SSL is "subject to the approval of the Student Legislature of UNC."

For the Student Legislature to require approval of delegates to SSL—and then attempt to wash its hands of responsibility for opinions expressed—is pure folly. In fact, it borders on the ridiculous.

When the United States Congress passes on an ambassador to a foreign nation, it does not maintain for an instant that the approved ambassador is going abroad to speak for himself. Rather, he is endorsed by the Congress to represent the causes of the American people and the country's government.

Similarly, the approval of a delegate to SSL by the Student Legislature places the responsibility of that student's remarks and voting record at the mock assembly squarely on the shoulders of Student Legislators.

To think otherwise is blinding one's self to the purposes of endorsement. If the legislature can't stand by those it endorses, it would be better to excuse them at the outset from legislative approval.

FROM THE DAILY TEXAN:

Newspaper Discusses Fraternity Charter

This weekend, delegates from colleges and universities all over the United States met in Colorado Springs, Colorado, for the National Interfraternity Council Convention.

Monday, the Texan received a letter from Dr. Philip L. White, assistant professor of history, which clearly parallels our own thinking on the ticklish question of bias clauses.

"The National Interfraternity Council is on firm ground when it affirms the right of fraternity members to choose their own associates.

"Certainly an individual or a private group can make itself as snobbish and anti-social as he or it pleases as long as laws are not violated.

"However, if the Council is to exalt this freedom, it seems to me that consistent observance of the principle would require elimination of hard and fast national rules designed to limit the choice of members arbitrarily by excluding all people of certain racial or religious groups regardless of their individual worth and possible attractiveness to members of a local chapter.

"It seems to me that every chapter should, according to this principle, be free to decide for itself whom it wished to invite to membership and that there should be no arbitrary restrictions of the right.

"The National Interfraternity Council has come be forced to take a more positive and stronger stand on bias clauses as more and more institutions accept the theory that selectivity should be on a local basis only.

Some schools have said they will not allow a fraternity with a national bias clause to remain on their campus; others are requiring removal or progress toward removal of the clauses by a definite date.

We believe that such requests are neither unreasonable nor out of line—that in the long run such a pratice is actually more fair to each individual fraternity.

However, we feel just as strongly that complete freedom of choice must rest with the local group. And it is the group's privilege to be as restrictive or exclusive as it chooses. This is the essence of the fraternity system.

Particularly repugnant to us is the reported attempt by some schools to require the local fraternity to furnish proof of non-discrimination, i.e. forced pledging a man of another religion or race.

It is this move that fraternities as a whole fear (rightly so) and are fighting against.

We believe (and as Dr. White has implied) that the only way for the two viewpoints to be reconciled into any kind of workable solution is to let basis of selection rest exclusively and finally within the local group.

Fire In Fairmont Raises Questions

From Fairmont the other day came a story about firemen standing by idly as a frame house was devoured by flames just outside the city limits.

Their refusal to fight the blaze, said firemen, was based on a city law requiring prsons outside the corporate limits to pay a $10 deposit for fire protection. The owner of the burning house had not paid the deposit.

That leads us to wonder at least two things: (1) whenever a fire occurs in Fairmont, or vicinity, do officials have to thumb through a register to see if they can answer the call?

And, (2) Could the county not make some arrangements, as is done in other North Carolina counties, to help pay expenses of city fire departments and receive rural protection for their contributions to the fire department?

It's hard enough for a city to require arbitrary sums for fire protection outside its corporate limits, but it's a lot harder to stand back and watch a home go up in flames just because it's on the wrong side of the street.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Soviets Laugh, But America Can Take Joke

By WHIT WHITFIELD

The United States has done it again. They have shown the world that they are infallible. The story of the expected rocket launching was louder that the shot heard round the world. The world is laughing, especially the Soviets, but we always were good sports when we were the butt of a joke. It might be a good idea for a congressional commitee to find out whether we even have a rocket to launch. It might be a gigantic hoax.

Senator Kerr Scott has said that he prefers an ailing Eisenhower to a healthy Nixon. We are inclined to believe that we don't have so much an ailing Eisenhower as a robust Adams. We understand that Sherman will be inaugurated after Christmas, marking the first time since 1776 that the United States has been under royal rule.

How does King Sherman I sound? Maybe Hagerty will get a dukedom if he keeps his nose clean. Nixon will be out in the cold so to speak. This is trgaic considering the amount of work being done for him recently, making a golden boy out of what has been considered a ruthless politician.

Sherman may let him share California with Goodwin Knight if there's room. (They aren't the best of friends it seems. Eisenhower may get all of the Southern Pines-Pinehurst area for a golf course. The Statistics Intitute of the Greater University could keep his score.

Yesterday we met one of our political opponents on campus, and as a parting statement, he said, "Let's go to class." This is an old hackneyed expression used by all enlightened students to mean," I've got to go to class, so why don't you shut up."

We cautioned him to be careful or he would get educated. His reply, "Don't worry, I've just got to sharpen my pencils." What he obviously hasn't thought of before is that if he should sharpen all his pencils at his first class, he could call it a day.

The new editor was thinking seriously of dropping this column as a public service, but the three readers (Two high school sophomores and a demented birdwatcher) objected. This all goes to prove that the public must be served.

The aftermath of the UNC victory over Duke was the quietest one on record in these parts. A few cars whirled dizzily around town with whooping occupants, but their departure only emphasized the prevailing silence. Are Carolina students becoming accustomed to winning even before they have had much, or did they anticipate the victory?

POLITICAL PERSPECTIVE

Evans' 'State Of Campus' Address Showed 'Hard Work And Thought'

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Much to his credit, Student Body President Sonny Evans made some definite stands on controversial and unpopular issues. I thought his State of the Campus Address to the Student Legislature showed the effects of some hard work and thougt.

The speech was concerned largely with interpreting the problems of the university with relation to the expected increased enrollment. During the course of his talk Evans made several suggestions for action.

He proposed that the executive committee in each dorm be given the power to ask a boy to leave and that counsellors be given the responsibility of and authority to enforce quiet hours. He asked that the dorm advisers pay be increased and their quarters improved and that the IDC be given a hand in the selection of counsellors.

He said that the football players should be given freedom of choice with regards to room. Although he spoke against Negro segregation on the campus, he did not make any statement for direct action.

He said he was going before the Faculty Council to present a proposal for placing the granting of excuses for illnesses as a matter of honor betwen the instructor and the student.

The other parts of the speech were concerned with general suggestions and praise.

The talk could have been more definitive, but I find it remarkable that one connected with student government should say anything which has only one meaning.

There were a number of issues raised by this talk, but I will deal with them when legislation is started to enact them.

At the last Legislature meeting Speaker Don Furtado encouraged the members to speak any time they had something to say. I feel that one of the unfortunate situations existing in the Legislature is that so few of the legislators voice an opinion. About ten members of the body do nearly 95 per cent of the debating.

More members should, if they feel they have something to say, join the discussions. The party floorleaders should try to let the members of their parties have a chance to speak.

This assembly has been fruitful in its production of bills, and I hope it continues. However, there are some representatives who feel that all being a member of the Student Legislature entails is the attendance of a party caucus and the meeting Thursday night.

I should like to see each representative participating in the debate at least once during his term.

I feel that unless Charlie Gray's resolution to condemn the conduct of the Student Legislature for its stand on racial intergration is substantially changed it will meet certain defeat.

Time has passed by the SSL and its stand; most of the fire has gone from the issue.

The Legislature was wise, I believe, however, to hold the resolution in commitee; it was only fair to give Gray, who was unavoidably absent, a chance to speak on the bill which he introduced.

Caleb White's resolution to resume classes after Christmas one day later (Jan. 3) is certainly one I like.

It passed the legislature by special orders without meeting any detectable opposition.

It's future with the University Administration is, I fear, going to be less assured. I am afraid that the introduction of the resolution came too late in the year. Even if nothing is done this year, something should be planned for next year.

Travel on Jan. 1 is difficult and dangerous, as White stated. If the Administration will add one day to the Christmas vacation, that will be fine. However, if this change means losing a day before Christmas, then it will be detrimental to the best interests of a large number of students who must work before Christmas and to whom one day's pay is more important than a day to recuperate after a wild New Year's Eve.

'Rivalry' Termed 'Top-Notch' Show

Norman Corwin's new play, "The Rivalry," starring Raymond Massey, Agnes Moorehead, and Martin Gabel, was seen by Carolina theatre-goers Friday night in Memorial Hall. The substance of "The Rivalry" is a dramatization of the great series of debates held between Stephen A. Douglas and Abraham Lincoln in 1858. Although it has only three characters—Abraham Lincoln, played by Raymond Massey, Stephen A. Douglas, and his wife, Adele, performed by Martin Gabel and Agnes Moorehead, respectively—the play is a study in dramatic intensity. The text of the debates derives from the stenographic record, although the speeches are not always given in their original sequence.

The drama was a fairly obvious example of contemporary social criticism. As students of American history will remember, the subject of the famous debates was the question of slavery and the ultimate extension of civil rights to Negroes on a national basis. Those who have read the newspapers during our present age of civil rights and states rights furor realized, when they saw "The Rivalry," that today's arguments are repetitions of those made in the Illinois senatorial election campaign of 1858. Today, fortunately, we are more confident that civil war is not imminent.

The three principals gave magnificent performances. Given a script based, for the most part, on political speeches with practically no action, the performers constructed a play that was not only exciting, but totally absorbing.

It was indeed easy to understand the success of Mr. Massey in the famous "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" after seeing him in Memorial Hall Friday night. His performance had the authoritative touch of a master craftsman, from the homespun portrayal of Lincoln's earthy humor to the moving heights of Lincoln's impassioned "A house divided against itself cannot stand.

Mr. Gabel, as Stephen A. Douglas, the "little giant, turned in the intelligent and highly impressive performance of a seasoned professional. A small man, Mr. Gabel made the theatre resound with such lines as "not only purity of government but purity of blood!" In the last scenes of the play, when Douglas was helping Lincoln, the newly elected President, to save the rapidly disintegrating union, he pointed up with great sympathy and understanding the unfolding tragedy of the house divided against itself.

The role of Adele Douglas, although not a part of the basic conflict of the principles expressed, was the catalyst that made a series of political speeches into a play. Agnes Moorehead in the part proved herself once more to be one of the great ladies of the American stage. As Mrs. Douglas, she narrated the background to the action and provided several delightful and revealing scenes imagined by the playwright to have taken place between herself and Douglas and Lincoln. Although the greater portion of Miss Moorehead's time on stage was passed in listening to the debates, even her silence was magnificent.

The setting, bare except for a speakers' platform and a flag with thirty-two stars, was simple and effective. Miss Moorehead's costumes were appropriately gorgeous, while the men's costumes, faithful to historical detail, were sufficiently baggy.

All in all, the play, brought to Chapel Hill under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers, provided a delightful evening of top-notch theatre.

Judith Players Regret Decision

Members of the cast of "Judith," Petite Dramatique production to be held Sunday and Monday nights in the main lounge of Graham Memorial, sent the following letters to the Daily Tar Heel. They are self explanatory.

"The undersigned members of the cast and crew of "Judith" regret very much the loss of Harry Moore to the play. We think that the decision forbidding Mr. Moore's participation is a serious mistake: it seems to us, weighing the facts known to us, that the decision, based officially on the fact that Mr. Moore is no longer a student at the University, failed to adequately take into account the fact that Mr. Moore was a student here until Thursday, at which time he decided was a student here until Thursday, at which time he decided for personal reasons to leave school. In other words, at the time when Mr. Moore was approached to read for a role and up until four days before the production, Mr. Moore was a student in good standing.

"The decision also fails to consider the sensibilities of the persons involved—the members of the cast. Aside from the fact that Mr. Moore has done an excellent job in his role, at this latter date the sudden removal of any member of the cast is an upsetting thing. Considering that some twenty people have devoted a great part of the last month to "Judith", the loss of Mr. Moore becomes a deeply felt injustice.

"In addition, the close friendship felt by the cast for M.. Moore, plus our sincere appreciation of his fine work which has been crucial in the progress of the play, make us extremely anxious to see that he gets the credit and satisfaction which are his due reward.

"We do recognize the position of the University in this matter and do not wish to condemn its decision:, but we sincererly feel that the hurt done to the play, individuals concerned, and in the long run to the University, should override a matter of arbitrary policy."

Symposium Fund Committee 'Quite Pleased' With Results

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Carolina Symposium finance committe has gone into full swing under the leadership of Al Goldsmith, chairman of the committee and treasurer of the General Symposium.

The duties of Goldsmith's committee are the raising of funds and the preparation and administration of a budget for the Symposium program.

A list of those who have contributed to the Symposium thus far read: Student Government, Graham Memorial, University Party, Pi Kappa Alpha, Order of the Old Well, Chi Phi, Delta Delta Delta, Alpha Delta Pi and Kappa Delta.

Also: Chi Psi, Interfraternity Council, Alpha Gamma Delta, Chi Omega, Political Science Department from the Falk Foundation Grant, Pi Beta Phi, Order of the Grail, Interdormitory Council, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Zeta Beta Tau, Phi Gamma Delta, Lambda Chi Alpha and the Kappa Delta pledges.

Chairman Goldsmith gave The Daily Tar Heel the following statement for today's paper: "We are quite pleased with the way money has ben coming into the Symposium this year. The campus has recognized the importance and the signfigance of the Symposium and has responded most generously to our request for funds.

"Althought we are still some distance from our goal of $5,000, we stand with over $,700 raised to date, considerably ahead of where the Symposium stood in 1955.

"We wish to urge all those groups who will saon be approached by members of the Symposium to consider our request and assume their share of the load in supporting the Symposium. We believe these groups will be greatly rewarded when the Symposium is presented in March."

Goldsmith is a junior and has ben active in a wide variety of activities here on campus aside from his Symposium job. He has ben secretary of Chi Phi Fraternity, University Party floor leader, vice chairman of the UP, chairman of the ways and means commitee of the Student Legislature, a member of the orientation commitee and a member of Phi Eta Sigma.

The following people are members of the Symposium finance committee: Belle Corey, John B. Lewis, Benny Thomas, Bob Horowitz, Penny Norman, Don Harris, John Brooks, Kelly Manness and Roy Holsten and Rollie Tillman from the faculty.

The annual Christmas Concert in the Tuesday Evening Series has also been scheduled. The Chapel Hill Choral Club and the University Glee Club, under the direction of Joel Carter, will perform on Tuesday, Dec. 17.

Suspect Held Without Bond In Mock Trial

By ED ROWLAND

Probable cause for criminal proceeding against Buddy Payne, UNC football captain this fall who is accused of "killing" Pete Beaman, was found in Manning County Magistrate's Court yesterday.

Payne is being held in Manning County jail without benefit of bond pending a hearing before a special grand jury Monday.

Manning County Sheriff Carl Churchill presented sufficient evidence before the magistrate's court was knifed to death in a fight with Payne Thursday night in front of the Tri-Delt house.

Solicitor Jack Hudson, in an interview after the proceedings yesterday, said he feels the evidence presented is suficient for him to request the grand jury to return a true bill to an indictment of first dgeree murder.

Hudson withheld further comment, as did Payne's attorney.

First Frosh Loss; Moe Scores 26

By DAVE WIBLE

The Tar Babies lost their first game yesterday atfernoon to the Duke freshman, 71-68, in a nip and tuck ball game that could have gone either way.

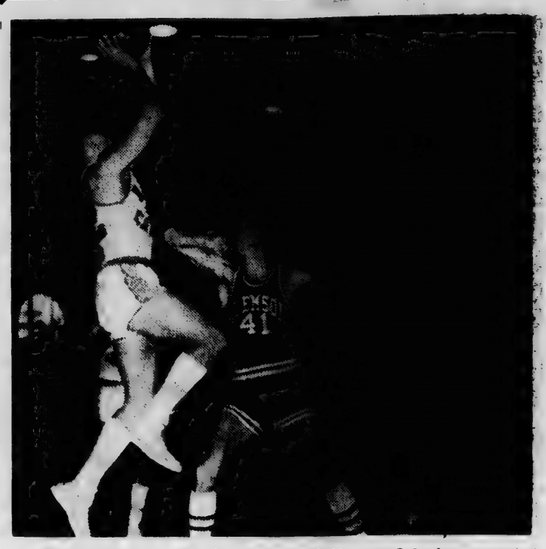
The Tar Babies, playing before a crowd of several hundred who stayed after the Carolina-Clemson varsity game, had the edge to the end of the half, 35-35. They had led 28-16 after ten minutes of playing, but the Duke's gradually closed the lead.

Second half Close

After the intermision, the Blue Imps took the lead with 14 minutes left, 44-47. From then until the five minute mark, the advantage shifted back and forth, either team having more than a thre point spread. With five minutes left, the Duke made it 63-61 in their favor and playing possession ball went on to win the game.

The Tar Babies played well against the taller Imps, but loosened up when Duke began to press in the final minutes. Doug Moe, was the squad's mainstay and high scorer. The 6-5 foreward hit 26, most of them coming from a short jump shot around the foul line.

Donohue Second



Tar Baby center Hugh Donohue was runner up in the scoring with 20. He used his 6 feet eight inches well under the backboards, and finished with top rebounding honors.

The Blue Imps were led by their high school All-American center Doug Kistler who hit 20. Howard Hurt a 6-2 foreward was second for the Duke's with 17.

The Tar Babies next game will be with Wilmington Junior College at Wilmington next Wednesday.

Swimmers Meet ECC In Opener Tomorrow

By MAC MaHAFFY

The Carolina Swimmers move into action here tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Bowman Gray Indoor, when they meet the East Carolina team. Coach Pat Eary has given the probable lineup.

In the 50 and 100 yards freestyle will be Bill Zickgraf, Walt Rose, and Bill Roth. In the 200 yard butterfly will be Paul Wachendorfer, Bob Turner, and Telfair Mahaffy. In the 200 backstroke race will be Brent Nash.

The distant events will be filled by Tony Schiffman, Glen Green, and Nash McIntosh. The diving will be done by Ned Meekins, Pete Renolds, and Dick Cashwell. In the 200 breastsroke race will be Wilson Cooper, Mahaffy, and Wachendorfer.

Defending ACC Champs

The swimmers are defending ACC champs and have five All-Americans who are returning lettermen, and a group of highly talented juniors and sophomores. The team ranked fifth in the nation last year.

The freshmen swim team meets Staunton there tomorrow. Outstanding in pre-meet workouts have been Harry Bloom, Randy Dodson, Vinny Simelton, Bob Hunter, and Joe Kalkurst. Coach Barareke is pleased with workouts and hopes for a decisive win in their first meet.

The schedule:

Dec. 13—at Clemson; 14—at South Carolina; 17—Duke. Jan. 4—Virginia; 11—at Maryland; 16—N. C. State. Feb. 1—East Carolina; 8—Florida; 10—Carolina collegiates; 14—Wake Forest; 21—N. C. State; 27—March 1—ACC Championships (here).

Matmen Take Win Over W&L

LEXINGTON, VA.—Carolina's varsity and freshman wrestlers rebounded from a double defeat at the hands of Virginia Friday night with a couple of wins over Washington and Lee College here last night. The varsity won 23-11 and the frosh, 30-10.

The victory gave Coach Sam Barnes' matmen a 1-1 record for both varsity and freshmen.

The two wins against the Generals were even more one-sided than Virginia's margin in the Friday night affair.

Easy for varsity

In the varsity event, Rob Boyette lost his 177 match to Hollister of W&L by default. Boyette was winning when he suffered an eye cut. Henry Rhyne of Carolina lost a decision to Patton of W&L. In the 167 class, Brennan of W&L defeated J. W. Welborn and they were the only three Tar Heel losses.

Dave Wall, Perrin Henderson, Gary Cooper and Ken Hoke all won for the Tar Heels by pinning their opponent. Dave Atkinson of Carolina won the only Tar Heel decision, 5-3 over Gil Holland.

In the freshman division, only Tar Heel David Turnbill was defeated. Chip Woodrum, Jim Marks, Phil Davis, John Henderson, Gene Smith and John Matney all had easy victories. All except Matney won by pinning. He won by default.

The Summary

123-Wall (C) pinned Robin (2:40); 130-Patton (W&L) decisioned Rhyne (8-4); 137-Henderson (C) pinned Pipard (6:45); 147-Cooper (C) pinned Lemmon (6:57); 157-Hoke (C) pinned Alley (6:30); 167-Brennan (W&L) decisioned Welborn (6-2); 177-Hollister (W&L) won over Boyette (default); Heavyweigh-Atkinson (C) decisioned Holland (5-3).

Frosh

123-Woodrum (C) pinned Stone, 1:20; 130-Marks (C) pinned Croesdaile, 8:00; 137-Henderson (C) pinned Cottrell, 4:10; 147-Davis (C) pinned Smith, 1:50; 157-Darko (W&L) pinned Turnbill, 2:30; 167-Smith (C) pinned Borney, 2:08; 177—Matney (C) defeated Hursley, forfeit.

Carolina Coasted In 2nd Half; GW Tuesday

coming off with a final field goal percentage of 56.6 and a free throw average of 58.6. The Tigers were 34.7 and 53.8.

Clemson started the second half with a bang, getting seven points before the Tar Heels could score, but Kearns and Co. shook the momentary slump and revived their precision—like work to keep the margin about the same the rest of the way. Actually, the final score was as close as the Tigers came to the Tar Heels in the final half.

Top rebounders for Carolina were Pete Brennan with seven, Shaffer with six and Kepley with 5. Brennan also chipped in with 14 points to place second. After that the scoring was fairly evenly distributed.

The Tar Heels leave tomorrow for Washington, D. C. where they will encounter George Washington Tuesday night.

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

McGuire Completely Satisfied With Performance

Frank McGuire is glad the 1957-58 basketball season is on the road and he's "completely satisfied" with his club's performance against the Clemson Tigers yesterday afternoon.

"That national championship crown has been digging into my head since last March," McGuire smiled following yesterday's 79-55 victory over the Tigers. "I've never been as anxious to begin a season in my life."

McGure continued that he was completely happy with the boy's performance "I think they looked very good," he said. "I was a little worried in the second half when they lost a little of their spark."

Thinks Clemson Is Much Better Club

When reminded that Clemson had outscored the Tar Heels in the second half, McGuire jested: "We like to win the games, not the halves." McGuire was of the opinion that Clemson was a much better team than it showed in the first half. "After seeing them against Duke, it was the last thing I ever expected to see," McGuire said, referring to the Tar Heel's 39-14. halftime lead.

The Tar Heel monter thought that his club's tremendous start in which it scored 15 points before Clemson could get a field goal definitely unnerved the Tigers. "They were very nervous the entire first half," he said.

McGuire was happy with the way his three sophomores performed "Stanley (Ray), Schaffer (Lee) and Kepley (Dick) all did real well," he commented. "We would really be in fine shape if we had Quigg," he stated with a bit of remorse in his face.

"We'll still experiment with the club for a while," McGuire avered. "Against George Washington Tuesday night we'll probably have Salz in the starting lineup and take out Kepley or Schaffer (who started yesterday) since George Washington has a smaller team."

Grant-In-Aid Finally Becomes Law

Virginio yielded and the grant-in-aid program became a legality in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

ACC members met in Greensboro Friday and finally got the necessary recruiting headaches and consequently should lessen the chances of ACC schools being penalized by the NCAA for recruiting infractions.

Under the new rule, should a prospective student's admittance and financial aid application be approved by the school and certified by the conference commission on or after July 1, then the other conference schools will accept him as 'belonging' to that school and will keep 'hands off.'

The student, however, can in 'good faith' ask that he be relieved of his commitment and, if this is approved by the conference commissioner, can participate in athletics at other ACC schools. The rule becomes effective July 1.

Fine Thing For Atlantic Coast Conference

This is a move in the right direction for the ACC, a conference which, though still in comparative infancy, is quickly becoming a well-organized and harmonious organization.

South Carolina brought up a proposal which we would like to see throw open NCAA-approved football bowl games to all conference members.

The proposal was withdrawn and will be brought up at a later date but it is certainly a matter worthy of much consideration. This corner is not an advocate of the present bowl tie-up plan. We'd personally like to see the bowl program thrown wide open, thereby assuring that the best teams in the land would participate in the New York's Day classics, regardless of which conference they're in.

This is, we admit, an idealistic view because of the extenuating circumstances, namely money, involved. Some conferences might not have any team in the bowls, thus missing the 'gravy' which comes from the bowl games. We do, however, believe that the bowls are, at present, too commericialized and would like to see some sort of moderations inserted into the now stereotyped bowl situation.

Nikita

MOSCOW, Dec. 6 (AP) — Nikita Khrushchev declared tonight part of the carrier rocket of Sputnik I fell in the United States Sunday and the Americans won't give it back.

The Communist Party secretary emphasized he meant the United States itself, not simply the American continent.

"We relied on them, trusting in their decency, but they did not live up to our trust," He remarked to correspondents at a Finnish embassy reception. "If an American Sputnik ever falls on Soviet territory we will return it promptly to the United States."

U. S. Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson was informed of Khrushchev's charge and said: "This is the first I have heard of it."

Monogram Club Will Sponsor Scholarship

At the Monogram Club meeting Thursday night, it was decided that the club would finance a $700 scholarship for an athelete in need who does not have an athletic scholarship.

In conjunction with the Jr. Service League, the Monogram Club is adopting a needy family for the Empty Stocking Fund.

Browns Just Waiting For Title Rival

(AP) — The Cleveland Browns, having clinched their seventh Eastern conference title in eight years, can lend a helping hand to the Baltimore Colts' championship hopes in the National Football League's Western race today.

While the Colts take their "help themselves' campaign into San Francisco's Kezar Stadium against the challenging 49ers, the Browns are in Detroit to play the Lions—the third club still in contention for the Western title.

Other Officers Chosen At Meeting Last Night

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

John Patrick Adams, a senior from Asheboro, was elected chairman of the Student Party last night.

By a vote of acclaimation Miss Betty K. Johnson, a junior from Hopkinsville, Ky., was elected SP secretary, and Ken Friedman, a freshman from Lock Arbour, N. J., sergeant-at-arms.

Leon Holt was elected to fill a legislative seat from Dorm Men's IV. The seat was formerly held by Al Alphin.

Connie Bernstein, was appointed SP filing clerk. Al Walters, Jim Pittman, Roger Foushee and Gray Greer were elected members of the SP advisory Board.

The candidates for the position of chairman were Gary Greer, Davie Jones and John Brooks. Tom Long was nominated but withdrew and urged support of John Brooks.

Divid Evans, Gray Greer and Roger Foushee were all nominated for the position of vice-chairman. Other candidates for a spot on the advisory board were Dave Jones, Erwin Fuller, Bob Matthews, Charles Graham and Miss Christy Farnham.

Denton Lotz, SP Treasurer, announced that the party had assets of $639.59 and liabilities of $543.17. Eighty dollars of this balance was used to pay back bills.

Whit Whitfield, past SP Chairman, said that the party would pay its part of the campaign expenses incurred by Doug Eisele, SP-UP endorsed candidate in the recent recall election of The Daily Tar Heel.

The bill amounts to around $75.

Harold Bakken, president of the National Student Association [illegible] introduced by Student Body President Sonny Evans.

Bakken will be in Roland Parker Lounge of Graham Memorial today at 2 p.m. to speak to students interested in NSA.

He is visiting the campus as a function of his job of chairman of the NSA foreign student leadership project. He was formerly president of the student body of the University of Minnesota.

Hussein Naser from Egypt is the student at UNC who is connected with the NSA project. There are 15 other schools across the nation which are participating in this project.

Deans Will Study Plan

Student leaders were told in a Chancellor's Cabinet meeting yesterday that Deans of the University will meet within the next several days to act on a proposal calling for abolition of classes January 2.

Chancellor William B. Aycock said Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty, will call a meeting of the deans to make recommendations to the Chancellor after a study of the proposal passed last week by the legislature.

There still was no indication as to whether students will be granted the extra day over the Christmas holidays. It has been requested on grounds of inconveniences in travel and hazardous diriving conditions on New Year's day.

Chancellor Aycock also disclosed to student leaders that a seven-member committee will be set up to study a proposal by Student Body President Sonny Evans that class excuses be placed on an "honor system" basis.

Under the proposed plan, students absent from class would be placed on their honor to provide valid excuses to their instructors. It would replace the current system of obtaining excuses from advisors and deans.

Among other business brought before the Cabinet meeting were reports by Charles Shaffer, Director of Development, and Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver.

Shaffer's report pointed out the role of alumni gifts in meeting the broad development programs of the University. He emphasized the role of student leaders in explaining to students the importance of such gifts.

"No state institution has ever gained eminence through student fees and state appropriations alone," he said. Rather, they have depended heavily on donations from alumni and friends.

Dean Weaver, citing eight residence hall projects now underway or planned at the University, said a major problem which will confront the University in future years is provision of board facilities for the new residential centers.

He noted that ceiling of expenditure for all new dormitory construction here is limited to $2,500 per student, while the ceiling for other universities is often much higher — sometimes even double —that limit.

"We are, however, despite these limitations, improving our dormitory facilities," he said.

Symphony Orchestra To Perform At Hill Hall Tonight At 8 O'clock

The University Symphony Orchestra conducted by Prof. Earl Slocum will present a coneert in Hill Music Hall tonight at 8 o'clock. There will be no admission charge, and the public is invited.

Jan Philip Schinhan will be featured as soloist in Handel's Concerto in F Major for organ and orchestra. Dr. Schinhan has been head of the Organ Department at the University since 1935.

The orchestra will open the program with the Adagio and Fugue in C Minor by Mozart. This will be followed by the Organ Concerto by Handel after which Dr. Schinhan will present an impromptu composition on themes submitted by the audience.

Improvisation, which was often practiced by Bach and other organists of the period, is almost a lost art. It is an art which demands a sound knowledge of harmony and counterpoint as well as a creative mind. Dr. Schinhan is one of few composers and organists in the world today who is adept in classical improvisation.

After intermission Charles T. Griffes' composition, "The White Peacock," will be presented in an orchestra version which was scored by the composer in 1917.

The three remaining compositions represent contemporary composers: Granville English, a native of Kentucky and now living in New York will be represented by his symphonic tone poem "Evening by the Sea" which is after a Sonnet by William Wordsworth.

Jole Chadabe's "Ner Tamid" was composed on commission from the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation of UNC. This is its premier performance. Chadabe is a junior music major from New York City.

The final composition on the program "Dance Overture" by Paul Creston completed in December, 1954, was commissioned by the National Federation of Music Clubs for its biennial convention of 1955 and was first performed on April 24, 1955, in Miami, Fla.

"Dance Overture" is in four sections, played without pause. Each section is an idealization of a national dance rhythm: the Spanish bolero, the English country dance, the French loure, and the American square dance.

Jury Indicts Payne In Brennan 'Killing'

By ED ROWLAND

A true bill indicting Roland "Buddy" Payne for "murder" was returned by a special grand jury last night. Payne is charged with "slaying" basketball star Pete Brennan Thursday, apparently over a coed.

Testimony of witnesses Sarah Van Weyk and Gail Willingham enabled the grand jury to return the bill without much deliberation.

Payne is being held in the Manning County jail without benefit of bond. His trial is scheduled for 7:30 p. m. Friday in the Manning Hall courtroom. Presiding will be N. C. Superior Court Judge Malcolm Seawell of Lumberton.

The events are leading up to the annual mock trial sponsored by Alpha Delta Phi law fraternity.

Immediately after the hearing Payne, leaving the room, appeared unruffled and unworried. Chief Defense Counsel Gaston Gage told reporters the trial Friday would surely result in Payne's acquittal.

But the prosecution head, Solicitor Jack Hudson, said Friday the 13th would prove to be a most unlucky day for Payne. He said he felt confident the jury of "12 good men and true" will return a verdict of murder in the first degree against Payne.

Unofficial reports from the hearing indicated Misses Van Weyk and Willingham gave testimony damaging to Payne's cause. Both girls said they were on the scene and saw Payne aruging with Brennan before the fight between the two, the source said.

Reports indicate Payne apparently was jealous of Brennan for dating a coed he had been dating. Miss Willingham told the grand jury Payne made threatening calls to her after she began dating Brennan.

Payne, a 21-year-old senior majoring in pre-med, is from Norfolk, Va. He was co-captain of the football team this season.

Brennan was a tall 21-year-old senior from Brooklyn, N. Y., and a member of the national champion basketball team. Coach Frank McGuire was counting heavily upon Brennan to take up the slack left in last year's squad by the graduation of Lennie Rosenbluth and the injury of Joe Quigg.

Funeral services for Brennan were conducted in Brooklyn sunday.

Playmaker Production To Open Wednesday

Carolyn Myers of Raleigh, and Robert Kettler of Wyncote, Pa., have the leading roles in the current Playmakers production, James M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows," scheduled to open Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre for a five-performance run.

Miss Myers re-creates the part of Maggie Wylie, a role made famous by Helen Hayes and Maude Adams.

Miss Myers, a junior in Dramatic Arts, has been active in the Raleigh Little Theatre, appearing in "The Philadelphia Story," "The Time of the Cuckoo," and another Barrie play, "The Admirable Crichton."

Kettler plays John Shand, who accepts Maggie as a wife in return for three hundred pounds to "purchase an education." Kettler will be remembered for his role as the inquisitor in "The Lark." He has also appeared in "Peer Gynt" and the Petite Dramatique production of "Caligula."

Kettler is a Dramatic Arts graduate student looking forward to a teaching career.

Tickets for "What Eery Woman Knows" are on sale at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Phi Society Bill Tonight To Ask Removal Of Coeds

That "the admission of female citizens as students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill be immediately discontinued" will be the subject of debate by the Philanthropic Literary Society tonight at 8 o'clock on the top floor of New East.

The proposal will be submitted to Jim Tolbert, president, by member Warren Collidge of the Ways and Means Committee.

Three reasons for presenting the bill were given in an early release by the society. They are:

"1. Whereas: the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was founded and for more than one hundred years existed for the education of male citizens; and

"2. Whereas: The state of North Carolina provides an institution of higher learning in the city of Greensboro for the education of female citizens; and

"3. It is desirable to return to the ideal and principle upon which this great University was founded."

Di To Debate SSL Selection

The Dialectic Senate will debate a bill confirming the recent action of the State Student Legislature tonight at 8 o'clock in Di Hall on the third floor of New West.

Included in the bill is a provision suggesting that the SSL delegates be chosen in the future by campus-wide elections.

Presently SSL delegates are picked from Carolina by an interim committee. Action of the last Legislature drew fire from many quarters, including Gov. Luther Hodges, for debating bills to repeal all laws prohibiting inter-racial marriage and a bill to legalize prostitution.

Di President Jerry Boudreau said new members would be installed at tonight's meeting. He added that, "It is pertinent for all members to be present."

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Faculty Group To See Play

The Faculty Newcomers Club will see a Christmas play presented by Chapel Hill children who are students of Mrs. Louise Lamont, dramatics teachers, today at 3:30 p. m. in the Morehead Building.

"The Princess and the Hundred Dolls" is the title of the play.

Special guests will be Mrs. Lamont's Durham drama students who who will perform the same play at Allied Arts in Durham Dec. 15.

The cast follows:

Bill Patterson plays Fearless, Captain of the Guard, and the little guardsmen will be Rob Patterson, Pat Hughes, James Gulick, Alwin Hogan.

Experiment To Be Discussed

An experiment that has been featured in several leading magazines will be discussed here Wednesday by a Notre Dame University physiologist.

The experiment centers around raising germ-free animals in a closed system without bacteria.

Dr. H. A. Gordon, who is director of Lobound Institute where the experiment is taking place, will discuss some of the findings Wednesday at 4 p. m. in the School of Medicine.

The topic of his speech will be "Germ-Free Life, Normal and Pathological Physiology."

The Lobound Institute is the only such laboratory in the world. The physiological and biological aspects of animals raised under bactrica-free conditions are studied at the Institute.

Mixed Bridge Tourney Set

A Mixed Bridge Tournament, sponsored by the GMAB Tournaments and Contests Committee, will be held Thursday at 7 p. m. in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2.

Fraternities and sororities and men and women's dorms have been urged by the committee to promote challanges and to submit the names to the GM Information desk.

Prizes will be given to the winning and the poorest teams, and the two best partnerships.

Betty Reece is the chairman of the Tournaments and Contests Committee. Other members of the committee included Ben Levy, Bill Henshaw, Fletch Bryan, Bill Ashendorff and Christie Farnham.

Dr. Henderson Wins Award

This time it was the 26th annual Mayflower Society Award for the best non-fiction volume of the year. Dr. Henderson received the award at the annual meeting of the North Carolina Literary and Historical Association Friday.

Dr. Henderson won with his book, "George Bernard Shaw: Man of the Century." It was the third North Carolina literary award he has received for his works on Shaw.

In 1911, Dr. Henderson won the Patterson Memorial Cup for his volume, "George Bernard Shaw: His Life and Work"; and in 1932 he was awarded the Mayflower Cup for "Bernard Shaw, Playboy and Prophet."

National Fraternities Must Retain Rules For Selection

Sunday we ran an editorial from The Daily Texan which discussed "bias clauses" in national fraternity charters. It suggested that basis for selection of members for a fraternity not be subject to national laws written into the national charters.

"We feel . . . that complete freedom of choice must rest with the local group," the editorial commented. "And it is the group's privilege to be as restrictive or exclusive as it chooses . . ."

In view of Student Body President Sonny Evans' address before the legislature last week, "discriminatory" clauses and problems it presents have taken on real meaning at UNC. Evans said that the "discriminatory clause" in fraternity charters, amon othger things, has "gone unnoticed by responsible students for too long a time."

Implications of Evans' statement are, in his own words, that some clauses in fraternity charters are "discriminatory." On a national level, discrimination has come to mean the exclusion of an individual from a fraternity becaue of race or creed.

We do not feel that discrimination, as such, stems from laws in national fraternity charters simply beause those laws may restrict to membership persons of the same creed or of the same race. We feel that to infringe on the charters of national fraternities would be to infringe on the rights of individuals who comprise those organizations.

A national organization, with subordinate members who determine by majority vote the laws of that organization, should have the power to enforce, by threat of expulsion, members who do not subscribe to the principles and rules which it establishes.

For those local chapters which feel they cannot live within the laws of the national organization, there are ways to admit to their chapters whomever they desire, regardless of race or creed. And the easiest way for a local chapter to escape rules not of its own liking are to disassociate itself with the national organization.

To our way of thinking, it is not discriminatory when a person is denied entrance to a private organization because he cannot meet the requirements of the organization. It is discriminatory when individuals are denied the right to participate in public organizations or to be included among bodies which comprise public institutions.

We admit, however, that fraternities thrive on the principle of SELECTIVITY—but that is a long way from discrimination. If clauses prohibiting the admission of individuals because of their race or creed is discriminatory, then discrimination also exists when fraternities deny the admission of an individual because he does not meet the arbitrary social or scholastic standards to which a fraternity may subscribe.

Thus, to delegate to a private national organization whom it can or cannot exclude from membership is an infringement on the rights of individuals who make the laws of and are closely bound to the national organization.

If member chapters of a national fraternity cannot subscribe to the requirements of the national organization, then it is better that those member chapters suffer from disassociation with the national organization rather than support the selfish demand that the national organization change its charter to meet practices of a local chapter.

Local chapters are admitted to the unity of a national fraternity through vote of national chapter members. Once admitted, we feel they should be required to meet the standards of the national organization.

Features Depict McGuire, The Man

The fabulous UNC Tar Heel basketballers and the man who has led them to national prominece—Frank McGuire—are featured in two current publications of leading U. S. magazines.

Both last week's edition of Sports Illustrated and this week's publication of The Saturday Evening Post have devoted gracious space to unfold the story of the nation's Number I basketball team.

And both picture the nation's Number I coach as a man not only great among basketball coaches, but one, as well, who sincerely loves his team and treats all his players as if they were his own sons.

Specifically, the "Post" story deals with UNC's thrill-packed victory over Kansas in the NCAA playoffs, but also relates to strategy of McGuire and his team in competition with other schools during last year's season.

It is the story of a cop's son turned rebel, who has used all his brilliance as a basketball coach and personality as an idividual to give the University of North Carolina a sensational basketball team, while conserving respect for the game and devotion to his players.

After reading it, you'll agree that Frank McGuire will remain, if not the Number I coach in the nation, a man of character whose principles of devotion and sincerity far outshine any other praiseworthy comment about him.

As "Sports Illustrated" put it, he's a man who has "an extraordinary ability to get along with people."

And that fact is one reason why Frank McGuire, having been stationed here during the war years, returned in 1952 to lead UNC basketball to its perfect record last year and "to raise his children in a small and unhurried college community."

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Miles Davis Reaches New Jazz Stature

Miles Davis, George Avakian, and Gil Evans have combined to produce an album that will take its place among the truly great recorded jazz performances. It is called "Miles Ahead," and a more descriptive title would be hard to find, for this record surpasses the efforts of almost every jazz artist in reaching new horizons.

Few people are fully aware of the importance of Gil Evans in modern jazz. He arranged a great part of the Claude Thornehill book during the forties, a book that was to have unbounded influence on the formation of what we now call progressive jazz. The band was a dance band, but it did not restrict itself to the stock repertoire of the average dance band. Instead, under Evans' tutelage, it explored many facets of big band music that had not been considered.

Recalling Evans' abilities, George Avakian, Columbia artist and repertoire director, signed him to arrange ten tunes for a Miles Davis big band album. The choice could not have been wiser, for this band is one of the most exciting things in many years.

Essentially the album is a showcase for Davis' trumpet and fluegelhorn in which the band plays the part of a cushion. With artists like Ernie Royal, Frank Rehak, and Paul Chambers, it is an exquisite cushion. It is Davis' horn, however, which is the final delight. Never has a jazz musician been able to achieve the gentle, other-worldly effect which Davis does so easily here. I finally have heard the personification of the expression "out on Cloud 13."

"Miles Ahead" is an emotional experience—as such it cannot be merely listened to; it has to be heard, appreciated, understood. Yet it is the perfect mood record. I cannot think of a better record to give to that special girl or to play when you are alone with her and want something quiet. I might add, however, that you will end up being quiet too, for you will feel a compulsion to listen.

The album has been recorded so that each tune runs into the next without interruption. For this reason one tends to think of it as a comprehensive whole rather than a series of individual pieces. If I had to choose any tunes which appealed to me particularly, I would select Dave Brubeck's sensitive portrayal of Duke Ellington titled simply "The Duke," and the title song.

In conclusion, I can only offer my heartfelt thanks to George Avakian for producing the record, and to Miles Davis and Gil Evans for doing everything right. This is one you can't miss. You owe it to yourself.

Strength Enough If Pulled Together

Miss Moorehead Interviewed Following Performance Here

By FRANK CROWTHER

Last Friday evening, between the frenzied flurry of several affairs, I had the pleasure of interviewing Agnes Moorehead, Raymond Massey and Martin Gabel. Although I was exercising my typewriter at 4:30 in the Daily Tar Heel office while dressed in khaki trousers, dirty shirt and a day-old beard, I was also knocking on the door of room No. 301 in the Carolina Inn at 5:15 looking as if I were an advertisment for Brooks Brothers and running over the three thousand questions I wanted to ask Agnes Moorehead.

I waited in the living room while Miss Moorehead searched through all the rooms for her nightgown, which had apparently disappeared. "I certainly don't think anybody would want THAT for a souvenir," she said. She was dressed in a light blue sweater, full tweed skirt and flat heels. Her finely-carved features were almost un-staged, but forgivably, by a generous amount of red hair gathered into a bun and she had the habit of looking directly at you with piercingly beautiful eyes. One didn't have to ask if this were the "fabulous redhead."

I started the barrage:

Question: Contrary to conceived opinion, don't theater people—I mean the real professionals—have a high standard of personal values? Aren't they almost forced to by the nature of their work?

Miss Moorehead: "I don't think we could say that generally . . . or I don't feel qualified to answer for anyone but myself. People of values, it's so hard to get people to accept you for what you are. So many times I've heard people say, 'There, but for the grace of God, go I. If I tried, I could do the same thing.' But they aren't, and they don't . . . and many of them never could because of the sacrifices and years of hard work involved."

Question: What philosophy would you recommend—other than patience and dedicated work—to a young actor or actress?

Miss Moorehead: "I'd want them to realize that 'The Arts' are extremely hazardous. In any such nebulous medium, you have to expect much disappointment, sorrow, failure and misery. It has its creative magic, but so many only see glamour in the theater and don't recognize that it is 98 percent tedium. This 'Cinderalla' thing just doesn't exist."

Question: Does your own personal perspective change considerably after spending a life in the theater?

Miss Moorehead: "Yes, I think so. You know, most actors are really great humanitarians. They have to be. They look at life so much differently and they take a great deal from life. You're always observing . . . seeking out . . . . taking mental pictures. You must face the possibility, however, that you may always be a poor actor or even a complete failure. But that isn't different from anything else in life. There just are no guarantees or promised rewards. It's the old story of learning life's secrets too late and having your greatest appreciation for it then."

Question: How do you like playing to university audiences?

Miss Moorehead: "They're just divine . . . . just wonderful. And, you know, they're very smart and almost three steps ahead of you from the start. Overall, I've found them quite sympathetic and ready to accept you for what you are and what you have to give."

Miss Mooorchead: "Williams is not my dish of tea. He has done some fine work, but there is too much sickness and sordidness in it. Kazan is a splendid actor and a wonderful director, but it's shock direction. I wish he had a fine spiritual comprehension of theater. I know I do, but I'll probably go down fighting because I'm in the minority."

We talked for almost 45 minutes and I could hardly relate all that was said. But I can say that she impressed me as being a wonderfully sincere and genuine woman. Agnes Moorehead undoubtedly one of ou rgreat ladies of the theater.

'STATE OF CAMPUS'

Evan's Text

The arrival of Chancellor William B. Aycock has brought to the campus an attitude of critical evaluation of every phase of university life and has made this year one of great potentiality. With his spirit of willingness to learn and to be shown whether students are responsible enough to govern themselves, everything we do and say takes on added significance. This does not mean that we should in any way avoid controversy, but, on the other hand, should seek to speak out on those things which are of consequence and significance to this university. If we do not grapple with these problems, then we abdicate our responsibility, and there is no real justification for our existence, and, more important, the true value of Student Government as a real contributor to the campus community is lost.

The administration has given us the opportunity to move in the right direction by their invitation to periodic meetings with the Chancellor's Cabinet; but, only when we consider and make recommendations in such fields as faculty salaries, insufficient number of sabbatical leaves for faculty members, entrance requirements, university development, state legislative support for the Extension Division, married students' housing, and all the rest, do we in any way begin to emerge as the true junior partners in the university community.

The University expects to grow to be around ten thousand by 1965. In order to take care of the expected bulge in number of applicants predicted by the experts, it is most probable that the admissions policy will become more stringent.

These are a few of the questions I want to ask you tonight. Is the structure of Student Government flexible enough to meet any demands that numbers may place upon it? Can the Honor Council as it is presently constituted accommodate an increased load of cases? Are graduate students, who at present represent twenty per cent of the student enrollment, adequately participating in the decisions in Student Government; what is our future if the graduate enrollment is to increase? In the future, will fraternities or sororities with discriminatory clauses in their charters be allowed to come on the campus, and what do students think about the current presence of these clauses? These and other problems of growth present themselves daily to the administration, and as the Chancellor once said, "We must grow great while we grow large." It is with this background of growth, and of an outspoken role for us if we are to be of service that I want to talk with you tonight about a variety of areas.

I. DORMITORY LIFE:

(1) Since the time that the legislature purchased television sets for the dormitories, students have complained about the lack of funds for television set repair and have asked for some source of money other than the dormitory social funds be found. The students owe a great debt of thanks to Business Manager J. A. Branch for his sympathetic and understanding approach; for, with his help, a contingency fund from campus stores profits has been set up and a contract let to a Chapel Hill concern for repair of all those sets bought by Student Government five years ago.

(2) Dormitories should be complete living units, both socially and academically, and they do not at present fulfill these needs for a variety of reasons.

a. Except in a few dorms, there is no such thing as quiet hours. The student soon learns that anything goes because the IDC representatives have the responsibility, but no authority to enforce the rules. The first solution is to give the executive committee in each dorm the authority to ask a boy to leave. In addition, as a second line of defense, the counsellor should be charged with the responsibility and also have the authority to enforce these quiet hours. With only forty per cent of the entering freshmen graduating, something must be done to enhance a tradition of study at the University.
b. With the exception of isolated cases, Little counselling is taking place in the dormitories. Counsellors are paid only $280 (two hundred eighty dollars) a year and are, in too many instances graduate students who do not have an incentive to counsel. Their pay must be increased, and the IDC should participate in the selection of these people. They should be required to submit periodic reports on each boy. They should have access to the records on each student which now reside in South Building. This is one of the ways to correct the antiquated advisor system in South Building which grows more impossible as the University grows larger
c. Ray Jefferies and Dean Weaver are doing an outstanding job, but you cannot run a counselling program for ten thousand students with three or four individuals and one telephone. That is a chronic gripe among student government. The Student Affairs Office must grow as the University grows.
d. Student Government should strive to make recommendations for improved physical plants both in the present dormitories and in the new ones. The quarters of the counsellors should be conducive to counselling and should contain telephones. Hallways should not be caverns which generate noise. A tradition of study in an atmosphere conducive to academic and social pursuits should always be the underlying principle in the building of these new dormitories.

II. THE STUDENT UNION:

(1) With the onrushing tide of student population, the need for more recreational facilities grows apparent. We live in a small town; only 15% of the students are in fraternities; the semester system and the freshman restriction on cars keep students in Chapel Hill on weekends; the present Graham Memorial is only one wing of an original building planned for 2500 students.

Graham Memorial has had twenty-two directors in the last twenty-five years. For the last several years, the prevalent opinion has been that the first step in getting a new building would be to procure a permanent, professional, and experienced director to both run the present program and plan for an expanded facility. That man has been obtained.

Alpha Kappa Psi Hears Talk On Uses Of Atomic Energy

Tomorrow's world will be one in which atomic energy will be completely harnessed for peace-time use, cures for diseases such as cancer will exist, slums will be abolished and we will have economic prosperity such as we have never dreamed of, according to John R. Knott, vice chairman of the board of directors of the Home Finance Group in Charlotte.

Knott spoke before the fall pledge banquet and dance of Alpha Kappa Psi, professional fraternity in business administration. Saturday night at Chapel Hill Country Club.

He emphasized that such accomplishments were not impossible if the future leaders of America did their part in making them a reality. He listed, in the form of a five-pointed star, qualifications that he felt an individual needed in order to help attain the before-mentioned goals of the future: (1) Know yourself—your assets, capabilities, liabilities, etc.; (2) Curiosity—be curious enough to continue probing and attempting to learn after college and throughout life; (3) Enthusiam—Be enthusiastic about your work and the things you believe in; (4) Be industrious in every undertaking; (5) Faith—faith in yourself and the future.

Knott referred to the Southland as the "Promised Land" for further economic development in this country, and urged the audience before him to seriously consider remaining in the South in order to grow industrially with it.

In summary he said, "Where you are matters not so much as where you are going."

Knott was introduced by Dr. Willard J. Graham, director of the executive program at the UNC School of Business Administration.

L. R. Jordan, grand vice president of the fraternity, gave the invocation.

Like love, a book is an intensely personal thing, yet it's delights are doubled when shared with the right person.

Books and love go together.

If old man cupid has stuck you one right where it hurts most, here are some books which will carry a bit more than the usual Christmas message to that Most Important Somebody.

Fireside Book of Love Songs — a big handsome colorful book, with words, music and sighs.

TO PERFORM HERE THURSDAY—Miss Nora Kovach and Istvan Rabovsky, both top stars of the Russian ballet, will perform in Memorial Hall Thursday at 8 p.m. under the auspices of the Student Entertainment Committee. Tickets will be free to students presenting an ID card.

Iron Curtain Escapees To Perform Ballet Here

Two East European dancers, who escaped from behind the Iron Curtain in 1953, will perform in Memorial Hall Thursday at 8 p. m.

Miss Nora Kovach and Istvan Rabovsky, both top stars of the Rusian ballet, are being sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series in conjunction with the Student Entertainment Committee.

Tickets for the concert may be secured free of charge by UNC students upon presentation of ID cards at Graham Memorial Information Desk. ID cards must also be presented at the door at Memorial Hall.

The two dancers will have their dance ensemble Thursday night with two other top performers, Miss Sonia Arova and Job Sanders.

From West Berlin they went to London and Paris to give performances. Later in 1953 the dancers came to the United States. Their first public appearance was on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town."

Since 1953, they have toured in Europe and North America with other ballet companies and with their own.

Other Student Entertainment Committee programs planned this year include: Jan Peerce, tenor, on Feb. 6, 1958; the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra on March 11; and Alec Templeton, pianist, in April.

World In Brief

(AP)-Proposals to take West Germany out of NATO and neutralize her militarily are gaining ground in the Bonn republic.

There is no doubt that Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and Foreign Minister Heinrich von Brentano will go to the NATO summit conference next week determined to stick by the West and work for closer anti-Soviet defense.

The majority of West Germans still seem to be going along with the government's policy, but more of them than ever before are questioning whether Andenauer is right.

'RED SHIRTS'

FORT Mill, S. C., Dec. 9 (AP)-George Tinker, who resigned recently as leader of the Ft. Mill Ku Klux Klan, said today that he and several associates had applied to the Secretary of State for a charter to organize "the Assn. of Southern Red Shirts, Inc."

"We intend for the Red Shirts to develop into an organization to which anyone wil be proud to join," said Tinker of the anti-integration organization. "This is not a hate group."

He added that the "anyone" in his statement does not "of course" include Negroes.

Tinker asserted "We are going to stay as far away from the Ku Klux Klan as we can possibly get."

HALT

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9 (AP)-The Unied States has ordered a halt to military aid shipments to Yugoslavia at the request of Marshal Tito.

Responsible officials who disclosed this today said Tito requested the halt in the program which started in 1950.

Help Requested For Orientation

Qualified sutdents to participate in the orientation program at the beginning of the second semester are being sought, Jerry Oppenheimer, orientation committe chair man, said yesterday.

The accelerated program will take the best the counselor has to offer, Oppenheimer emphasized. He urged that any former counselor or other interested students apply. The program will be held on Jan. 20 and 30.

Oppenheimer said students could contact either Mary Jane Fisher or himself in the near future.

Cagers In Second Tilt At George Washington Tonight

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Another Blow For Cagers — McGuire Calls It

Coach Frank McGuire, among his other attributes, is fast proving himself a prophet, and this is a distinction the Tar Heel coach had just as soon do without.

Some weeks back, before pre-season practice had even shifted into high gear, McGuire stated that he was expecting most anything to happen this season. He felt that his club had gotten all the breaks a year ago and now it was time for old mother fortune to turn her head the other way.

No sooner had the words left the mouth of the Smiling Irishman than veteran center Joe Quigg took a bad spill in a scrimmage game which fractured his leg and sidelined him for the season. This coupled with the previous loss of freshman star (last season) York Larese weakened the Tar Heels considerably.

After the Quigg injury, McGuire reiterated the aforementioned statement, and he was right. Now number one replacement Danny Lotz has been placed on the disabled list because of a broken foot suffered against Clemson Saturday. It wasn't until Sunday that X-rays showed the extent of the injury.

Tar Heels Get 'True Champ' Test

Thus three misfortunes after only one game has made Tar Heel followers wonder if this club isn't really plagued. Fortunately, the three injured men can be largely compensated for this season because the squad is so much deeper than it was a year ago. Had this happened last season, it is doubtful the Tar Heels could have run up their amazing 32-game win streak.

But every cloud has a silver lining, so the story goes, and only Quigg will be lost to the club for the season. Larese is expected to be fully recovered from his off-season knee operation at least by the end of the semester and Lotz's injury should disable him only for several weeks.

Perhaps mother fortune has not turned her head completely on the champs, she might be testing their tenacity. The mark of a true champion, it is said, is to preservere when the odds are negative.

Fans Confident McGuire And Buck Can Do It

Just how much the loss of Lotz will affect the Tar Heels cannot be answered immediately. Certainly Danny is a valuable man in the clutch.

A three-game schedule this week should give the Tar Heels a fairly good test as to how they will fare after their misfortunes. George Washington (tonight), Furman (Thursday) and South Carolina (Saturday) are all supposedly improved ball clubs and each will be out to capitalize on the luck of the Tar Heels in breaking up their fabulous winning streak of 33 straight.

Carolina has a wealth of cage talent. A lot of actual experience, however, is necessary before some of the outstanding sophomores can be judged strictly on their merit, not their reputation. And that's the way McGuire wants it. You might recall before the Clemson game that he was asked to comment on his great sophomores. "They've yet to score two points for the Varsity," he said.

Still, there is that feeling in most all Tar Heel followers (including us) that this is still a crackerjack ball club and with Frank McGuire and Buck Freeman at the helm, old mother fortune will have to do a complete about face before she usurps any of the spark out of this club.

Dave Is All-American; Curt Out In Feburary

Congratulations to Carolina's fine track star Dave Scurlock. The Greensboro junior has won All- American recognition for his efforts in the 880 last spring. Scurlock is fast gaining prestige on the cinders and holds several distinguished conference and state records.

The United Press has named Texas A&M halfback John Crowe as its Player of the Year. Duke's Harold McElhaney was chosen by ACC writers as the top blocker in the conference for the second straight year. McElhaney, an outstanding fullback in his senior year, will receive the Jacobs Blocking Trophy.

Carolina quarterback Curt Hathawy, who broke his right arm against South Carolina Nov. 9 expects to be in a cast until sometime in Feburary. The Norfolk, Va. junior figures he'll miss about a week of spring practice with the Tar Heels.

The Cleveland Browns have scouting problems. The problem is who to scout for their opponent in the NFL championship. The Browns have already won the Eastern Division but the Western Division has a three-way deadlock for first place between Baltimore, San Francisco and Detroit.

Colonials Will Battle 33 Game Win Skein

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels invade one of their old Southern Conference rivals tonight in Washington, D. C. as Coach Frank McGuire sends his national cage champions against a strong George Washington University club at 8 o'clock.

And again the Tar Heel's fabulous win streak—now stretched to 33-in-a-row — will be at stake as the pressure for such a winning skein continues to test the tenacity of this partly veteran and partly inexperienced McGuire assemblage.

The Tar Heels were sharp in their season opener against Clemson here Saturday afternoon as they built up a comfortable 39-14 halftime lead and had comparatively little trouble in overwhelming the Tigers, 79-55 in writing the first page of the new edition in the fortunes of Carolina basketball.

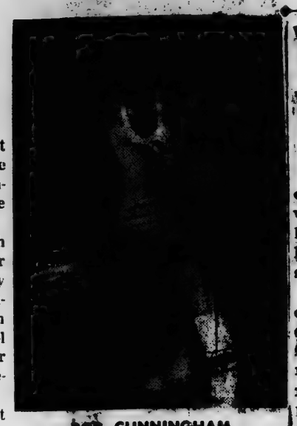
3 This Week

This contest is the first of three for the Tar Heels this week as they prepare to meet strong intersectional competition beginning Dec. 20 in the Kentucky Classic at Lexington, Ky. Thursday night, Furman University will be on hand at the Charlotte Coliseum to provide the opposition for the Tar Heels. The Chapel Hillians return home for another TV skirmish on Saturday afternoon, this one with the South Carolina Gamecocks.

McGuire is expecting formidable opposition from this George Washington club, which the boys in the know label "vastly improved." Lot's of upsets have been provided by members of the Southern Conference teams despite its athletic de-emphasis program since the formation of the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Tar Heels are not taking this one lightly.

GW Smaller

The Colonials are a smaller club man for man than Clemson and McGuire is expected to go for agility rather than height when he *sends his starting five onto the floor. There are indications that sophomore guard Harvey Salz might get a starting nod along with either Lee Shaffer or Dick Kepley, the "other two" starters against Clemson. Forward Pete Brennan and guards Tommy Kearns and Bob Cunningham are sure starters.



There has been some speculation that McGuire will move Cunningham to forward and go with Salz and Kearns at the guard post.

Smaller Talent

But McGuire will think twice before he breaks up the brilliant guard duo which made a tremendous contribution to the fortunes of the great team of a year ago. And Kearns gave every indication that he'll do his part to make it even greater this season as he drove over and around the Clemson club to tally 32 points in the opener.

Otherwise, McGuire has a wealth of talent from which to draw for reserve or starting prowess. Roy Searcy, Gray Poole and Ray Stanley all saw a good bit of action against Clemson and there are still several smaller boys on the Tar Heel bench who have built a tremendous basketball prestige.

The Tar Heels will be without the services of veteran center-forward Danny Lotz who suffered a broken foot against Clemson Saturday.

Frosh Mermen Dunk SMA In Opener, 52-33

Carolina's freshman swimmers set two new pool records as they soundly stopped Staunton Military Academy, 52 to 33. The mermen won 7 of the 10 events.

Dodson And Bloom Star

Randy Dodson set a new pool record in the 100-yard butterfly with a new time of 1:01.6. Harry Bloom set the other Carolina record in the 150-Yard individual medly, covering the distance in 1:36.2 and breaking varsity swimmer Jeff Zwicker's old record.

Tar Baby Firsts

Other Carolina firsts were: Joe Kaulkurst, 50-yard freestyle; Vincent Simonton, 200-yard freestyle; Bob Hunter, 100-yard backstroke; Bloom in the 100-yard freestyle; and the Carolina freestyle relay team of Guerrant, Hunter, Langford, and Kalkurst, with a time of 1:43.1.

Davidson of SMA won the 100-yard breaststoke in a good time of 1:14, and the SMA team won the 200-yard medley relay.

The freshmen swim Clemson on Friday at Clemson and have their first home meet on December 17.

Varsity Swimmers Open Season With A 61-23 Victory Over ECC

By MAC MAHAFFY

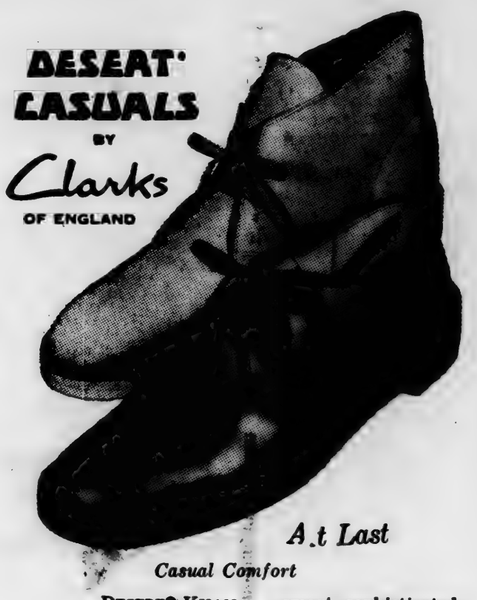
A ready Carolina Swim team opened its 1957 season yesterday, with a decisive win over East Carolina College, 61 to 23. The Tar Heels took 8 of 10 first places, and showed depth in all events.

Tony Schiffman was high scorer of the meet with firsts in two individual events, the 220 and 440-yard freestyles. Coach Pat Eary commented that his boys looked very good for this time of year, and was pleased with their progress. This was Coach Eary's first meet as the Carolina coach. He expressed plans of bringing the team along slowly, to its peak in March.

First places for the Carolina team included, Bill Roth, Paul Wachendorfer, Walter Rose, and Telfair Mahaffy. Carolina easily coped both relays.

Bob Sawyer and Bill Midyette turned in ECC's first places. Sawyer did a particularly fine job in the backstroke.

The swimmers move to Clemson on Friday and to South Carolina on Saturday. Next home meet is against Duke, December 17.



The Summary

400 Medley relay-(C), Nash, Mahaffy, Wachendorfer, Green; time 4:30. 220-yard freestyle-Schiffman (C), Conolly (EC), Carroll (EC); time 2:19.5. 50-yard freestyle-Roth (C), Maness (C), Tucker (EC); time 23.9. The only thing between the Tar Heels and the N.C.A.A. title was Kansas' seven-foot wonder, Wilt (The Stilt) Chamberlain! So Coach McGuire made his shortest man jump center with him!

Now, in this week's Saturday Evening Post, McGuire turns over his bag of tricks to show you how the Tar Heels not only won the title but swept through the '57 season undefeated!

You'll see why he says, "Basketball comes down to being a game of mistakes" . . . and how he ingeniously gears his team to avoid them! And you you'll learn from McGuire himself how he plans to keep the collegiate crown right on Chapel Hill!

In all: 8 articles, 4 stories, 2 serials, many cartoons.

CLASSES ON JANUARY 2 CALLED OFF IN SURPRISE MOVE BY CHANCELLOR

Dr. Hardre To Give Humanities Lecture

Professor Jacques Hardre will deliver the first quarterly Faculty Lecture in the Division of Humanities tonight in Carroll Hall at 8 p.m. on the subject of "Surrealism: The Twentieth Century Renaissance."

Dr. Hardre is a graduate of Guilford College and received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of North Carolina where he has been associated with the Department of Romance Languages since 1945.

He was born in Dijon, France and served in the French Army in 1939-40 and with the Free French Army from 1942-45. His formal education was received in schools both in the U.S. and on the Continent. Presently he is at work on a full-length biography of 'Cavalier de la Salle."

Surrealism is a literary and art movement influenced by Freudianism and dedicated to the expression of imagination, as revealed in dreams free of conscious control. It was founded in Paris in 1924 by Andre Breton, but its ancestry can be traced to Baudelaire and Rimbaud.

Many of its adherents were Dadists, a doctrine of utter formlessness. One school, including Salvador Dali and Yves Tanguy, used symbolic and dreamlike objects meticulously painted and arranged in a recognizable composition.

Others, such as Marc Chagall and Giorgio de Chirico, employed fantasy and free imagination in their art. Joan Miro and Marcel Du champ tried to utilize automatic or abstract form and composition to represent spontaneous thought. Max Ernst endeavored to combine many of the above theories.

Most of the literary productions have come from France, where Surrealism began to fluorish in the 1920's and 1930's. Jean Cocteau is representative of this school, devotees of "automatic writing."

The Humanities Division began these lectures in 1944, and they are presented quarterly by faculty members teaching arts and literature.

During tonight's lecture, Dr. Hardre plans to utilize a slide projector to present representative pictures of surrealistic art.

The lectures are held particularly for the undergraduates of the university, but they are also open to the public as well.

Action Will Cancel Exam Reading Day

Chancellor William B. Aycock in an unexpected move yesterday called off classes for January 2 and set the date for resumption of classes at 8 a.m. Friday, January 3.

The surprise decision came after a recommendation by the Calendar Committee of the University that students not be required to return to Chapel Hill on New Year's Day.

Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty, said yesterday the committee made its recommendation to the Chancellor primarily on the basis of the safety factor involved.

Dean Godfrey said the committee took into consideration the bill passed unanimously by Student Legislature last Thursday night. This bill stressed that classes be resumed on January 3 because New Years' is a dangerous holiday on the highways.

Chancellor Aycock also approved a second recommendation from the committe: that classes will be held Saturday, January 18, in lieu of reading day.

Student Body President Sonny Evans yesterday expressed his appreciation to Chancellor Aycock for postponing the beginning of classes until January 3.

"I feel that the decision was indeed wise and indicates the Chancellor's sincere concern for the safety and welfare of the students and faculty of the University," he said.

At the Chancellor's Cabinet meeting Monday morning, student leaders were told that deans of the University would meet shortly thereafter to act on the student proposal to abolish January 2 classes.

At the time of the Chancellor's Cabinet meeting, there was no indication as to whether students would be granted the extra day over the Christmas holidays.

At yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Calendar Committee, deans or other representatives of all the schools and colleges were present to discuss the class schedule change.

After the Chancellor approved the recommendations of the committee, the deans were notified of the changes and instructed to notify the faculty members under them.

Students From Lands Abroad Tell Of Christmas Elsewhere

By CAROLYN PEACOCK and
MARY MOORE MASON

If someone told you that Santa Claus arrived on Christmas Eve by water skiis you'd be a bit skeptical.

Strange as it may seem, though, this is just one of the customs that some of our world neighbors hold in regard to Christmas.

If you were to visit many different places during the Yule tide season, basic beliefs would be very similar to ours but there are many different ways in which the actual celebration is carried out.

"Hot weather accompanies Christmas in Nassau," explained Susie Donato, a resident of the famous island. All the children there believe that Santa Claus arrives on water skiis just as American children are positive about his eight reindeer.

Christmas in Nassau is a time of much merry-making and festivals. Presents are given on Christmas Day, but the day after known as "Boxing Day" is the highlight, and from 4 p. m. until 7 a. m. there is a period of wild celebration when the men run up and down the streets beating bongo drums and ringing cow bells.

They are dressed in very elaborate costumes with fancy headress such as miniature houses and ships. After this most of the people go on picnics.

Thousands of miles away, in Latvia, Santa doesn't come on skiis, but he does arrive on Christmas Eve and all gifts are opened then. "Decorations in the homes are similar to ours", said Zigrida Smith, who left Latvia when she was six years old, "but candles are used on the trees instead of lights."

Actually Latvian Christmas resembles ours, but more of the old tradition is preserved. Instead of many elaborate decoration there is a Christmas Market opens about a week before the big event. Candies, cookies, and other goodies are sold by the merchants in these markets.

Going south again Bill Russell explained that in Peru "religious scenes are more prevalent than Santa Claus or Carols." Bill, who lived in Lima, Peru, said "instead of ornaments and trees, each home has a manager scene. On Christmas Day itself everybody attends Mass and then there are many processions and parades to celebrate the event."

"Everything about a Spanish Christmas symbolizes togetherness," said Mary Morgan who lived there a year and was in Madrid during the holiday season last year. She told of the joyful festivities like parades, elaborate decorations, and Christmas dinners.

As in Latvia, all the tree are lighted by candles instead of lights which would be considered very strange. No one worries about the trees burning up as the candles are only lighted at certain times and guarded carefully by the children.

On Christmas day all the boys are given bullheads which they beat loudly as they run up and down the streets making noise. Presents are not given in Spain until January 6th, although the actual Yule-tide season begins when ours does. Naturally the whole season of Advent has a very religious significance to the Spanish people and everyone attends Mass as a family.

Nelson LaVergne of Puerto Rico said that although Puerto Rico does not have a pinata several countries of Spanish origin such as Mexico do have it.

The pinata is a Spanish festivity featuring a large and gayly decorated earthen container filled with fruit, candies, and small presents. This container is often painted with the face of the devil on it and hangs from the ceiling of the building where the Christmas is being held.

One of the quests at the party is blind-folded and given a large, heavy stick with which he is to hit and break the pinata. However, this is not as easy as it seems, for the jolly guests have already started moving the dangling pinata so that it is swaying wildly back and forth. Finally it is broken, and the eager guests scramble for the avalanche of goodies.

"French children don't hang up Christmas stocking; they shine their shoes and put them out in hopes that Father Christmas will think that they have been good and fill them up with presents," said Jean Pierce Boissavit, French student. They also put out carrots for the donkey which they believe Father Christmas rides.

Master Points To Be Awarded In Bridge Play

The special all-student bridge tournament to be held Thursday night at 7 o'clock in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2 has been sanctioned by the American Contract Bridge League in New York to give master points to winners, according to the GMAB Tournaments and Contests Committee late yesterday.

This means that students, in addition to receiving winning and booby prizes, will receive master points for first place North-South or East-West victories. Second, third and fourth place awards will be .50, .25 and .15 of a master point, respectively.

The committee has invited any undergraduate student to participate in this students-only bridge tournament. For those students unable to get the partner of their own choosing, last minute partnerships will be provided.

According to Betty Reece, chairman of the Tournaments and Contests committee, 19 couples had signed up for the tournament late Tuesday, however, she said that there would be room for any number of additional couples who wished to participate. She also stressed the fact that if students were not able to sign up in advance, they would be welcomed even at the last minute.

Bridge Club Grows Larger

Ten more students joined the Carolina Bridge Club Monday night. They were: Vassant Bhapkar, Gerry Boudreau, James R. Butler, Robert McDonald Gray, Richard Hicks, J. Gray McAllister, III, Robert F. Neal, Jim Vance, Gene Whitehead and Stephen Wolper.

The Carolina Bridge Club is attempting to push its membership to 50 in order to help the Bright Leaf Bridge League get enough members to allow the unit to sponsor a second sectional tournament in the Durham-Duke University-UNC area.

Memberships run until April, when 1958 membership fees are due. The fee is $1.00 per year.

Christmas Pageant Will Tell Of Festivities Around World

How do people around the world celebrate Christmas? Are there customs like ours, or are they completely different?

These are the questions that Graham Memorial Activities Board asked numerous foreign students. The answers were so interesting that GMAB decided to present a Christmas pageant about Christmas customs around the world.

The pageant, called "Christmas Around the World", will be presented this Sunday evening at 8:15 p.m. in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

The program of song, dance, instrumental music and pagentry will feature the Men's Glee Club and the participation of students from such countries as Puerto Rico, France, England, Sweden, Germany, Uraguay, and Greece.

Seasonal refreshments will be served after the festival which is co-sponsored by the Recreation and Reception committees of Graham Memorial.

Such customs are the Spanish pinata, Greek dances, the Swedish rice pudding feast, the English Boar's Head ceremony, and the French custom of puting out their shoes for Father Christmas to fill up will be dramatised or portrayed through song or dance.

GMAB also has planned an open house in the Rendezvous Room for Saturday night, Dec. 14. The Rendezvous will be garnished with Christmas decorations, the juke box will be fed, and there will be an open fire. Christmas refreshments will also be provided.

On that Monday evening, Dec. 16, the members of the executive board of GMAB and the Receptions and Recreation committees are giving a party for the children of the married students in Victory Village. The party will be in the Victory Village Day Care Center from 7 to 9 p. m.

Germ-Free Animal Study To Be Explained Today

A noted physiologist of the University of Notre Dame will explain what it means for an animal to live in a germ-free world today at the UNC School of Medicine.

Dr. H. A. Gordon, chief of the Section of Physiology and director of the Lobund Institute at Notre Dame, will speak at the Clinic Auditorium at 4 p.m. His subject will be "Germ-Free Life, Normal and Pathological Physiology."

The Lobund Institute is where germ-free animals are raised in a closed system without bacteria. This is the only such laboratory in the world and has been the subject of numerous articles in professional journals as well as popular publications. The physiological and biological aspects of animals raised under such conditions are studied at the Lobund Institute.

Card Winners Are Announced

In Monday night's 8-table Mitchell Duplicate Bridge Tournament at Graham Memorial, the following students were winners:

East-West: Joe Converse and Richard Hicks, first place; and Jim Vance and Gerry Boudreau tied with Bill Caison and Dana Dixon for second and third place.

In the North-South direction, Bill Uzzle and Dick Potthoff were the only students to place as winners. They won second place.

The tournament director, Dan Duke, announced that the monthly master point game would be held next Monday.

Sputnik III?

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10. (AP)—Rep. James T. Patterson (R-Conn) today quoted authoritative sources as saying the Russians are working on a new one-ton Sputnik capable of jamming all U. S. TV and radio communications.

Other Soviet satellites, Patterson stated, are being designed to carry bombs.

This information, which Patterson said was being revealed for the first time, was contained in a speech prepared for delivery tonight before the American Legion post in Middletown, Conn.

Deans Should Closely Air Plan For Holiday Extension

(The following editorial was written before a decision by the Calendar Committee to resume classes January 3 instead of January 2. We feel it points out the very factors on which the committee made its decision Tuesday afternoon.—Ed.)

We hope that Deans of the University will approach open-mindedly a proposal by the student legislature that classes be called off January 2.

It is, indeed, a serious plan by student leaders to escape the threat of dangerous highway driving and complications of return travel to UNC on a day long marked by numerous highway tragedies.

And it would be a step forward for student government at UNC if Deans of the University would compromise with the student body in this effort to eliminate the necessity of travel on New Year's Day.

The proposal now rests in the hands of a committee of University Deans. Its future—either passage or rejection—depends on the case which student leaders can make for the proposal. We believe such a case can be made.

First, such a situation as now exists at UNC seldom occurs at the University. Our Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday class periods have been slashed from the normal 45 per semester to 43, due to the Chancellor's Installation and Caravan cuts which both occurred on Saturday.

Thus, we see that at least one of the two excused abolitions of Saturday classes was prompted by a condition that is infrequent at the University—the installation of a new Chancellor. It is a ceremony which, we hope, will not occur again here in many years to come.

Secondly, reading day this year will fall on Saturday if the present schedule is continued—another unusual occurrence at UNC. By virtue of its being followed by Sunday, we will, in effect, have a natural reading day anyway.

And another factor to consider about the proposed reading day as now scheduled is that, by virtue of its falling on Saturday, we would have half a reading day anyway, since classes end at 1 p.m.

Thus, students actually will have an unusual day and a half for preparation for final exams even if the current schedule is effected. If the the schedule is changed to allow reading day on Friday, January 17, we still will have more time for reading than is the case under normal circumstances.

If student leaders are sincere in their abolition proposal, and we believe thy are, then perhaps arrangements still could be made for an extension of the holidays to January 3 even if reading day cannot be held Friday, January 17.

For if an extension by one day of the vacation period could conceivably save students from the dangers of holiday travel, it would be a noble act to give up the first half of Saturday, January 18, as a time for reading and devote it to class periods for Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday classes.

We believe that students who really want to prepare for their first exams will find time to do so, under the above proposal, during the afternoon and night of Saturday, January 18, and throughout the following day, Sunday.

In fact, due to the calendar arrangement this year, students would have even more time for study under that proposal than to observe reading day in another year, which normally would come sometime during the week without the benefit of a free day Sunday.

These, then, are the basic arguments on which students can rest their case for extension of the holiday period. We hope that the Deans will examine our case closely.

HENDERSON & BETTS

Praise Deserving For N.C. Authors

We would like to extend our congratulations to two of Chapel Hill's distinguished citizens who were honored during North Carolina's "Culture Week:" Dr. Archibald Henderson and Doris Betts.

For Dr. Henderson, it was the third time that he has received the Mayflower Cup from the North Carolina Literary and Historical Society since 1911. In that year (when the award was known as the Patterson Cup) he won the prize for his work, "George Bernard Shaw: His Life and Works." Again, in 1932, he was presented the cup for "Bernard Shaw: Playboy and Prophet." This latest presentation was made at the society's 57th meeting in Raleigh last Friday for his nationally acclaimed book "George Bernard Shaw: Man of the Century." Historian, biographer, critic and scientist, Dr. Henderson has again been honored, as, in Albert Einstein's words, "an extraordinary combination of artist and scientist."

Mrs. Doris Betts received the fifth annual Sir Walter Raleigh award for the best work of fiction from North Carolina during 1956. The award came in recognition of her book, "Tall Houses in Winter." Although she now resides in Sanford, Mrs. Betts resided in Chapel Hill while her husband was attending the UNC Law School and wrote most of the novel at that time. Besides being one of our most talented creative writers, Mrs. Betts has also found time to be a housewife, a newspaper reporter and a mother.

The Daily Tar Heel takes great pleasure in extending its good wishes and felicitations to Dr. Henderson and Mrs. Betts, celebrated citizens of the highest personal endeavor and achievement.

Brussels, Money

Russia is spending $60 million on their pavilion at the Brussels World's Fair. The U. S. Congress has shaved our appropriations to $12,345,000.

We imagine that, after the fair, congress will create an investigating committee to find out why we made a poor showing at Brussels, and the incurred investigating expenses will probably be in the millions.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

No Children, No Christmas For The World

GAIL GODWIN

Some one remarked to me the other day that if there were no children, Christmas would lose most of its meaning.

I think that is about the size of it.

When one thinks of the Christmas season, such things run through his mind as Dicken's "Christmas Carol", Santa Claus, gifts, stockings, chimneys, and snow.

These are the very things that delight a child most. What child has not brightened a household with his exhuberant, "Tiny Tim" radiance as he proclaims in his cherubic voice, "God bless us all, every one," or something having the same effect?

What youngster does not start carefully penning "letters to Santa" in November—or sometimes in July? And could we count the endless questions about the whys and where-abouts of this wonderful, generous, fat man in red?

What young face does not burst into ecstasy as the rattle of tissue paper and the breaking of ribbons gets into full swing? As the contents of the extra-long stocking (that would not even fit father nowadays) reveal themselves to wide eyes? As the Yule log sends warm, crackly flames up the chimney which will deposit Santa in the living room a few hours later?

What boy or girl does not wistfully for the sight of that cold white blanket as the curtain is cautiously pulled back on Christmas morning?

Perhaps if more of us were children at times, Christmas and a lot of other things about life would be more wonderful. There are too many Scrooges and not enough Tiny Tims. There are too many cynics and not enough appreciators.

Perhaps if we remembered that the reason Christmas ever got started in the first place was because a little boy made his bright-eyed entrance in the world, we might recapture that zest and zeal we had as children.

There were three men who were quite brilliant and scholarly and wise who made their entrance on the strategic scene of the first Christmas those many years ago.

But they forget their formulas and theories and calculations as they started in childlike awe at the Christmas gift which had just been presented to them and to humanity.

Education 11: Question Of Control; The Answer: Socialized Education

By CURTIS GANS

Last week the U. S. tried and failed to put a satellite in orbit. The failure was almost total.

The Russian delegation to the U. N. the next day offered the U. S. aid under its program of technical assistance to backward nations.

This is diplomacy with tongue in cheek, but it points up a great need in the U. S.—the need for more funds to educate Americans so that they will not be behind any other.

Much has been written in the past weeks about the need for improvement in the field of education. The need is in terms of an upgrading of standards, encouragement of individual initiative ,and money to encourage both teachers and pupils in the form of salaries and facilities.

In a democracy, there is a responsibility on the government's shoulders to provide for equal educational facilities for all children regardless of location on the map. This need is not being met.

There is also a responsibility for the government to provide for equally qualified teachers so that students can get equal educational opportunities. This need is also not being met.

It is not being met because the wealth of each of the states in the United States is unequal. Hence, a teacher in North Carolina may start a salary of $2,000, while a teacher in California may start with a salary of $5,000. The student coming from North Carolina schools, because he gets a somewhat inferior brand of education, may not do as well as the student from California, and consequently some of the brain power of the U. S. goes down the drain.

Secondly, if the central government gives aid to the state that is financially behind, the government is being unfair to the taxpayer from California, who deserves equal aid renumeration for his investment. Hence, as long as the school systems are under state control, there will continue to exist an inequality in the taxation by states, in the payment of teachers, in the educational facilitites, and in the value of aid received from tax expenditure.

The solution is to put the entire school system of the U. S. under the control of the central government. The tax money used for states schools should be incorporated into the U. S. tax structure, and in order that schools may be improved over their present level without sacrificing the gains that some states have achieved, there should be increased taxation. For it must be noted, that to have the superiority that America wants, Americans must pay for it, and not sit behind their television sets and peacefully contemplate a tax reduction.

To this comes the cry: THAT'S SOCIALISM! So, it is, but it is perhaps the only way that students in all parts of the nation can receive equal educational opportunity .It is perhaps the only way to realize uniform standards of achievement. It is perhaps the only sure way of seeing that enough money is going to all the schools in the U. S.

There is a danger inherent in this. The danger is that the party in power may dictate what is to be taught, in order to insure its being kept in power.

There is a way to over come this. This is to put the central control of education in the hands of a bi-partisan or non-partisan group of educators. The group should not be chosen politically, but should be chosen from the group of educators themselves. There should not be more representatives from any one party than there is of another party .They would be responsible for allotment of funds, recommendations for taxation, setting up of standards, and the insuring of equal facilities and equal quality of teaching for all.

What is proposed is constitutional revision, to take the central control of schools out of the hands of the states and put it in the hands of the central government. To make American democracy a true, efficient democracy, this is necessary.

Evan's Text

(Below is the second and final of a two-part series on the text of Student Body President Sonny Evans' 'State of the Campus' address to the legislature last week. It begins with a discussion on Graham Memorial, the student union.)

(2) Howard Henry, of the University of Wisconsin, is the top available man in the country whom we have sought for the past three years and consider to be eminently qualified. Thanks to Chancellor Aycock's understanding of the status question, which was the big stumbling block removed this summer, Mr. Henry has been hired and will arrive on the campus on July 1, 1958. Unlike many campuses, where Student Government and the Student Union compete against each other, we have the potentiality and the background for the outstanding organizational setup in the country since the Union has always been the programming arm of Student Government and since the two at this campus have grown up together. The Building Committee of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors, headed by Joel Fleishman, stands ready to move ahead with the preliminary planning for the new building.

(1) Regardless of all that has been said over the past few weeks and last year, Jim Tatum is a dedicated man, who loves this University more than anyone imagines. If there is any decay or preferential treatment of athletes academically, and I don't believe there is, the fault lies with the administration who sanctions it rather than with the football coach who might desire it. However, if you believe that a student is a student first and whatever else he is second, then the segregation of football players is wrong. It violates the principles of student freedom of choice which almost every other student on this campus enjoys. Football players must be integrated into the university community, and they cannot be as long as they live together and eat together not by conscious choice but by requirement.

(2) When I mentioned that "almost all" students enjoyed freedom of choice, I was making reference to the problem of "segregated integration" which takes place in Steele Dormitory with the Negro students. To those of you who don't have the background, these students now room in Steele. These students are here because of court order, and Student Government by its silence sanctions this principle of a second class student citizenry. What will happen if a Negro football player is ever accepted at this university? Which segregation will take precedence? Will he go to Cobb or to Steele? I think you can see the ridiculous situation in which we find ourselves.

IV. THE HONOR SYSTEM:

(1) On Friday, we go before the Faculty Council to present a proposal for placing the granting of excuses for illnesses as a matter of honor between the instructor and the student as was done during the fall trials. It seems a paradox to trust a student in only a portion of his campus life, and we are hopeful for success. This of course would mean that only students who were truly sick would go to the Infirmary for treatment, and that the burden of granting excuses would be removed from the present areas except in cases of an individual professor requiring it.

(2) The Attorney General's staff has labored long and hard as has the Honor System Commission to draw up for the Legislature's approval a far-reaching and all-encompassing plan for the improvement of the structure of the Councils in an effort to bring these Councils closer to the students. The Judiciary must fashion itself to meet the rising student population, and all students must be guaranteed the rights which will be assured in this plan. It will be presented to you in the coming weeks.

V. SELECTION OF EDITOR OF DAILY TAR HEEL:

The committee set up by the Legislature weeks before the recall election is hard at work to fashion a full report for this body in February. It is my hope that some sort of change be made to forever insure to the student body competent and responsible editorship of our oustanding daily newspaper.

VI. FRATERNITY-SORORITY SYSTEM:

The IFC under the leadership of Bill Redding is leading an active year and should be congratulated. However, problems such as the drinking rule which undermines the entire Honor System and everything for which it stands, the discriminatory clause which is a great issue in colleges today but has not even been considered on this campus, the presence of book reports and themes as opposed to quizzes in fraternity files (the sororities burned theirs years ago), have gone unnoticed by responsible students for too long a time.

VII. THE TRAFFIC PROBLEM:

My thanks go out to Ralph Cummings and the Traffic Advisory Commission who have drawn up a full report to be presented to this body very soon for the administration of the new Bell Tower Parking Lot. Chancellor Aycock has stated that the providing of spaces for student cars is not a problem which should be solved by the use of student money and has made it possible to reduce the fee on student cars. The decision on what to do with the current accumulated $8,000 (eight thousand dollars) is under consideration now and will come before the Legislature very soon.

There is so much to do and so little time to do it in every area that we can mention. The only way that anything can be accomplished is by close cooperation among all of us in achieving the goals that we set for ourselves. The Administration is watching closely to determine whether or not all that has been said about the greatness of the Carolina Student Government is true.

It is with great courage of conviction that I have spoken to you tonight on the way—the only way—in which I think we can justify our existence. Student Government is more than a training ground for future life when it seeks to instill in its citizenry a social conscience and truly contribute to the University community.

Writer Reviews Giradoux's 'Judith'

By FRANK CROWTHER

The season's first "Petite Dramatique" was presented Sunday and Monday nights in the main lounge of Graham Memorial. The play was Jean Giradoux's JUDITH in translation by John K. Savacool and directed by Nancy Green, graduate student in English.

Giradoux used as a basis for his plot the story from the Book of Judith in the Apocrypha of how a young girl, "the fairest of the fair and the purest of the pure," sacrificed herself to the barbarian king, Holofernes, in order to save Israel and, in so doing, fulfill a prophecy.

The theme has been used before in several operas—during the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries—but never before has it been given the treatment rendered by Giradoux, who annealed so much of his Galic wit with the tragic overtones of the legend.

A great deal of this wit, however, was lost in last weekend's presentation.

Frank Clymer, as Judith's uncle, Joseph, used a near classic delivery with a motivated spontaneity to present his role in a nicely effective style. He understood his part while many of the other participants did not.

John, played by Anthony Wolff, seemed to be an over-serious suitor, being too cooly indealistic and lacking some of the necessary individuality. Rather than emphasizing solely the tragic, we felt that he should have been more conscious of the sarcastic tragedy which Giradoux wrote into the part.

Much of the religious overtone of the play should have been contributed by Joachim, the Grand Rabbi, played by Leon Rooke. Though he inserted enthusiasm into his part, Rooke completely missed the authority.

As the Grand Rabbi, Joachim was the religious king of the Jews and should have automatically demonstrated the command and prestige for which he semed continually fighting. His cavernous accent also sounded extraneous.

Ann Bachman, playing Susanna, was somewhat stiff in her role, but she was at a considerable disadvantage in having to represent a mirrored—though soiled—version of Judith. The proportional differences were too great for what should have been an almost emulous part.

Egon and Sarah, played by James Tyndall and Betty Rhodes, apparently pleased much of the audience, but not this reviewer. In reading the play, we thought that there was subtleness and even light humor called for by the playwrite in these parts. Egon was obviously an effeminate man, but he was not void of a sharp wit, which should have been fawning instead of overbearing.

Sarah looked very much her role, but she was very broad and at times out of the humor's line. They were both well suited for their assigned parts, but let their eagerness and enthusiasm go slightly beyond what was prescribed.

Harold Williamson as the Guard was hampered by his youth and lack of stature which was undoubtedly necessitated in the denoument of the play.

He showed a great deal of sincerity and we must grant that his shortcomings lay not in any personal mistakes but in an incompleteness. This definitely should have been another role which sustained irrefutable authority.

Lawrence Anderson, as the Cantor, caught the primitive emotionalism of the religion and comforted himself quite nicely in a very important though minor part.

Dave Small, who replaced Harry Moore as Holofernes just 48 hours before its opening, was the cynosure of all present when he appeared. Many of us took a deep breath and held it. With only two days preparation, Small not only met the Sisyphean task but gave one of his best performances on this campus to date.

The role called for a barbarian who was masculine, virile and regnant, and we felt that he was sufficiently all of these. A fine job under considerable pressure.

Judith, played by Carolyn Marsh, was the exceptional performance of the play, and compensated for many of the other inequities. She looked the part and maintained her balance—as well as that of the play's—throughout with a spiritual, intellectual and sensual radiation of command.

The play was hers from the moment she appeared and, aside from a few momentary stumblings, we think that Giradoux, critical man though he was, would have approved of her performance.

Much of Miss Marsh's credit should also go to the director. Miss Green, for the director's control and guidance was self-evident. The blocking was highly competent as was her choice of a minimum of props for the theater-in-the-round style of presentation.

This play could very well have been overly sensuous and physical, but Miss Green was admirably tasteful in her interpretation. Although some of the actors at times lost their personal control, the director was that her general interpretation had its shortcomings by being too heavy and emphatically tragic. We believe that Giradoux was fence walking in the tragic-comic sense and much of his Gallic wit was lost by the over-weight of presentation.

In reviewing this play, we have focused our attention for the most part on the actual performances of the main characters and the director's interpretation. This certainly does not minimize the lengthy efforts of all concerned—minor actors and actresses, Gottleib's tireless enthusiasm as producer, and all the other assistants who had spent many weeks in preparation for those two nights. We thoroughly enjoyed the play and hope that our words of criticism will be constructive rather than destructive.

Presss Club Hears William C. Snider Speak On Tar Heel Newspapers

By ANN FRYE

Stuffy Victorian conformity on editorial pages of American newspapers may be ending, William C. Snider, associate editor of the Greensboro Daily News, told members of the UNC Press Club Monday night.

Mentioning three hopeful signs that conformity is ending in at least some areas, Snider discussed one particular Tar Heel publication, a New York newspaper and the North Carolina press in general.

Snider said the editorial page is not doomed when a non-conformist, Harry Golden, makes a "spectacular success" with his North Carolina Israelite.

"Goden is the Addison of our age' with a sense of humor and sense of self-expression, Snider commented.

The Greensboro newspaperman praised what he called a revitalized New York Herald-Tribune. He said the editorial page had been drained of former drab intellectual expression.

"Editorially speaking, the North Carolina press is sometimes virgorous, but not always," Snider said. "There are more good small and medium-sized papers than any other state.'

Snider praised vitality in Raleigh News and Observer editorials, but criticized the ideological party-line nature of the newspaper.

"The Charlotte Observer reflects the influence of the larger newspaper chain (Knight Publications)," he said, "and the editorials don't indentify themselves with any region."

Snider said it was frustrating when the Observer had to keep in mind North and South Carolina regions in the editorial column.

"The Charlotte News retains its link with the old and excelled tradition of the paper," he remarked, "and the two editors of the Charlotte News are among the best in the state."

Both Winston-Salem papers have the inpersonal, faceless style of the day, he said.

In speaking of the newspaper he's associated with, Snider said the mission of the Grensboro Daily News is "trying to write to North Carolina—the educated leadership and the rank and file."

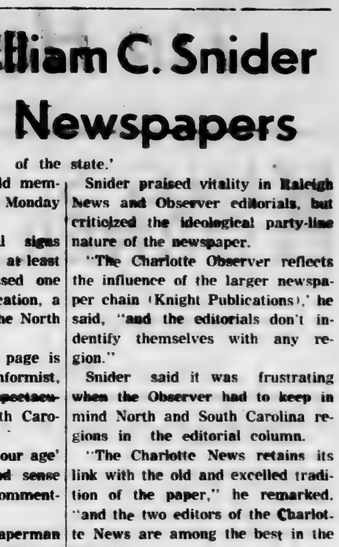
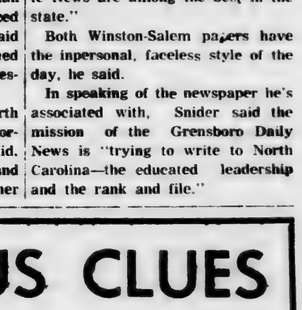
CAMPUS CLUES



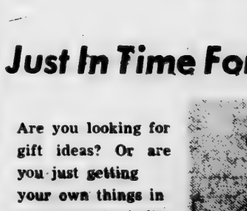
By Carolyn

Just In Time For Christmas . . .



Are you looking for gift ideas? Or are you just getting your own things in shape for the holidays?

Which ever predicament you're in, JULIAN'S COLLEGE SHOP has the answer.



The town's swankiest Carolina jacket in heavy blue or white water repellent cotton with knitted cuffs and collar is only $7.95.

A favorite both on and off campus (with proud fathers and kid brothers) is a set of Old Well cuff links and tie bar. Comes in less expensive machine made sets or in hand-wrought sterling silver.

Part Of Christmas Is Candy . . .

And everyone knows from experience that Whitman's candy is hard to beat. Here's a gift that will make a hit with family or friends.

SUTTON'S DRUG STORE has a big selection of this famous candy. Pick one big box for the family or choose an individual box for each one on your gift list. It will be inexpensive, but very much appreciated.

Don't Miss A Good Deal . . .

Here you'll find beautiful and useful gifts for everyone in your family. There's a whole counter full of unusual $1 gifts that will help keep your Christmas spending under control.

Andrews-Henninger

For larger gifts, too, you can't beat ANDREWS-HENNINGER. There are linens, slips, sweaters for mothers and sisters, and sweaters, socks, ties for fathers and brothers.

You can find helpful advice from their staff—and gifts will be attractively wrapped for you ready to give.

Tar Heels Rout GW 86-59 For 34th Straight Victory

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Maryland Gives Indication Of Things To Come

Maryland has recently offered new food for thought to Atlantic Coast Conference fans who feel that Carolina will breeze through to the Regionals with little trouble. Example, a 71-62 come from behind victory over highly regarded Kentucky Monday night.

The Terps have definitely labeled themselves a club to be reckoned with, having gained three straight victories already this season.

It has been said from the outset of the current season that Carolina would face its toughest oppposition right in its own circuit and from the way things are shaping up, this conjecture could easily come to pass.

Wolfpack Still Building; Duke Has Experience

Over at N. C. State, for example, Everette Case the master recruiter has shrugged off the stigma of a four-year probation which has three years to run, and is gathering basketball talent as big and as good as ever. The Wolfpack has whipped through three opponents already and has gained a niche in the early season basketball polls.

The top seven men of a year ago make Duke a vaunted club this season and the Blue Devils could give anybody around a real tough match. The Blue Devils have the most experienced club in the conference and in these crucial moments which are inevitable in basketball, experience is the most valuable asset a team can have.

From down Columbia way comes word that the South Carolina Gamecocks are ready to challenge any opposition despite a roster which shows only four lettermen. The Gamecocks got to the ACC finals against Carolina last year and they like the feeling.

Clemson Tough; Deacs, Virginia Weakened

Virginia won six and lost 19 last season and there is great room for improvement for Coach Bill McCann's club. The Cavaliers are not considered anything to write home about but a boy like Herb Busch, their 6'7" 250 center could make it rough for anybody.

Clemson is another club which many believe will be right in the thick of the battle by the time tournament time rolls around. The Tigers can be tough as demonstrated in their last half against Carolina here last Saturday.

Wake Forest is a couple of years off it seems right now. The Deacs lost everything last season, but Bones McKinney, like Hotspur "fiery but valiant" won't sit around and watch his club mutilated. The Deacs could still make decent showing by March.

Yes, things could be pretty hot around the ACC this winter. It would probably be best if we quit worrying about breaking any all time winning records and concentrated on the matter at hand—beating our country cousins right here in the conference. An undefeated record means nothing when the ACC tourney is played to decide who will advance to post season activities.

Now Swimming Coach Is Producer Of Winners

There's new coach on the Carolina campus who hasn't had much to say (except on the PA at football games) since his arrival here in September. He's one of those people who let his action speak for him and you can bet your sweet life you'll be hearing from him in the near future. The fellow's name is Pat Earey and he's the new swimming coach.

Pat came from Senior High in Greensboro where he had a fabulous coaching record. And before he went to Greensboro he had never coached swimming. That's a large tribute to any man. Pat has the nucleus of a fine club here and he's been working hard since his matriculation at UNC in order to build this squad into a power.

Earey is a conscientious worker who'll give his all to put his club on the top. We wish him all the success in the world and extend to him a belated welcome to Carolina.

Kearns Hits 22 To Lead Tar Heels

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carolina Tar Heels rated as the nation's best, won their 34th straight contest and second for the season when they completely romped over hapless George Washington to the tune of 86-69 here last night.

Sophomores Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley collaborated with senior Tommy Kearns in a second half scoring binge that left the outclassed Colonials gasping.

Pete Brennan dunked a goal after 45 seconds of the opening period to put the Tar Heels ahead and when Bill Telasky's set shot tied it at 2-all, GW was asclose as it was ever to get against the nation's No. 1 rated team.

Another set by Telasky whittled North Carolina's early edge to 6-5, but from then on the Tar Heels were supreme.

Kearns was high man for the night with 22 points, while Brennan and Shaffer each basketed 20. Gene Guarilia, GW's big man at 6-foot-6, led the losers with 18.

For Kearns, the display of marksmanship was a repeat from last Saturday when the 1956-57 national champions opened their campaign with a 79-55 triumph over Clemson.

George Washington, losing its third in a row, was behind 40-28 at halftime and with 5½ minutes remaining was in a 75-46 hole. At that point Tar Heel Coach Frank McGuire cleared his bench to give all 10 of his traveling squad a chance.

Shaffer, an 18-year-old Pittsburgh ballhawk who made the first team when Joe Quigg broke a leg in preseason practice, embellished his shooting record with a greedy backboard performance that saw him monopolize the ball under both backboards.

GW had its scoring opportunities against North Carolina's zone defense, especially in the first half, but couldn't find the basket. Kearns, clicking on fast breaks, and Brennan, Shaffer and Kepley hitting from outside and on drives, shredded GW's zone.

State Upset By Clemson, 63-59

CLEMSON, S. C.—(AP)—Clemson hung the first defeat of the season on North Carolina State 63-59 tonight in a rough Atlantic Coast Conference game. State ranked 12th nationally, came into the game with a 3-0 record and the Tigers were just the opposite.

The victory was a repeat performance of last year's first meeting between the two teams when Clemson claimed its first victory over State in 15 years in an overtime.

State got off to an early lead and remained ahead by three to six points until Vince Yockel's jump shot tied it 24-24 with 4:05 left in the first half. Buckets by John Richter, Whitey Bell and George Stepanovich gave State a 34-30 halftime margin.

Clemson caught up after four minutes in the second half and the lead see-sawed. Walter Gibbons hit a free throw about midway through the period and Clemwent ahead for keeps. The Tigers held a nine point margin, 58-49, with 1:17 remaining.

Clemson hit on 22 of 67 shots from the floor for a 32.6 percentage of accuracy and State hit 23 of 74 for 31.1 per cent.

Frosh Cagers At Wilmington Tonight

By DAVE WIRLE

Carolina's freshman basketball team will travel down to Wilmington tonight in an attempt to bounce back into the win column by downing the Wilmington Junior College cagers.

The Tar Babies suffered a 71-68 loss to the Duke freshmen in their last outing Saturday. In their opener, the Carolina yearlings defeated the High Point College Jayvees 84-75.

Tar Babies Strong

The Duke contest gave freshman coach Ken Rosemond an indication of how strong his squad will be this year, and he is pleased with the result. Surmising, the former Tar Heel cager said, "I think that the boys looked real good until the final minutes when Duke started pressing. They worked the ball well, especially in the first half, but lost their poise in the last five minutes.'

Starting against Wilmington tonight will be Doug Moe and Pete Longenecker at forwards, Hugh Donohue at center and Tam Shuford and Bill Hart at Guards.

Moe Stands Out

Moe has been the freshman version of Tommy Kearns so far this season, taking top scoring honors in both games. A consistent scorer around the foul line, Moe has been the center of the Tar Baby offense. Rosemond complimented Longenecker for his hustle against Duke and his general wide awake ball playing.

Also high on the list is center Hugh Donohue who has done a tremendous job for the Tar Babies under the backboards. Donohue looked very good in the second half against Duke when he grabbed most of the rebounds and scored 13 points.

The Tar Babies next game will be here Saturday afternoon when they meet Phieffer Junior College after the varsity contest between Carolina and South Carolina.

Federal Aid

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10. (AP)—A federal aid to education plan designed "to help meet the challenge of Soviet scientific advances" was reported today to be in preparation for President Eisenhower's next budget message.

The plan, estimated to cost 287 million dollars a year, would run four or five years.

Under it, the federal government would help finance pay raises for science and mathematics teachers, assist in financing additional technical equipment and set up 20,000 scholarships a year for gifted students.

Wrestlers In Third Outing At Davidson

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The varsity wrestling team, back from a strenous week-end with two meets on successive nights, springs back into action tonight against the Davidson Wildcats at Davidson.

The matmen split their two week-end mets, losing to Virginia Friday night and coming back to whip Washington and Lee Saturday night. A victory over Davidson tonight would put the grapplers on the winning side of the tracks at 2-1, and give them a good send-off into the rest of the season.

Coach Has Problem

One problem facing Coach Sam Barnes tonight will be a lack of "heavy" heavyweights. He has yet to come up with a really big man in the heavyweight department to face the stiff competition offered by opposition weighing well over 200 pounds.

Much Improved

Coach Barnes said that "the boys were much improved against Washington and Lee. They lost the opening night jitters they encountered at Virginia. Virginia was a good team though, and you can't take anything away from them."

The starters in addition to the heavyweights are: Curt Champlin-123, Henry Ryan-130, Perin Henderson-137, Gary Cooper-147, J. W. Welborn-157, and Ken Hoke-167.

Carolina Quarterly Problem— Inertia And Lack Of Interest

By EDITH MacKINNON

The Carolina Quarterly has a problem.

In the opinion of its editor, Christian Lefebure, the Quarterly is caught in the middle of feelings of inertia and lack of interest from both the undergraduate and graduate population on campus.

The inertia was the topic of Lefebure's editorial in this fall's edition of the Quarterly. The cover of the edition is reproduced above. The cover design is after a 15th century manuscript illumination.

It is a representation of Melancholia, one of the four humors believed in the Middle Ages to determine a person's health and temperament.

Lefebure wrote, "Anyone who was disillusioned, gloomy, pensive or lethargic was said to be affected with Melancholia. Although this quaint medical theory died with the Middle Agees, the disease itself is still much with us.

"It is the malady that a large of the world has fallen victim to during the 1950's. We have become complacement and too content with ourselves."

Apparently, the UNC campus is hanging on to this Middle Ages sickness in the form of a general apathy toward its student publication, the Quarterly, reported its editor in an interview this week.

The attitude of the students has been expressed by the editor. In his opinion, the graduate students feel the Quarterly is "just another college publication." For the undergraduate, the publication is "too highbrow."

Yet the purpose of the Quarterly, as described in the UNC Record, is to provide "a literary outlet for young writers at the University." The magazine is an independent student publication.

The Quarterly appears three times a year and features fiction, poetry and articles by young writers both in and out of the University.

Lefebure has said that the Quarterly faces criticism from those who say that it does not contain enough student writing. Yet last year's editions contained work about half of which was written by sutdents.

By placing student writing in the same magazine with well-established writers, the Quarterly staff hopes to raise the inflence of these student-written works.

Lefebure said that many people do not realize that the Quarterly is distributed over much of the U. S. and in many foreign countries. Some of its 1000 copies are sent to Italy, Poland, Australia, and this year, even to Moscow.

The problem of student work versus outside work seems to move in a vicious circle, according to Lebebure's comments. Students complain about the lack of student material in the Quarterly. Yet very few student-written articles or poems are submitted to the Quarterly for review.

"The students seem to be reluctant to hand in any of their own work," Lefebure said. All material submitted is reviewed carefully by the respective boards of the Quarterly staff.

"If they have good material, it will be definitely condsidered. And if it is published, it will be well worth it," the editor feels.

Approximately 25 students are now working with the Qnarterly. The staff is open to all, and anyone interested may se the editor for placement.

For a publication which is devoted to serving as an outlet for student literary efforts, apathy is out of place.

How long will this Middle Ages Melancholia hover over the campus?

First TV Civil War Serial

"The Gray Ghost," first Civil War serial to reach television, is based in part on a book published by The University of North Carolina Press—"Ranger Mosby," by Virgil Carrington Jones. Jones is historical advisor for the 39-week serial to be seen this winter on 115 CBS local television stations all over the county.

In "Ranger Mosby," he chronicled the life and legend of the Confederate Partisan Leader John Singleton Mosby. Mosby's success as a raider was such that he became known as "The Gray Ghost" and the part of Virginia in which he operated principally became known as "Mosby's Confederacy."

"Ranger Mosby" was published by The University Press in 1944 and is now in its fifth printing. It has been extensively reviewed and highly praised. The New York Herald Tribune noted that it "reads like a Dumas romance;" Time magazine called it "brick, readable;" The Cleveland Plain Dealer commented that it was "more exciting than fiction;" Fulton Oursler praised it "as American as store cheese or bowie knives."

On January 11 The University of North Carolina Press will publish "The Governor and the Rebel," by Wilcomb E. Washburn. This is, according to Samuel Eliot Morison, "a thoroughly documented but fascinating history of Bacon's Rebellion, which will upset the notions current about that affair for the last two centuries."

Washburn is a Fellow in the Institute of Early American History and Culture at Williamsburg. In writing this definitive study of the first rebellion in the English colonies in the New World, led in 1676 by the younger Nathaniel Bacon against Sir William Berkeley, the colonial Governor of Virginia, the author reviewed all hitherto known English and American sources.

He also discovered in England and used for the first time the voluminous papers of Henry Coventry, Principal Secretary of State in charge of the colonies from 1674 to 1680.

The whole last chapter of "A Treasury of the World's Great Diaries," edited by Philip Dunaway and Evans and published by Doubleday, is devoted to the Aug. 6, 1945 entry from "Hiroshima Diary', by Dr. Michihiko Hachiya.

"Here are," the editors write, "the words of a man who had just felt the blast that shook the world," "Hiroshima Diary" was translated from the Japanese and edited by Dr. Warner Wells.

On Nov. 9 Virginians honored at Jamestown the memory of their first known European settlers. The story of these settlers, eight Spanish Jesuit missionaries who landed near Jamestown in 1570, is told in "The Spanish Jesuit Mission in Virginia," written by Clifford M. Lewis, S. J. and Albert J. Loomie, S.J. and published by The University of North Carolina Press.

Meet Ray Jefferies: Possessor Of Double Title— He's Both Mr. Friendly & Mr. Information Center

By MARY MOORE MASON

How could anybody come to Carolina for even one year and not meet Ray Jefferies, assistant dean of student affairs? There is not a group on campus with which Ray is not in some way familiar.

You see him in Y Court carrying on a friendly coversation with a group of students about a current election or their plans for Germans, you see him in South Building talking earnestly with fellow administrators, you see him meeting with student leaders in the afternoon and in the stage line at a dance that night, and of course he is inevitably seen as the Captain of the Dispersion of Activities at any panty raid.

'TROUBLE SHOOTER'

I met Ray for the first time last year at a coed open house. He must have talked to me about ten seconds in the middle of a crowd, but the next time he saw me on campus he greeted me by name and asked me about a course that I was taking.

This is what Ray is known and loved for: a deep interest in the student body as a whole and in the individuals that compose it. When asked what his specific job is he smiled and said, "I'm the detail man or what some might call the 'trouble shooter'."

With that he handed me a list of his duties and I found that he works with some nine major categories.

Before you even came to school, Ray probably knew something about you through his work with the Orientation Committe which comes under his Student Government category. He also assists student leaders and checks the eligibility of students who run for office.

WORK PHASES

When you got to UNC if you lived in either a men's dormitory or were in a fraternity, you worked directly or indirectly with Ray. The 24 men's dorm advisors work closely under Ray who also works with the IDC, the dorm presidents and the supervisor of dorm managers.

It is again Ray who works with IFC in planning their rush week and Greek Week programs, with the individual fraternity officers on problems of scholarship, and with the fraternity field secretaries on their visits to the campus.

While I sat in Ray's office I saw three more phases of his work in action. As he talked to me he directed several self-help students who were in the office compiling the campus mail which they were going to deliver. Once we changed the subject as he listened to a gripe I had about the restricted parking zones and student car registration which he is also in charge of.

MANY VISITS

During the hour that I was in his office a student with a scholastic problem, a member of the Symposium Committee, a football player, a member of Women's Honor Council, and a graduate student all came in either to just say hello or to get some advise for their problems.

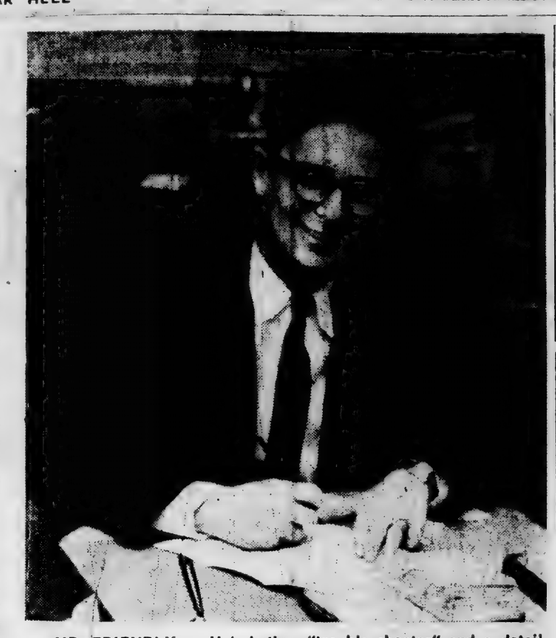
When a dance is given, Ray has worked closely with the student Dance Committee the week before the dance; when a tour of the campus is given, Ray arranges it and when work with the Student Accident Insurance Plan is done, it is done by Ray.

However, it is those services that he performs that aren't written down in any book of duties that are particularly interesting.

Who was it who got called up the other evening when the mock hanging of the "Dook" student was held? Who was it that was summoned out to stop the panty raid? Who was it who got turned into the police station by a bunch of joking sorority girls for operating a taxi without a license? And who is it that said, "If one of my kids gets in jail, I have to bail him out." You have already guessed it.

Ray, a native of Harrisonburg, Va. who later moved to Wilmington came here in February 1944 on an experimental program. He was one of 16 boys from New Hanover High School who entered UNC as a freshman 5 months before graduating from high school.

UNC GRADUATE



He was a dorm advisor his junior and senior years, was on InterDorm Council and Student Legislature, and was chairman of the Student Council. He was also chosen to be member of the Order of the Grail and the Order of the Golden Fleece.

Upon his graduation in 1947 with a BS in Commerce, Dean Weaver asked him to stay and work at Carolina. "However," says Ray "I had already decided to go into another business. But then the man who had offered me a job was picked up for embezzlement."

So the next September he returned to be the counselor for the post-war quonset hut program for veterans and freshmen. Later he began to work for Joe Galloway, the placement director, and then he became Assistant Dean of Student Affairs.

Ray now is a link bewteen student and deans as well as between students and students. "I have more fun," he says, "than anybody else at the University."

That's because Ray has continuously kept up with the students and their activities, and because he shows an interest and love for them "beyond the call of duty."

MR. FRIENDLY — He's both a "trouble shooter" and a detail man, the possessor of Carolina's laudatory double title: Mr. Friendly and Mr. Information Center — Ray Jefferies, assistant dean of student affairs.

UNC Press Sells Rights To Best Seller

The University of North Carolina Press has just sold the Dutch and Japanese translation rights of their best seller "Bridge To The Sun" by Gwen Terasaki. "Bridge To The Sun" will be made into a major movie by Paramount in 1958.

The book was featured in the September issue of the Readers' Digest. "Bridge To The Sun" has been on national best sellers lists since its publication in early September by the University Carolina Press; it is now in its third printing.

William LeRoy Stewart Jr. Is Winner Of Akers Scholarship

William LeRoy Stewart Jr., has been named the recipient of the third Susan Grey Akers Scholarship in Library Science awarded for the academic year 1957-58 by the School of Library Science Alumni Association.

The scholarship is offered to students enrolled in the UNC School of Library Science who are pursing courses leading to the masters degree in library science. In selecting the recipient of the scholarship, the first consideration is definite evidence of professional promise, supplemented by character, qualities of leadership and high scholastic achievement.

Stewart is a native of Slema, Ala. but came to North Carolina in early childhood when his family made its home in High Point. He attended High School and High Point College; in 1957 he was graduate with the degree of Bachelor of Arts with a major in social studies. While attending college, Stewart held a full-time staff position graduation he plans to remain in public libarary work in North Carolina.

CONTEST

JUDGES — Winning selections will be chosen by Mademoiselle editors and decisions will be final.

Entries must be postmarked by midnight March 15, 1958. Submit them to College Fiction Contest, Mademoiselle, 575 Madison Ave., New York 22.

The editor of the O. Henry Awards collection has said of the contest that it "is one of the finest supports of fiction the country annually provides."

Eighty-five per cent of the contest-winning authors have their stories reprinted or mentioned in annual anthologies. The most recent example is Cynthia Marshall Rich, whose My Sister's Marriage is included in the O. Henry Prize Stories of 1957, edited by Paul Engle.

WC Writing Program Seeks Contributors In Arts Festival

Contributors are now being sought for the writing program of the annual Arts Festival at Woman's College. The Arts Festival will be held from March 13 to 15.

For the writing program a group of distinguished writers and critics who have been associated with creative writing at WC will participate in panel discussions of a special edition of Coraddi, WC's literary magazine.

Any students wishing to participate in the Festival by publishing in Coraddi have been invited to submit manuscripts. The deadline for sending in material is January 2, 1958.

Only clean, double-space typewritten, first copies will be considered for publication. Verse of any length or complete prose pieces of not over 8,000 words will be acceptable. No expository essays will be considered, however.

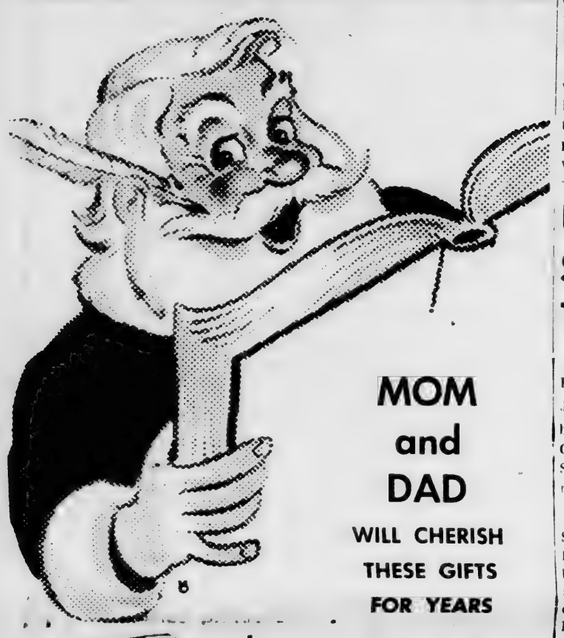
Astronomy Club Elects New Officers



Three offices of the Chapel Hill Astronomy Club have been filled, according to President Bill Baylis. To serve until April, they are: Wade Wellman, vice president; Peter Wilson, secretary and John McHugh, treasurer.

Lambda Chi's Party

The Lambda Chi's traveled to Greensboro Sunday night to celebrate the pinning of Perry White, junior from Spindale, and Marjorie Costner, WC sophomore from Shelby. The party was held at Greens, an informal nightclub in Greensboro.

Richard Love, senior from Greensboro, has pinned Duke nursing student, Carolyn Mister from Palm Beach, Fla.

Last Thursday the fraternity entertained Dinah Johnson and "Boots" Baker at a banquet. They presented the girls honorary pins for being chosen to represent the fraternity in the Yack beauty court.

Pika Fun

Approximately 25 Pika's and their dates invaded Woollen Gym Saturday afternoon to cheer the Tar Heels on to victory.

After the game they returned to the house to celebrate the 79-55 win over the Clemson Tigers.

Chi Phi Pledges Entertain

Pika pledges, David Green, Charlie Meek and R. V. Faulk composed a combo and entertained the brothers and their dates following the game Saturday afternoon.

At an informal party later in the evening, they celebrated the pinning of Al Cole from Clayton to Betty Boone from Albemarle.

Public Health Training Program Established

The establishment of a program to train North Carolina public health workers to meet the health problems of living in the atomic age was announced today by Dr. E. G. McGavran, dean of the UNC School of Public Health.

Dr. McGavran announced that the program, to be operated by the school's Department of Sanitary Engineering, will be made possible by a grant from the Atomic Energy Commission. Grant funds will be used to equip radiation counting and radiological health laboratories for research and teaching.

Dr. Marvin L. Granstrom, associate professor in the Department of Sanitary Engineering, will direct the laboratories, the dean said. In addition to the research and teaching within the regular academic program, Dr. Granstrom will be responsible for the planning of seminars.

Magazine Announces Fiction Contest For College Women

Mademoiselle has announced its 1958 College Fiction Contest for women and is offering $1,000 in prizes. The deadline is March 18 for all entries.

The two winners will receive $500 each for serial rights to their stories and publication in Mademoiselle. The runners-up will receive honorable mention and the magazine reserves the right to buy their works at regular rates.

The winners and honorable mentions will be announced in the August 1958 College issue.

The rules for the contest are:

ELIGIBILITY—Any woman undergraduate under 26 who is regularly enrolled in an accredited college or junior college may enter.

Stories that have appeared in undergraduate publications are acceptable if they have not been published elsewhere. Stories must be original and characters fictitious.

LENGTH — Stories should run from approximately 2,500 to 5,000 words. Contestants may enter more than one story.

FORMAT—Use regulation-size typing paper. Entries should be typewritten, double-spaced, on one side of the page only. Mark the work with name, age, home address, school address and school year.

Enclose a 9" by 12" manila envelope, self-addressed and stamped for stories to be returned. Mademoiselle assumes no responsibility for manuscripts.

Special Librarianship Offered For First Time

A new curriculum in special librarianship will be inaugurated in the spring semester by the School of Library Science. For the first time the school will offer courses in medical library service and in the literature of the sciences.

The two new courses, "Seminar in Medical Librarianship" and "Science Literature" will be taught by Miss Myrl Ebert, chief librarian of the UNC Division of Health Affairs Library. Either course may be taken by special students or by students enrolled in a degree program in the Library School.

The course in medical librarianship will emphasize the study and use of bibliographical and reference works in medicine and allied fields. Problems in administration and technical processing peculiar to medical library service will be considered as well as the history of medicine and medical libraries.

Steps are now being taken to have the course certified by the Medical Library Association.

The course in the literature of the sciences will introduce the student to the basic literature and development of the various subject areas of the pure and applied sciences, and consideration will be given to the interests and methods of those engaged in research in these fields.

Before coming to Chapel Hill, Miss Ebert served as associate librarian of the Bellevue Medical Center Library in New York City and as periodicals librarian and associate librarian of the New York Academy of Medicine Library.

She has also been on the staffs of the Columbia University School of Medicine Library, the Vanderbilt University School of Medicine Library and the Joint University Libraries in Nashville, Tenn.

Miss Ebert earned her bachelor of science degree in Library Science at George Peabody College and her master of science in library science at Columbia University.

She is currently a member of the Special Libraries Association, the N. C. Library Association and the American Association of the History of Medicine.

Public Health Seminar Slated Jan. 27-29

The fourth annual seminar on radiation and public health will be held at the UNC School of Public Health Jan. 27-29.

The seminar is being jointly conducted by the UNC School of Public Health and by the North Carolina State Board of Health The N. C. State Board of Health has recently instituted a radiological health program under the direction of Dr. William M. Peck.

It was just annouced this week that the UNC School of Public Health is establishing a program to train North Carolina health workers to meet the health problems of living in the atomic age. This new program, which begins next month, was made possible by a grant from the Atomic Energy Commission.

Taking part in the program will be J. S. Ameen, N. C. State Board of Health; Dr. Donald R. Chadwick, Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.; Emil T. Chanlett, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. George O. Doak, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. Leon D. Freedman, UNC School of Public Health, Dr. Marvin L. Granstrom, UNC School of Public Health; John C. Lumsden, N. C. State Board of Health; Dr. Daniel A. Okun, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. William M. Peck, N. C. State Board of Health; Aaron P. Sanders, Duke University; Dr. Paul E. Shearin, UNC Department of Physics; E. Jack Story, N. C. State College and Richard L. Witcofski, Baptist Hospital, Winston-Salem.

Four subjects will be covered on the first day of the program. These are basic physics, radioactivity and units of measurement, principles of measurement, and instrumentation.

The second day's program will cover sources of radiation, absorption of radiation matter, principles of shielding and biological effects of radiation.

There will be two sessions on the final third day of the program. The public health session will deal with contamination of milk, food and water; significance of radiation data; x-ray and fluoroscopy—diagnostic, therapeutic and industrial uses; and situation problems.

B.A. Graduates Can Get Grants

Students interested in public affairs and public service careers who will receive their B.A. in June have been offered an opportunity to apply for fellowships to study at three different universities. The fellowships grant $1,500 a year plus college fees. Each fellowship approximates $1,950 in total value.

Beginning this June fellows will serve with a public agency such as TVA or a department in a city or state government. In the 1958-59 school session they will take graduate courses at the Universities of Alabama, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

Completion of the 12 months training period entitles fellows to a certificate in public administration. They can be awarded a masters degree at either of the three universities upon completing a thesis and passing examinations.

For eligibility requirements and other information students should write the Educational Director, Southern Regiosal Training Program in Public Administration, University of Alabama, University, Ala. The deadline for submitting applications is March 10, 1958.

Librarians Set Joint Program

Dean Lucile Kelling Henderson of the School of Library Science and Hoyt Galvin, director of the Public Library of Charlotte and Mecklenburg County, have announced the establishment of a joint Work-Study Program for the preparation of qualified men and women for the profession of librarianship.

Work-study applicants would receive the degree of Master of Science in Library Science at the end of the two-year program. Employment would be assured at the Public Library of Charlotte and Mecklenburg County during the work-study period and following the two-year period if the master's degree is secured and if work at the Public Library is satisfactory.

Applicants would be encouraged to continue work at the Public Library after completing the two-year program, but it would not be compulsory.

Two work-study applicants must be available to begin the program at the same time. One would work at the Public Library while the other was attending the School of Library Science. Each applicant would alternately work one semester and study one semester during the two-year period.

Applicants must be college graduates with academic preparation which fulfills the entrance requirements of the School of Library Science, must participate in the program on a twelve-month basis, and must maintain acceptable academic standards in the School of Library Science.

Income Tax Course To Be Offered Here

A short course in personal income tax will be offered as a night class to begin in the School of Business Administration here January 16.

The University Extension Division, with the cooperation of tax authorities in the business school, will give a course primarily for citizens seeking assistance with their tax problems and for tax consultants who assist others.

The instructor will be one of the more prominent tax experts in the School of Business Administration.

The course will cover all phases of personal income tax returns preparation, with special attention to the new tax laws and revisions in tax laws. There will be 20 hours of instruction.

Anyone interested in taking the course may write to Short Course, Box 1050, Chapel Hill.

Training Directors To Convene Here

The North Carolina-Virginia chapter of the American Society of Training Directors will hold its fall conference on the Carolina campus Thursday and Friday.

Training and personnel officials from large industries in the two states will participate in the ASTD sessions in Carroll Hall. This week's gathering will be held under the auspices of UNC's Bureau of Business Services and Research, directed by Dr. R. S. Winslow.

True Picture Of Early 1900's Seen In Playmakers Show

By DAVE PETERSON

When the curtains part on the Carolina Playmakers "What Every Woman Knows' 'this evening at 8:30, the audience will witness a true picture of the life of the early 1900's.

Costumes for the show are the creations of Russell Link, senior student in dramatic art. Just three short weeks ago, Russell could be seen in the costume shop, pouring over copies of "The Designer," a fashion magazine of 1901-1907, which the Playmakers found in a Chapel Hill attic.

Research in the magazines and costume plates of the period led Russ to the discovery that modern dress is quite similar to the turn of-the-century period. The men in the comedy are quite at home in the three-button, narrow-lapel coats and trousers without pleats.

Indeed, they wear something similar to their classes and call it "Ivy-league" styling. The fancy vests are also now in vogue.

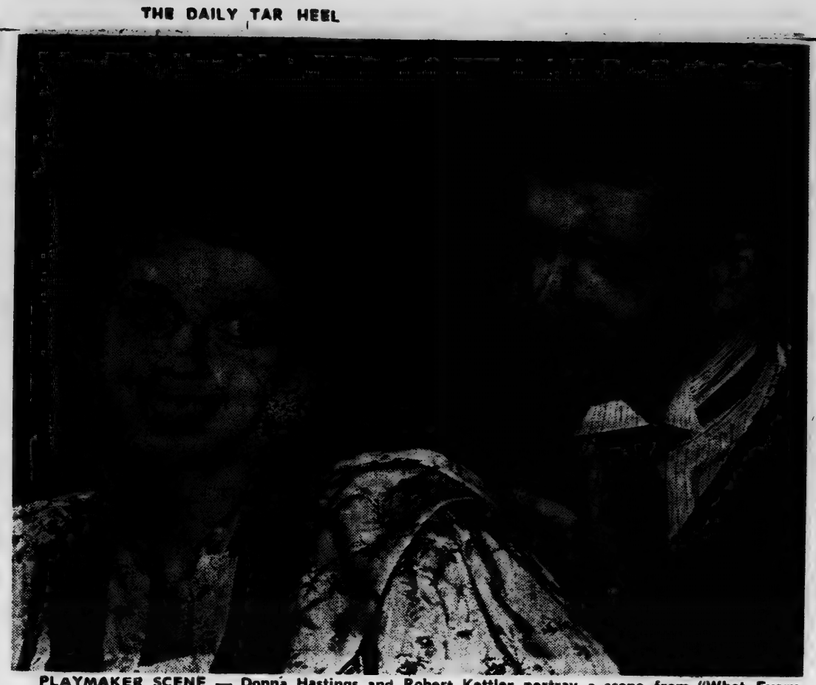
With the women of the period the "hour-glass" figure is the prime concern. Here, too, we find a modern version in the foundation garment, reaching from above the waist to just below the hips.

Another stroke of good fortune for the young designer came in the choice of materials for the show. The strong brocades and stripes which are worn currently are exact duplicates of the earlier period.

Hair styles of the moment also fit nicely into the show. In fact, the basic model for the coiffures was found in a newspaper of a week ago and is called the "beret bob."with the hair swept up from the nape of the neck and piled upon the top of the head.

The extensive research also showed Russ the differences in the two periods. The skirts of course were long with many gores. As many as 15 panels were used in some of the costumes of the 1900's. The use of much embroidery of black jet beads is evident in the final designs for the play.

Russell, a native of Jamaica, N. Y., has also created costumes for the Playmakers' "Stranger in the Land," seen last year. During the summer he did both the settings and costumes for an experimental production, "April in the Moon."



Much of the actual construction of the ten original costumes for "What Every Woman Knows" may be attributed to Russell. Edith Hinrichs has been a great help to Russ with the creations. The costume shop of the Playmakers is under the direction of Irene Rains. Richard Newdick is the graduate assistant in that department.

Wynn Attends Chicago Meet

Earl Wynn, chairman of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, was in Chicago, Ill., recently for a meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of Educational Broadcasters.

A former member of the board and now chairman of the Association's professional advancement committee, Wynn was asked to sit on the planning session to discuss the organization's services to radio and TV.

Wynn is also past director of the Association's southeastern region. In addition to his departmental chairmanship, he is director of the UNC Communication Center and director of WUNC-TV, the University's educational station.

PLAYMAKER SCENE — Donna Hastings and Robert Kettler portray a scene from "What Every Woman Knows," which opens this evening at 8:30 in the Playmakers Theatre. The play will continue through Sunday.

Playmakers' Production Opening Here Tonight

The third production of the Carolina Playmakers, James M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows," opens this evening at 8:30 in the Playmakers Theatre.

"What Every Woman Knows" tells the story of John and Maggie Shand, whose marriage has been arranged through a contract with Maggie's family.

During an election campaign John becomes infatuated by a beguiling countess, Lady Sybil Lazenby. Realizing that this is only the "calf-love of a boy," Maggie devises a way to prove to John that Lady Sybil is not the inspiration that he thinks she is.

The leading roles of John and Maggie are portrayed by Robert Kettler and Carolyn Myers. Donna Hastings is Lady Sybil; Marion Fitz-Simons plays the Contesse de la Briene. Others in the cast include Pat Mullvihill, Ross Baumstone, Harvey Knox, Taylor Williams, Lore Schuller, Warren Heemann, and James Potter.

This Dummy Reversal Nets Six For Declarer

South's two-club response initiates the presently quite popular Stayman Convention to seek possible major suit fits when responder to the 1 NT opening either foresees danger at no trump play or anticipates advantages-which will accure to suit play.

The hand:

NORTH
S - K 10 2
H - A 7 3 2
D - K Q 9
C - K Q 2

WEST	EAST
S - 8 7 5	S - A 9
H - J 10 9 5	H - K Q 6 4
D - 6 4	D - J 8 7 3 2
C - J 8 6 4	C - 9 7

SOUTH
S - Q J 6 4 3
H - 8
D - A 10 5
C - A 10 5 3

Opening lead: six of diamonds

Unfortunately, North could show only his four-card heart suit, and south reluctantly gave up his Slam visions, and the bidding simply proceeded to game.

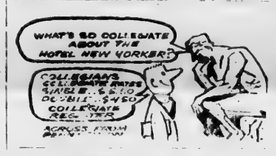
(To those prone to rebidding 3NT with the North and—which at times, alas, includes this writer—note well how much better this hand plays at suit contract than at no trump).

It indeed was unfortunate, for when dummy came down, declarer found he could make six against any defense—provided only that trumps split no worse than 3-2 (the most probable split) and hearts no worse than 5-3 (they actually break 4-4).

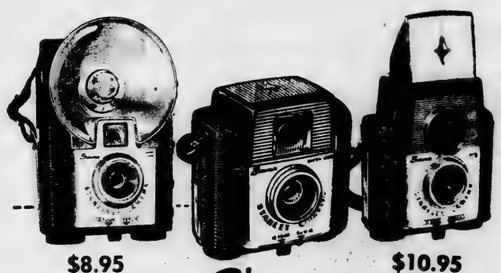
South would not seek to play the hand according to his plan if the game in question were simply rubber bridge, where it is the contract and not the overtricks which are important.

But assuming this is duplicate where an overtrick or failure to make an overtrick can make the difference between top and bottom, South seeks to make all he can reasonably hope to make out of the cards—intending to play to best advantage the most probable lay of the cards.

In this case South sets up a dummy reversal play. He plans to set up North as the master trump hand by seeking three heart ruffs in the South hand. Here's how the play procedes:



South takes the opening diamond lead in dummy. He immediately leads out the ace of hearts and ruffs a small heart in his own hand. He reenters dummy with the king of clubs, and ruffs a second heart in his own hand. He returns dummy again by the queen of clubs, and ruffs his last heart with the jack of spades.



(This is to protect against the possible 5-3 break of hearts in the opponents' hands. If hearts so break, the opponents can not take the trick unless they overruff with their natural trick, the ace of spades.)

At this point, South still has three trumps on the board, but only the queen-small left in his own hand. He attacks trumps at long last, and regardless of subsequent play, the defense is limited to take only the ace of trumps.

The only reason South does not attack trumps earlier is that if the ace of trumps lies with the hand that holds three trumps, that defender can break up the planned line of play by taking the second lead of the suit and immeliately returning a third lead of trumps.

Dummy reversal is a neat offensive maneuver, but it is often overlooked by bridge players who insist on regarding the long tramp hand as the master trump hand. What you do in effect with a dummy reversal play is to make one or more "long tricks" with the hand with the shorter original trump holdings, while what would have been won as "long tricks" in the longer trump hand are now converted to winners as ruffs.

Yale Astronomer Talks Here Tomorrow Night

Dr. A. E. Lilley, eminent Yale astronomer, will deliver two talks in radio astronomy Thursday night in Venable Hall.

A group of science high school teachers wo are currently studying in Chapel Hill under the sponsorship of the National Science Foundation through the UNC Institute of Natural Science will hear the first lecture Thursday morning. Dr. Lilley will deliver a public address at 8:00 p.m. Thursday night in Venable Hall.

In 1954 with the aid of the 50 ft. radio telescope at the Naval Research Laboratory, Lilley and Dr. Edward McLain, while studying the radio waves from Cassiopeia, the most intense radio star, developed a radio method of gauging the distance of radio stars in the Milky Way. This development has led to a revision in estimates of the distance to Cassiopeia and is of the utmost importance to the astronomer as he seeks to measure the size of the Universe.

This same team later detected the first radio red-shift while studyng the radio emanations from the colliding galaxies in Cynus, 260 million light years away. The red-shift, which provides evidence that the universe is expanding, is analogous to the drop in pitch of a receding train whistle.

Just as an observer can calculate the speed of a receding train from the drop in pitch of the whistle, so a radio astronomer can calculate the speed of a receding star from the drop in the frequency of the star's radio signal.

Until recently most of the information about the stars has been obtained by means of optical telescopes. Within the last decade, however, the observation of radio waves from interstellar bodies has greatly extended man's knowledge of the Universe.

The detection of radio waves by means of radio telescopes and the interpretation of these observation will be the subject of Dr. Lilley's talks.

UNC Professor Helps Japanese Orphans To Realize Education

Twenty-one Japanese orphans who might not have received high school educations are now being given that chance through the generosity of two people, one in Hiroshima, Japan, and the other in Chapel Hill.

The royalties from "Hiroshima Diary," the first book-length eye-witness acount of the Hiroshima bombing and its aftermath written by Dr. Michihiko Hachiya and translated by Dr. Warner Wells of UNC are being used to help orphans in Hiroshima attend high school.

For several months the royalties from the publication of the best-seller accumulated interest in a bank in Chapel Hill, but neither the author nor the translator would accept the money.

Finally Dr. Wells and Dr. Hachiya agreed to establish a revolving trust fund to educate orphans in Hiroshima to be known as the Hiroshima Yurin Scholarship Foundation. This Foundation was legally approved in Japan in April, 1957, and 21 orphans were accepted and entered high school in June.

Dr. Hachiya explains the significance of the Foundation's name: "Yurin is one phrase in the Analects of Confucius. It means 'man of virtue is not always alone. He will surely have neighborhood (some sponsors) some day.' These words are often used to encourage orphans and students in Japan."

In Japan the Ministry of Education and individual cities share the cost of educating orphans under 15 years old. After 15, they must become partially self-supporting although Japanese law prohibits full time employment until 18.

High Esprit De Corps Found In UNC Business School

By PETE IVEY

"I'd hate to leave here now — things are happening and more is going to happen, and I think we're going some place. I want to be a part of it."

The professor in the UNC School of Business summed up the attitude of a cross- section of faculty interviewed on the status and morale of the school, its faculty and student body.

Students are equally displaying optimism. "We like high standards," said a senior. "The work may be a litle bit tougher, but we know we're getting a sound education in business principles. We are fully aware of the fact, too, that more and more recruiters for business and industry are coming to Chapel Hill looking for graduates to take jobs with them. And we know they put great confidence in the training student receive in this school."

Ultimately it means higher per capita salaries for individual graduates when they go to work, a group of business-fraternity men agreed.

CRITICISM

In a poll conducted here by this reporter, students faculty and lemni were invited to be critics. "You are free to go and talk with any member of the faculty and any students and ask them questions and release the answers, without any interference at all," said Dean Maurice W. Lee who heads the business school.

The survey comes at the end of one year devoted to "study and analysis" conducted by the business school since Lee became dean, and coincides with a $2 million campaign for endowment founds to give support to the school in faculty salary supplements, research funds and scholarships.

The declaration, by a faculty member, that "there is an air of expectancy; interesting things are going to happen; we are on the move; I want to stay here and see how it works out"—is typical of the statements made by those polled.

Another professor expressed it bluntly. "Those members of the faculty who have ability and are willing to put out will like the new regime in the business school," he said. "Those not so capable and not willing to work hard are bound to find it difficult. They will be unhappy and will eventually get out."

The same thing is true or student attitudes. Those looking for soft snaps in class assignments will quickly gravitate away from the business school. No snug harbor awaits them there. But the students with zeal for business studies will find the experience rewarding.

LEADERSHIP

Most of the spirit of resurging morale can be attributed to the leadership on the campus. This refers not only to Dean Lee, but also to the new and youthful administration of Chancellor William B. Aycock and President William C. Friday.

STUDENT OPINION

Students interviewed were equally enthusiastic about the top leadership and are just as penetrating in their analysis of the direction in which the school seems to be heading.

"One thing I like about the new case method study," said a junior, "is that the same question can have two answers and both of them can be right."

He referred to the system to class assignments in which students are called upon to solve certain business problems. One student may tackle it one way and come up with a solution, and another student may go about it differently and produce a different solution.

"If we show what we have done, how we have gone about gathering our facts and arrivings at our conclusion, we sometimes find that one answer is just as good as another," he said.

That is much better than the old method of memorizing facts and trying to repeat it on quizes, the students agreed. "If the instructor wants to challenge your answers, you can defend your position," it was declared.

The students are eager to make suggestions about impending curriculum change, too. For instance, they suggest larger number of elective courses and fewer required core courses. Among the required courses they suggest more attention to report writing and speech making —these latter now are electives.

BOOKS ARE BEST FOR SMALL PEOPLE

At the Intimate, we're rather proud of our Children's Corner. There you'll find something for every child, from the cloth-book age to the teen-ager, from the mechanically inclined little boy to the little girl who loves paper dolls.
Another source of pride in our Children's Corner is prices. In a period when prices are getting higher and higher, we've still managed to stock lots of nice books at less than $2.00.

MOST MEN LOVE GOOD BOOKS

As an outfit 80% of whose customers are men, we know how much men enjoy good books — and we're in a position to give good advice on their selection.
In the Intimate Bookshop, you'll find all the important new nonfiction, from current events to readable history. There's a great big table of real mansized humor, ranging from the grotesque of Charles Addams to the subtleties of Punch. There are how-to-do-it books on sports and homecrafts.
For a man's Christmas, you can't do better than a book from that masculine old barn, The Intimate Bookshop.

IT HAS BEEN A WONDERFUL YEAR FOR LADIES' BOOKS

For the lady who likes novels, your old bookshop has coralled the liveliest heard you ever saw. What's more, you'll find lively numbers priced all the way from $1.00 to $6.00, and each is better than all the rest.
If the lady is artistic, there are art and music books. If she's in love, there are books of love poems. And if she's an incorrigible home-maker, there are cookbooks and books on decoration.
And who but a lady would fully appreciate that out-of-this-world gift-wrapping that's free when you buy from the Intimate Bookshop?

RELIGIOUS BOOKS MAKE SUITABLE GIFTS —

Our Religious Department has the books to make your Christmas shopping easy. You'll find Bibles, R.S.V. and King James, in many sizes, bindings and prices. There is a good section of inspirational reading, and an equally good selection for the scholarly reader. Whether your friends' tastes run to Billy Graham, J. B. Phillips, C. S. Lewis or a volume of the Interpreters' Bible, The Intimate Bookshop will fix you up in fine shape.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING IS MORE FUN

Folks from all over meet in Chapel Hill's big informal bookshop. Christmas shopping there is like attending a family reunion of the intellectuals for miles around. You belong in the Intimate club. Bring the family along, and watch your Christmas problems melt away in the jolly, friendly atmosphere.

34-Game Record On Line Tonight As Cagers Meet Winless Furman

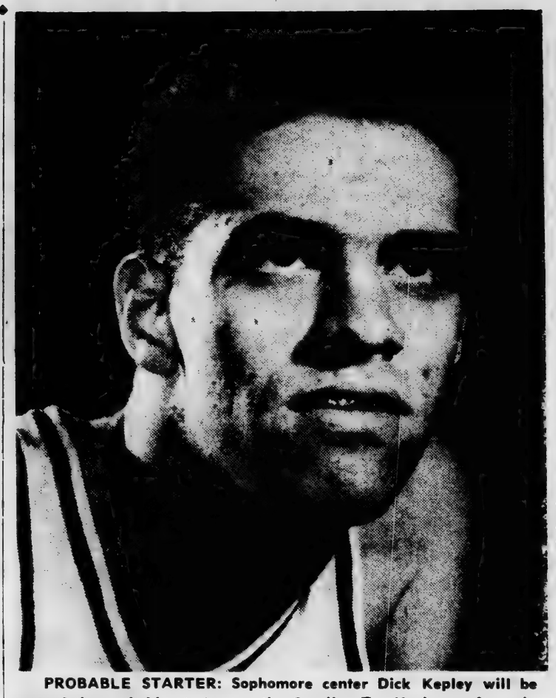
'WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS'—Taylor Williams as Venables and Marion Fitz-Simons as the Comtesse de la Briene in "What Every Woman Knows," which continues through Sunday at the Playmakers Theatre. Performances are at 8:30 p.m .Tickets are available at the box office each evening at 7:30. They also may be purchased at 214 Aberneth, Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard.

Legislature Sets Meet

The Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East for its last session before Christmas.

Charlie Gray's (UP) resolution "concerned with the conduct of the State Student Legislature" will have to come out of the was and means committee.

The resolution "censures and condemns" the SSL action against statutory bans on interracial marriage and repudiates "any claim asserted by the SSL to be truly representative of the student bodies of its participating schools."



Pat Adams' (SP) bill "to appropriate $28.75 to the Dean of Awards" and his bill "to add Peanuts to the comic section of The Tar Heel and to appropriate $5.30 for its purchase" will probably be debated.

The money going to Dean of Awards will be used "to have the necessary information filled in the student government certificates for academic excellence."

The certificates will be given to sophomores who were twice on the dean's list during the last year.

Tally Eddings' (SP) bill "to establish a committee to investigate the possibilities of having a street light placed between Lenoir Hall and Raleigh Road" (the street Woollen gym faces) will probably be put on the floor for discussion.

The next meeting of the Student Legislature will be held Jan. 10.

PROBABLE STARTER: Sophomore center Dick Kepley will be one of the probable starters as the Carolina Tar Heels go after win number 35 against Furman in Charlotte tonight. Kepley started the first two Tar Heel games this season.

Charlotte Coliseum Is Site For Game

By BILL KING

CHARLOTTE—The streak is on the line again tonight.

Furman University offers the next challenge to Coach Frank McGuire and his 34-game winning skein at 8 p.m. tonight in the Charlotte Coliseum here.

The Tar Heels made it 34 in a row Tuesday night with and 86-59 victory over George Washington. It was win number two in this young season as the Tar Heels opened with a 79-55 victory over Clemson last Saturday.

The injury-riddled Carolinians had little trouble disposing of the George Washington quint as sophomore center Lee Shaffer joined with veterans Pete Brennan and Tommy Kearns to carry the club to an easy triumph. Shaffer and Brennan each had 20 points and Kearns dumped in 22.

Furman Winless

Furman will be seeking its first win tonight. The Purple Paladins are 0-4 on the season, having lost to Tennessee (84-61), Pittsburgh (83-45), West Virginia (105-67) and Presbyterian (96-78).

For the tall, powerful McGuiremen, the starting lineup will probably read as it has in the first two games. Brennan and Shaffer will be at forward, sophomore Dick Kepley at center and Kearns and veteran senior Bob Cunningham at guard.

The Furman attack, which usually centers around 5'11 guard Dick Wright, might suffer tonight as Wright is nursing an injury which might keep him out. The little junior scored 545 points last season.

The starting forward posts will probably consist of Bryon Pinson and 6'6 Bob Conard. A 6'9 center, Steve Ross will probably start along with guard Bill Gaines.

South Carolina Saturday

The bame tonight marks the second in a series of three this week for the national champs. The Chapel Hillians return home Saturday afternoon to go before the television cameras again, this time against a strong South Carolina five.

McGuire will probably give most of his squad an opportunity against Furman as he prepares for a long voyage to Lexington, Ky. and the Kentucky Classic which begins Dec. 20 (next Friday). The Tar Heels are expected to encounter their toughest opposition thus far this season against some strong intersectional foes. Their first opponent is Minnesota.

NORA & ISTVAN
Appearing Here Tonight

Ballet Dancers To Perform This Evening

European dancers, Miss Nora Kovach and Istvan Rabovsky, will perform with the dance ensemble tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Other featured dancers will be Miss Sonia Arova and Job Sanders.

The dance group is being sponsored here by the Chapel Hill Concert Series in conjunction with the UNC Student Entertainment Committee.

Carolina students may pick up free tickets to the dance concert by presenting ID cards to the Information Desk in Graham Memorial. ID cards must be taken to Memorial Hall in addition to the tickets tonight.

The Kovach-Rabovsky concert is the second one this year on the Chapel Hill Concert Series. The Student Entertainment Committee will sponsor the following program during the rest of the year: Jan Peerce, singer, February 6; Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra, March 11; and Alec Templeton, pianist, April.

The two stars in tonight's dance performance were formerly top artists of the Russian ballet. Miss Kovach and Rabovsky escaped from behind the Iron Curtain in 1953 when they were making an appearance in East Berlin.

Preparations Set For Mock Trial; Payne Faces First Degree Charge

By ED ROWLAND

Preparations for the trial of Buddy Payne for murder moved steadily ahead yesterday, while Payne lounged in the Manning County jail, apparently unworried.

The annual mock trial under the sponsorship of Alpha Phi Delta law fraternity, is scheduled for 7:30 p. m. Friday in Manning Hall courtroom.

Payne's lawyer, Gaston Gage, said, "We can indicate to the jury that Payne is not at all at fault. We are confident that the jury will return a verdict of not guilty."

Assisting Gage in the defense are Tom Bennett, Giles Clark, Jim Smith and Luke Crobett.

For the prosecution Solicitor Jack Hudson told reporter, "Payne is unequivocably guilty of murder in the first degree, and I see no reason why an intelligent jury should fail to realize that. He obviously went to the scene of the knifing with the intent of murder, even though the knife used was not his."

Witnesse for the state are Gail Willingham, Sarah Yan Weyk, Maurice Canaday, the Manning County medical examiner, and Officer Herman Stone of the Chapel Hill Police Department, in addition to Sheriff Carl Churchill.

Friday afternoon the prosecution and defense will examine prospective jurors and will select 13 for the trial.

At the trial itself Julge Malcolm Seawell of the North Carolina Superior Court will preside.

Di Passes Bill Condemning Torture, Capital Punishment

The Dialectic Senate passed a bill condemning terture and capital punishment in all crimes except first degree murder, Tuesday night by a vote of 6-2.

The group also initiated three students into its membership.

The new members included Carl Barrington, senior English major; Bob Quinn, senior marketing major; and Bud Gardner, junior in dustrial management major.

In other business, Senator Pat Adams was acclaimed president pro tempore of the Senate, succeeding Bill Sabiston, who resigned. Senator Barrington was acclaimed as representative from the Di to the Debate Council, succeeding Senator Betty Huffman, who also resigned.

Senator Barrington introduced the bill of the evening, which, if passed, would have condemned capital punishment and torture without reservation.

Barrington, in support of his bill, said that capital punishment was ineffective and that it was contrary to Christian ethics.

Senator Pebley Barrow, speaking negatively, said that the fundamental concept of jurisprudence is the protection of society. He added that ever since Hammurabi, the concept of "an eye for an eye," has been accepted. He said also that society had the right to exact retribution, and pointed out that he felt that premeditated murder justified the death sentence.

Senator Gary Greer said that the crime rate in America has not decreased as a result of capital punishment, and hence capital punishment was not an effective deterrent. He cited psychological data to back up his point that punishment is no more effective than good treatment.

The idea that retributive justice does not protect society was cited by Senator Gerry Boudreau. He pointed out that murder is in large measure a one-time crime, and thus there needs no real deterrent for repeaters.

He cited that capital punishment is ancient, and that its application to such crimes as armed robbery and rape were wrong.

Senator Rudy Albert pointed out that the protection of society was served by capital punishment, and that murder in the first degree was prevented to a large measure by capital punishment.

Senator Greer later proposed to amend the bill, adding a clause whereby the use of capital punishment would be restricted to first degree murder. The amendment passed by a vote of 5-2.

Phi Defeats Coed Bill

By ED GOODWIN

A bill calling for the immediate removal of all coeds from the Carolina campus was defeated 8-0 by the Phi Literary Society Tuesday night.

The bill was introduced by Delegate Warren Coolidge, who said that the campus had been invaded by a petticoat brigade' which had hindered "Carolina gentlemen" scholastically.

"The emphasis is now on dating," he said "not studying. Carolina is now a party school which produces mental midgets."

He said that Woman's College provides the necessary facilities for the education of the state's women and that they don't need to come to Chapel Hill.

Delegate Clarence Simpson said that the removal of coeds would help solve the problem of insufficent dormitory facilities for men. He said that only a limited number of superior women should be allowed to matriculate here.

Delegate Don Jacobs said that the coed were a "threat to the security of males" on the campus. He said that some students spend "$35 to $45 a week" on women, who lack the foresight to look to the future of their boy friends.

"Women come here to marry and get men to support them," he said.

He added that he recognized the need for a student social life but that "a warped social life leads to a warped future."

Speaking against the bill, Delegate Bill Fackert said that the state constitution said that the University existed to educate "youth," which meant both men and women.

Another opponent of the bill, Delegate Joey Lopez, said that the alleged trouble are not the fault of the girls, but of the boys who date them.

"If girls become problems," he said, "it is because men let them." He said that men have to learn how to live and work with women.

Note To De South Building: Was Dat Snow We Seen?

Note to UNC administration: Please send a copy of the first semester exam schedule to the weather man.

When we saw snow yesterday morning, we were a little confused. Everyone knows the only time it ever snows in Chapel Hill is during first semester finals, so we searched frantically for a newspaper to give us the date. Had we breezed through Christmas holidays? And was exam time here already and we hadn't studied?

But no, we were actually seeing pre-season snow. Or at least we hope it was pre-season snow.

After all, it's a well-known fact that if it doesn't snow during finals, there's no use studying—you're gonna flunk anyhow.

It's something like: we know we'll know if there's snow. . .

Mixed Bridge Tournament Slated Tonight

Four $5 gift certificates to Town and Campus will be given to the two best partnerships at the special all-student bridge tournament to be held in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2 tonight at 7 o'clock.

First, second, third and fourth place winners will receive master points. Booby prizes will also be awarded.

The tournament, which is being sponsored by the GMAB Tournaments and Contests Committee, is open to all undergraduate students.

The committee has invited any additional couples who have not already signed up for the tournament to come even at the last minute, as there are facilities for a large number of participants. They also stressed the fact that for students unable to get the partner of their own choosing, last minute partnerships will be provided.

news in brief

Blizzard

GATLINBURG, Tenn., Dec. 11 (AP) A blizzard struck the Great Smoky Mountains today, dumping 11 inches of snow and halting motor travel.

Screaming winds whirled clouds of powdery snow among the big balsams high in the Smokies.

U. S. Highway 441 from Gatlinburg across the mountains to Cherokee, N. C., was closed. State route 73 between Gatlinburg and Townsend also was impassable.

Court Refuses

EDINBURGH, Scotland Dec. 11 (AP)-A Scottish court today refused to permit the marriage of 26-year-old socialite Dominic Elwes and 19-year-old Tessa Kennedy, heiress to a Shipping fortune.

Four judges of the Court of Sessions rejected the runaway lovers' appeal against a temporary injunction, obtained by Tessa's father, in barrinng their marriage.

Orientation Advisors Needed

Counselors are needed for spring semester orientation, according to Chairman Jerry Oppenheimer.

Anyone who has served as a ccunselor before and who is interested in helping is asked to call Oppenheimer at 6031 or 9460 or telephone Mary Jane Fisher at 8-9083.

The orientation program will be held January 29 and 30. Second semester classes start January 31.

America Should Approach Reds' Proposal Cautiously

Russia, supreme in the eyes of the world for her recent scientific achievements, continues to wave the big stick of propaganda for all the world to see.

Her latest effort to that end lies in a letter to President Eisenhower calling for a ban on atomic bomb tests and a "conference of leaders" to outlaw war.

It's a good idea—if it were coming from a country identified with a sincere search for a peaceful world. It's a bad idea when one looks below the surface to see just how sincere the Russians are.

Apparently, Soviet Premier Bulganin's memory is much shorter than the average American's. Surely he hasn't forgotten the deadlock of disarmament talks at London for which his country was responsible.

And assuming he has, there was a much more recent attempt to curb the international arms race during disarmament talks at the United Nations Assembly. Again his country balked at disarmament proposals: but perhaps he forgot that, too.

Both of these attempts at world peace were backed by free nations of the world—unified countries acting for the common good at the instance of their individual governments and with the coercion of none.

Consistently, Russia walked away from the disarmament talks even as her guns cooled from Polish revolts and the Hungarian Revolution, while an exhausted and war-weary world prayed for a lasting peace and sought to assure that end.

An abrupt stop came to disarmament talks. Then Russia began stunning the world with ICBM's and man-made satellites, circling the earth to show all who might see that even a world divided is all right so long as Russia can tip the balance of power.

And it is that fact—the fact that Russia has literally frightened the Free World with her scientific achievements—which Bulganin now is using to wave the flag of propaganda.

Neither this country, nor any other free country, should fall prey to this diabolic scheme of the Russians. Free nations, as a unity, have offered their proposals for peace, only to have them refused. We should not now run open-armed to the tricksters who smote us twice.

Americans are a sincere and peace-loving people. We should not mar our own pride by participating in a fabricated call to outlaw a war which the Russians seemingly have made inevitable by their continued refusal to cooperate in disarmament talks.

Now that Bulganin has fired two satellites into the sky, perhaps he thinks the time is ripe to gain some more on earth. This latest proposal seems to be designed precisely for that purpose.

January 2 Ruling Good For Students

Student gratitude is in order today for the sound reasoning and good judgment used by University officials in their decision to dismiss classes January 2.

The decision points out the fact, above all, that compromise can be achieved between the student body and the University when a matter of grave importance is approached positively by both parties concerned.

And it also shows that student expression, when presented in good faith, continues to be examined closely for and ultimately used in decisions forthcoming from the administration on matters affecting students.

The dismissal of classes on January 2 is a wise and good decision. Its cost is the loss of only five hours of reading time for final examinations: but its results conceivably could be measured in terms of lives saved and tragedy escaped.

Those who really want a full reading day will have it—the Sunday before examinations begin on Monday, January 20. Those who want and need more than one full day can spend Saturday afternoon and Saturday night, January 18, in the library.

Nothing worth having comes without some cost to the individual. We feel the value of extending the holiday an extra 24 hours is well worth the price that we, as students, must therefore pay.

It now behooves every student to drive with caution and respect for fellow travellers when the trip begins back to Chapel Hill for classes January 3.

Students Blinded To Flu Protection

Now that the smoke has cleared away, it becomes apparent that students at the University of North Carolina are the real ostriches of the recent influenza epidemic.

In fact, so blinded were students to the importance of receiving protection from the Asian flu virus that 3,680 doses of vaccine were returned for lack of arms to receive it.

Prior to and during the sweeping epidemic here, infirmary officials ordered some 11,000 doses of Asian flu vaccine. Some 4,200 doses of the vaccine were cancelled before receipt, and of the remaining 6,800 shots only 2,980 were administered through infirmary facilities.

That report, given at a Chancellor's Cabinet meeting Monday, brings up the question: How many students would have availed themselves of the vaccine had it been available in numbers before the epidemic struck?

There is little reason to believe that more would have taken advantage of the vaccine before the epidemic than during it. But there's a lot of reason to believe that, should the flu bug return in the spring, many students will sadly remember what they failed to do in the fall:

Trek to Gerrard Hall on one of four days, roll up a sleeve and receive a painless dose of the Asian flu vaccine.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Should Sputnik Scare Lead To U.S.'s Sharing?

By WHIT WHITFIELD

Since the beginning of the Sputnik scare there has been in increasing amount of pressure put on the administration to share our atomic secrets with our allies, particularly the members of NATO. Whether this will be done is a matter of conjecture. Whether it should be done may not be.

According to the United Press a young clerk, riding through the streets of London on his motorcycle (as some Britishers are prone to do), came upon a briefcase containing documents concerning Britain's latest rocket developments. Where they came from, no one seemed to know, for the Ministry of Supply refused to confirm or deny the report. This happened over two weeks ago, and we have seen no further developments.

A long the same lines, British newspapers were filled with headlines over the failure of the Vanguard launching. This is good for British pride. It helps them forget that they have done little more than follow our lead in the field of atoms and missiles, and at that they must be quite far behind, for we have seen no reports of British advances of particular import since the defeat of the Armada.

There will always be an England, but sometimes it is advisable to do a little more than just exist. (Before any Anglo-Saxon patriot considers mayhem, we might point out that our great-great-great was from the isles.)

Some solons aren't so level-headed as others department: In a recent radio panel discussion, Senator John M. Butler (R-MD) said that he believes that the United States should shoot down the Russian satellites as fast as they launch them.

How to do this, and whether or not this would precipitate a full scale atomic war, was not covered by Sen. Butler. It is safe to assume that this is not the conservative Republican policy, or if it is, it may be a good idea to keep the Democrats in control of Congress. It may be a good idea for any reason.

Brooks Says Solons Did 'Wash Hands' Of Delegates' Opinions

Letter to the Editor:

The Student Legislature of UNC is a straight-forward thinking component of Student Government. Its action on the SSL Bill before it last Thursday evening was "mature and rational". The honorable editor flubbed in relying upon the DTH reporter's account of the legislature's activities as being accurate. He would have done well to have inspected the original source of information before expounding upon believed falacies of the legislature.

Just as I was erroneously labeled a member of the UP, so the amendment to the proposed SSL Bill was incorrectly reported to have said "the UNC delegation to the SSL shall not in any way be considered as officially representing the University or the students attending UNC."

The amendment passed by the Student Legislature said "the UNC delegation to the SSL shall in no way be considered as officially representing the "views" of the University or the students attending UNC."

Close examination of the SSL and the Bill passed concerning it reveals that:

(1) The SSL is an activity which warrants participation by UNC.

(2) The delegation endorsed by the Student Legislature of UNC does officially represent the University of North Carolina.

(3) The legislature acted upon by the SSL is mock legislation and does not involve the University directly as it would in the case where the acts passed on national and state issues became actual laws of the land and where the acts passed directly involved the University such as actually levying a tax upon the UNC or its Student Body.

(4) Passage of mock legislation does not warrant official representation of the "views" of the University which would require the expense of popular election of the UNC delegation or the direct election of the delegates by the Student Legislature itself.

(5) The UNC delegation when approved becomes completely autonomous in all matters.

With or without the passage of Thursday evening's SSL Bill, the UNC Student Legislature is responsible for the UNC delegation to the State Student Legislature. Should it misbehave or get into trouble, the Student Legislature is responsible. For this reason the Legislature felt it should have the right of approval of the delegates involved.

Thus, the Legislature passed a good bill legalizing the official SSL delegation and making it responsible to itself in all matters. The Student Legislature not only attempted, but succeeded in "washing its hands of the responsibility for opinions expressed by the delegation." In a Student Legislative jargon, the Legislature's action last Thursday evening was "mature and rational."

Just How Big Is Charlotte?

Overheard: Two boys, one from Charlotte and one from Salisbury, arguing about recent growth of the Queen City and its extension by annexation during the past year.

The Salisbury man had a good point: 'Just how overcrowded is a city when an elephant gets loose in the corporate limits and it takes hunters two weeks to find it?"

Which brings up the story that more cotton used to be raised in Charlotte than in all of Mecklenburg County.

ACTORS INTERVIEWED

Backstage With Massey & Gabel

FRANK CROWTHER

After leaving Miss Agnes Moorehead last Friday, I went to Memorial Hall to meet Raymond Massey and Martin Gabel. Two of the show's assistants were on stage arranging the set and testing the lighting equipment. I walked into the men's dressing room and sat down to wait for the two principals.

Spread out on the table was a conglomeration of make-up sticks and tubes, towels by the dozen, extra mirrors, two pocket watches, a plastic sponge nose and the wig that Mr. Massey would wear in his role as Abe Lincoln.

One of the assistants told me that Massey and Gabel usually arrived at the theater around 7 p.m. and that I could probably have about 30 minutes for the interview. He sat down heavily in the chair across from me and picked up the whiskey bottle which was to be used as a prop in the show. "Well," he said, "eight more days of this mad business and I'll be on the plane for California."

I asked him how long they had been on the road and he replied, "About 11 weeks now. We started on the west coast and will finish up a week from tomorrow in Newark, New Jersey. That doesn't finish the show, though; we just get three weeks off and then come back for 15 additional performances. Man, I'll really be glad to get out from under this one."

I was just about to start an interview with him when I looked out and saw Massey and Gabel standing quietly in the middle of the stage surveying the auditorium. They appeared more like businessmen than actors.

"Don't we have any microphones?" asked Massey.

"No," replied the other assistant, "we'll have to go without them tonight." Massey turned and walked over to the set.

"Martin," he asked Gabel, "why don't we move the table up about six inches? That'll be enough room for us, won't it?"

After moving the table and deciding that it was in its proper position, they came into the dressing room and I was introduced. Gabel sat down in front of his material and said, "Fire Away."

I mentioned that the assistant seemed quite fatigued after the long tour and asked if they were also.

"Yes," said Massey, "it takes a great amount of stamina."

"I think in your case, Raymond," said Gabel, "that it's just a matter of good breeding." They both laughed and Massey sat down next to Gabel.

"You know, when I first came into the theater," said Massey, "I told my brother about it and he asked me, 'Are you going to use your own name?' I think I rather surprised him when I said that I was."

I asked them how their perspectives had changed over the years that they both had spent in theater.

"I don't think that it has really been because of the theater," said Massey. "In almost anything you might choose to do there's bound to be a change. That's just a matter of maturing."

"Yes, I'll have to agree," said Gabel. "I do think, however, that, as far as theatre is concerned, you sort of move from the avant guarde to a more conservative state."

I asked in what period of the theater they would most prefer to participate if they could make a choice.

"Any period which would give me a good part," said Massey, laughingly. "I really do think the theater was much better, though, before they added all these new mechanical trimmings."

"I think the English theater of around 1890 would be my choice," said Gabel. "Those days were much more exciting."

When asked if a man were evaluated by others in the theater as to his own personal values, Gabel replied, "Yes, very definitely, because the theater, more than any other strata in life, evaluates a man for his real qualities. It finds out what he is and what he has to give. In no sense does it judge him by wealth, social position or which side of the tracks he came from."

"The theater," said Massey, "is completely devoid of snobbery. The values you find there are of a very high order."

"How much of your personal life do you have outside of the theater," I asked.

"At times," said Gabel, quippingly, "too much. When you have a lot of time to yourself, it's a sign that you're out of work. Actually, I believe that it's not only valuable but extremely necessary to have several other activities."

"An actor who is only an actor," said Massey, "is sadly limiting himself. I think that in order to have a sense of proportion he ought to write or produce or direct or do anything but just act."

I asked what they thought of the playwrites in America today in comparison to those of other countries.

"I think that they are more productive than at any other time," claimed Massey. "This particular season on Broadway hasn't been too good, but overall, we're in fine shape." I asked what he thought of Williams. "Well, he's very gifted but he has his morbid tendencies. 'Streetcar' and 'Cat On A Hot Tin Roof' were pretty good productions, but I wish that just once he would write a play about healthy, rich people. No, not even rich, just healthy."

Gabel, replying to the effect that TV has had on theater, said, "I think it has helped the legitimate theater, but it's hurt and will continue to hurt the motion pictures. On the other hand, it has made the movie industry realize that they are going to have to leave the assembly line and put out quality shows. In this way, it has helped them."

"Yes, that's so," said Massey, "and I think that this has also made the legitimate theater stronger than ever. The whole idea behind theater hasn't changed; we are still there to enchant, using the term broadly, and to stimulate the imagination."

I couldn't have agreed more fully after seeing last Friday's production of "The Rivalry."

Symposium

ities and six fraternities have made donations thus far.

Goldsmith stated yesterday that the goal of the Symposium budget may run into excess of $5000. If several well-known speakers are engaged, it will probably come nearer a $6000 total, he said.

The main part of the budget will go for expesses in securing and entertaining speakers and paying their travel expenses to and from Chapel Hill.

"The fund-raising campaign is coming along as well as expected," Goldsmith stated "I am quite pleased with the interest being shown by fraternities. I hope they will all have made contributions to the Symposium before our campaign is finished."

COMMUNITY CHURCH

The Community Church Christmas service will be held Sunday at 11 a.m. in Hill Music Hall.

The choir, under the leadership of Gene Strassler, will present a program of Christmas music. Included in the program will be carols from several nations. Featured will be the "Fantasia on Christmas Carols" by Ralph Vaughan-Williams with Dr. Everett Hall as baritone soloist.

A brass ensemble will assist the choir and organist at the service and will start the prelude at 10:50 a.m. The public has been invited.

WHEN YOU'RE IN LOVE, GIVE BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS

Like love, a book is an intensely personal thing, yet it's delights are doubled when shared with the right person.

Books and love go together.

If old man cupid has stuck you one right where it hurts most, here are some books which will carry a bit more than the usual Christmas message to that Most Important Somebody.

Fireside Book of Love Songs — a big handsome colorful book, with words, music and sighs. A Bookshop Special $3.49

Love Poems and Sonnets of William Shakespeare. The Bard of Avon had a heart just as mushy as yours is — and pal, when he put it to words, the paper melted! Illustrated. $2.95

Sonnets from the Portuguese, by Elizabeth Barrett Browning. A very beautiful edition, illustrated in color, and almost worthy of that Out-of-this world Somebody you are going to give it to. $2.95

This is My Beloved, by Walter Benton. The most effective twosome reading of modern times An Elegant gift. $3.00

Love Poems and Love Letters, A beautiful little Peter Pauper Gift Edition, illustrated in color, and priced down where you can afford to give it to a smitten friend. $1.00

STUDENT PARTY

There will be a caucus of all Student Party legislators tonight at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge 1 of Graham Memorial.

All SP legislators have been urged to attend.

FOREIGN FILM

The Foreign Film Series will present "Time in the Sun," a Mexican-Russian film, and "Pennywhistle Blues," a South African film, tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

YACK PROOFS

Any student who has not yet examined his Yack proofs has until Friday at 6:30 p.m. to do so, according to Yack Editor Gene Whitehead. This will be the last time that proofs will be available for selection.

PARKING PLACES

Permanent parking places will be provided for students with cars when the Bell Tower Parking Lot opens after Christmas vacation.

Those who wish to reserve a parking place have been asked to register by the end of the week in the Dean of Students office. Registration is free and stickers will be given to each student for his car. Cars found in the lot without stickers will be towed away.

COED ROOMS

Applications for room-reservations for women students are now being received in the office of the dean of women.

All women students must make reservations sometime from today through Dec. 19, according to Dr. Katherine Carmichael, dean of women.

Dean Carmichael said any coed not making a reservation by Dec. 19 will be assumed not to be planning to attend the University during the spring semester or to be moving to a sorority house.

Coeds Remain

Delegate David Matthews said that having women on campus is a great aid to those students who might have difficulty in getting to Greensboro.

Matthews refuted the claim that W C is sufficient for the education of the state's women. He said that just last year one of the Greensboro institution's buildings partially collapsed.

Dean of Women Carmichael, who was present to defend the women, said that America is facing a manpower shortage, and that women are needed to furnish the additional reguired leadership.

Guest Mary Carlton thanked the delegates who thought coeds cause their dates, academic difficulties. She said it was a compliment to women for people to think that dating caused men to flunk out while their dates maintained good grades.

Delegate Coolidge was named by Critic Jess Stribling as the outstanding speaker of the evening.

Tar Babies Down Wilmington, 85-68

Donahue's 26 Is Tops; Doug Moe Scores 25

WILMINGTON—The Carolina Tar Babies chalked up their second win of the season here last night with an 85-68 victory over Wilmington Junior College. The victory leaves Coach Ken Rosemond's quint with a 2-1 mark, having beaten the High Point jayvees and losing to Duke last Saturday.

The Wilmington club threw up strong opposition at points during the first half and challenged the Tar Babies again the second period.

But paced by the scoring of Jim Donahue and Doug Moe, the Tar Babies were able to put down the Wilmington threat. Donahue dropped in 26 points for the Tar Babies and Moe, the teams leading scorer was good for 25. Pete Longenecker contributed 19 points to the cause.

Early Lead

Carolina grabbed a 4-2 lead early in the first half and never relinquished, despite several Wilmington threats. The Tar Babies left at half holding a 41-33 margin. The Wildcats came within four points several times in the final half but the Tar Babies pulled it out of the fire in the final ten minutes with a scoring spurt.

Freshman footballers Russ Hollers and Larry Beck made a brief appearance in the first half and started the second for Carolina. The two gridders worked well together, both scoring four points.

The Tar Babies will now rest until Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock when they go against Pheiffer in the second game of a double-header, the varsity opening against South Carolina in a regional television game.

The Scoring

Carolina—Moe, 25; Longenecker, 19; Donahue, 26; Hart, 3; Hollers, 4; Dunlap, 3; Shuford; Beck, 4; Hickey, 1; Baker.

Wilmington—Durner, 6; Paladini, 15; Parham, 14; Lutz, 18; Wells, 9; Mathias, 5; Gibson, Taylor 1.

Matmen Beat Wildcats, 16-12

DAVIDSON—Carolina's varsity wrestling team jumped onto the winning side of the ledger last night as it edged out the Davidson Wildcats, 16-12 in a close grappling duel.

It was the second win of the season for Coach Sam Barnes' charges against one defeat. They had previously beaten Washington and Lee and lost to Virginia.

Two Undefeated

The match also saw 137 ace Perrin Henderson gain his third straight win, as did Dave Atkinson at 177. Atkinson had previously wrestled in the heavyweight division. Prior to the match, Barnes inserted Gary Cooper at 147, thus moving J. W. Welborn, Jim Hoke and Atkinson up one weight. Bob Boyette was decisioned, 8-1 in the heavyweight division.

Curt Chaplain took his 123 event with Shacter on a pin at 2:30. Cooper lost a decision to Lampley of Davidson and Rhyne of Davidson decisioned Welborn, 8-4. Hoke lost his 167 event by decision to Westervelt, 5-0.

The grapplers, who have not had not had a home match this season, will meet a strong Maryland foe at College Park on Saturday. Their first home match will come on January 8 against N. C. State. The Maryland event will be the finale before the Christmas Holidays.

The Summary

123-Chaplain (C) pinned Shacter, 2:03. 130-Rhyne (C) pinned Hall, 3:19; 137-Henderson (C) decisioned Dee, 5-0; 147-Lampley (D) decisioned Cooper, 3-1; 157-Rhyne (D) decisioned Welborn, 8-1; 167-Westervelt decisioned Hoke, 5-0; 177-Atkinson (C) decisioned King, 3-1; Heavyweight—Fagg (D) decisioned Boyette, 8-1.

Soccer Team Should Be In Good Shape In '58

By JIM PURKS

Graduation usually takes a heavy toll from varsity teams. Not so for the 1958 soccer team.

Coach Marvin Allen will lose only four players from this year's team, three of them first-stringers.

Offensively, the team promises to be nothing short of a powerhouse. Boosted by several freshmen stars, the 1958 squad may be two men deep in each position on offsense.

Mike Thompson, this year's leading scorer, will lead the team's offensive power at the center forward position. Coach Allen said that Thompson is the best center forward he's ever coached.

Sophomore Promise

After the other positions, all of this year's starters will have to compete with some talented sophomores for a starting berth. Ted Smith, who played left inside, is the only player on the forward line taken by graduation.

On defense, Coach Allen will have a few more problems as he will lose three valuable men at the end of the year. Bill Blair, captain of this year's squad, will leave his right halfback position vacant, while Ted Youhanna will be a hard man to replace at left fullback. Both Blair and Youhanna were defensive stalwarts for Allen's 1937 eleven.

Reserve fullback Pete Hogaboom, who came off the bench to play a magnificent game in Carolina's 5-5 tie with Duke will also be lost to the team due to graduation.

Rattay Captain

Returning defensemen will be Dave Corkey, Hugh Goodman, Bob Borden, Bill Klein, and John Faucette. Some promising newcomers include Tate Robertson, Doug Fox, and Bob Quackenbusch.

At the vital goalie position, Jim Rattay, who was recently elected captain of the 1958 squad, will have some competition from Marvin Blount and Nick Zlotnicky for the starting berth.

With such a large aggregation of talented soccer players, the 1958 soccer team may prove to be a serious threat to Maryland, which has won the conference title every year, and should definitely improve on its 2-3-2 record of the 1957 season.

Ex-Coach Says NCAA Should Use Prevention

HOUSTON, Tex. Dec. 11 (AP) — Homer Norton, coach of the 1939 national championship football team at Texas A & M, said today the NCAA should take steps to prevent coaches from breaking long-term contracts while moving to other schools.

"If and when the NCAA wants to put a rule into effect forbidding schools to negotiate with a coach under contract to another school, I'll be the first to support it," Norton said in his football column published by the Houston Post. The column incuded a review of 1957 trends and a forecast of trends which may be expected in 1958.

Norton said 1957 saw a decided trend away from the straight-T and split-T, and that a swing to the multiple offense is indicated for 1958.

"In several games this fall you saw teams use an unbalanced line in one direction, with an end and a halfback spread opposite the line," he said. "More mousetrap plays were used, the quick kick besame popular again and the forward pass emerged from disrepute.

Clam Up

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (AP)-Five members of the Teamsters Union clammed up at a Senate inquiry today when asked about dynamitings, beatings and other labor terrorism in Tennessee and Mississippi.

Pleading the Fifth Amendment, they refused to answer hundreds of questions before the Senate Rackets Committee on the grounds that they might incriminate themselves.

Chairman McClellan (D-Ark) scornfully told one of the witnesses "You are nothing but a gang of thugs."

Payne Goes On Trial For Life In Alleged Brennan Murder

The fate of football star Buddy Payne will rest in the hands of 12 persons tonight with possibly Payne's life in the balance.

Payne is being tried for murder at 7:30 in Manning Hall courtroom in the annual Phi Alpha Delta mock trial.

The state will try to prove that Payne did with malice and aforethought kill and murder basketball hero Pete Brennan the night of Dec. 8. Brennan died 15 minutes after a fight with Payne in front of the Delta Delta sorority house.

Manning County Medical Examiner Maurice Canaday said Brennan's death was caused by knife wounds in the chest. Solicitor Jack Hudson has announced he will try to prove Payne intended to murder, though the murder weapon belonged to Brennan.

The jury is expected to decide Payne's fate by declaring one of five verdicts: guilty of first degree murder with the death penalty, guilty of first degree murder with a recommendation for mercy, guilty of second-degree murder, guilty of manslaughter or not guilty.

Payne's defense counsel Gaston Gage has revealed he will request a not guilty verdict.

In a surprise move yesterday Hudson and coed Gail Willingham issued a joint statement revealing that Payne accused Miss Willingham of changing her men with the seasons—in football season dating football players and in basketball season dating basketball players. The statement further accused Payne of calling Miss Willingham a "scheming, two-timing little hussy," two days before the murder.

The statement added that Payne called Miss Willingham on the afternoon of the murder and threatened to kill both her and Brennan if she dated Brennan again.

Sheriff Carl Churchill has previously said Payne and Brennan met in front of the sorority house, argued and started wrestling. At the time Churchhill said Brennan had a knife and Payne carried a pistol.

The pistol remained in Payne's pocket, Churchill said.

Judge Malcolm Seawell of Lumberton will preside over the court session tonight. Feeling is running high on the campus and a packed courtroom is expected.

Search Resumes

Norfolk, Va. Dec. 11 (AP)-A Coast Guard cutter and two airplanes today resumed search off the North Carolina coast for four commercial fishermen whosetrawler, the Sea Dog, washed ashore Saturday near Salvo, on Cape Hatteras Island.

The trawler's pilot house and starboard side from amidship to stern were gone. Her stern was smashed and winch cable was tangled in her single screw. Her life raft was missing.

Outstanding Lecturer To Discuss British Post-War Poetry Tonight

John Malcolm Brinnin, poet, author and professor at the University of Connecticut, will speak in Gerrard Hall tonight at 8 o'clock on the subject, "The New British Poets and the Angry Young Men."

Professor Brinnin's appearance, which is opened to the public, is being co-sponsored by the University's English Club and GMAB.

His lecture will deal with the post-war poetry of Great Britain which involves the "Angry Young Men," a group protesting against the established order of Britain's upper class.

Important members of this group to be considered are Kingsley Amis, Philip Larkin and John Osborne, whose play, "Look Back in Anger," is currently play on Broadway.

Professor Brinnin was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where his father was scenic artist for the theater repertory company of Sidney Toler, who later became known as Hollywood's Charlie Chan.

As an undergraduate at the University of Michigan he supported himself by opening a bookshop which became the center of campus literary activtity. Following his graduation in 1941, he did graduate work at Harvard.

Brinnin taught English at Vassar from 1942 to 1947. In the summer of 1947 he traveled over most of the United States with the French photographer, Henri-Cartier Bresson, with whom he published a number of articles. In 1948 he was for a semester Poet-in-Residence at Stephens College in Missouri.

J. M. BRINNIN
To Speak Here Tonight

As director of the Poery Center of the Young Women's and Young Men's Hebrew Association in New York City, he organized and conducted yearly series of reading appearances by outstanding poets of England and America.

In recent years Professor Brinnin has maintained a residence in Cambridge, Mass., while teaching at the University of Connecticut, overseeing the activities of the Poetery Center, lecturing at colleges and universities and making annual summer trips to London and Venice.

A poet in his own right, Professor Brinnin's volumes include "The Lincoln Lyrics" (1942), "No Arch, No Triumph" (1954), and "The Sorrows of Coldstone" (1951). Most recently he has written a biographical report, "Dylan Thomas in America" (1955.)

Professor Jacques Hardre Delivers Humanities Lecture On Surrealism

A Renaissance in art and literature heralded as "the most powerful and dynamic since the cultural revolution of the 16th Century" is now being ushered into the life of 20th Century mankind through the medium of Surrealism, it was declared Wednesday night by Prof. Jacques Hardre, delivering the Faculty Humanities Lecture at Carroly Hall.

"Surrealism has offered, and continues to offer, th most vital and meaningful attempt to reconcile Man with his environment," said Dr. Hardre, who is a member of the Department of French. "It thus fully merits being termed the Twentieth Century Renaissance," he asserted.

A study of man's dreams his illusions and his hallucinations can be "more revealing" in a study of man, than an examination of his rational thoughts, Dr. Hardre said.

The Surrealists, therefore, urge a study of the complete man—to probe into the unconscious mind, to delve beneath the surface and explore the hidden motives, he said.

Principles of Surrealism were identified in three parts: (1) The existence of a higher reality beyond that of everyday experience; (2) the necesity of attaining as much of the essence of this higher reality as possible, (3) the conviction that the only means to do so is not through Reason, which cuts a veil over reality, but through the subconscious.

It also was defined as a "pure psychic automatism" by which one proposes to express, either verbally, or by writing, or by any other means, the real functions of thought.

Surrealism is based on the belief in "the superior reality of certain hitherto neglected forms of association," from the philosophical viewpoint.

"The most sensational manifestations of Surrealism have been furnished by painters," said Hardre. "Surrealism is better know around the world through the art medium than through the literary medium. This is quite understandable since literary Surrealism is somewhat hard to translate from one language to another depending as it does upon the illogical arrangements of words, as well as upon the power of suggestion of words, quite apart from their rational meaning. A painting, however, speaks a universal language."

Surrealist painters do not attempt to portray the semblance of reality, the lecturer said. "Instead they try to paint secret behind the reality,' he explaned. "The Surrealist painter endeavors on his canvas to represent the virtue of the object rather than the object itself."

The Surrealists have hard row to hoe in overcoming the scorn of the average man. "It is an amusing paradox that teh man in the street is perfectly willing to let the scientist and philosopher pursue their researches as far as they like, push back the frontiers of the unknown and thus change our image of reality—bue he is stubbornly unwilling to see that change reflected in the creations of the contemporary artist or writer," Hardre continued.

"Tell the average man that, according to our physicists, there is no such thing as inert matter and he will shake his head wisely and walk on rejoicing," said Hardre. "But confront him with a sculpture by Henry Hoore which translates that knowledge into an art form and he will recoil in horor and protest that "That is not real."

The super-real is safe in a laboratory but it seems to be "terribly upsetting as subject matter for a work of art," said Hardre.

Dr. Hardre traced the recent beginnings of Surrealism from Dadaism, which he described as "an expression of anger and despair flet by young intellectuals after World War I. The Dadaists "made a clean break with common sense," he said. "The destructive actions prepared the way for those who were to be the leaders of Modern Art. When a new highway is to be built, the obstacles in its path must be split, crushed and poundde flat, or else the road bed will not be smooth."

Andre Breton was one of the Dada disciples who helped develop Surrealism, and he was influenced by the teachings of Sigmund Freud. In the movement, after it was developing from Dadaism to Surrealism were Louis Aragon, Pablo Picasso, Max Ernst and others.

They contended that Surrealism is not a denial of reality but rather a search for a super-reality.

The result was sometimes just hodegpodge. But sometimes there were "striking images." But automatic writing did not produce the looked-for results to the same extent as those achieved by painting and sculpture.

UNC Manhandles Furman, 91-74 For 35th Consecutive Cage Victory

Legislature Defeats SSL Bill At Meet

The Student Legislature defeated last night by a vote of 22 to 5 Charlie Gray's (UP) resolution to "condemn" the action of the State Student Legislature bill against bans on interracial marriage.

The legislature passed Pat Adams' (SP) bills to appropriate $28.75 to pay for printing Dean's List Certificates and to appropriate money to put "Peanuts" in the comic section of The Daily Tar Heel.

Tally Eddings' (SP) bill to "establish a committee to investigate the possibilities of having a street light placed between Lenoir Hall and Raleigh Road" was passed.

He was appointed chairman of the committee.

Ralph Cummings, chairman of the Traffic Advisory Committee, presented to the legislature a report concerned primarily with operation of the Bell Tower parking lot.

He said, "There is a possibility of losing some of these 560 spaces or having the right to maintain autos taken away from more students."

He made some recommendations concerning the operation of the lot. "The solution (of the parking problem) demands some action," he explained.

The introducer of the resolution "concerning the conduct of the State Student Legislature, Charlie Gray (UP), said of the resolution, " it is in the best interest of the entire student body."

He argued that the adverse comment of the state newspapers on the SSL's bill to remove the bans on interracial marriage" is reflecting back on us."

He said that the only purpose of his legislation was "to tell the public" that the SSL's bill concerning interracial marriage is not the opinion of the student body.

This bill, he claimed, had not been forgotten by the public.

Pat Adams (SP) said that the resoution had internal conflicts and that it had not been brought out how the UNC delegation to the SSL voted.

He claimed that the main action of the inter-marriage bill was to curtail "the abridgement of individual rights" (a quote from the text of the SSL bill).

Erwin Fuller (SP) explained that the adverse publicity had been the key to the adverse reaction against this marriage bill..

"The action was to grant freedom of choice and that alone," he explained. He said that the SSL bill did not give approval to interracial marriage but only gave the individual more freedom.

Arguing against Gray's resolution, Al Goldsmith (UP) said the matter "probably is a dead issue." He pointed out that the bill contained certain ambiguities.

Miss Ann Weeks Is Rose Of Delta Sig

Ann Weeks was crowned Rose of the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma Pi last wekend at the annual Rose of Delta Sig Dance held at the Hotel Washington Duke in Durham.

The dance was the climax of the Delta Sigma Pi fall pledge weekend. Festivities began Saturday afternoon with a cocktail party at the Delta Sig house.

From there the group moved to the Crystal Ballroom of the Washington Duke Hotel for a banquet with 200 brothers, guests, dates and wives attending. Jim Burroughs, president, presided and Don Adair, chaplain, gave the invocation.

Joe Kaminski, pledge master, awarded the outstanding pledge award to Max Holland, who was selected from the 41 pledges as the most outstanding. Dr. Claude E. George, faculty advisor of the Alpha Lambda chapter, concluded the banquet with a short address to the group.

Jimmy Johnson and his orchestra furnished the music for a formal dance which followed the banquet. The pledge class and their dates were presented and Miss Weeks was crowned at the intermission. The weekend was concluded with an informal party at the Delta Sig House.

The Alpha Lambda Chapter is the local chapter of the international fraternity of Delta Sigma Pi Business Fraternity. This fall's pledge class with 41 members is the largest class of initiates in the history of this chapter.

Reservations Due By Dec. 19 For Coed Rooms

Women students must make room reservations for the spring semester sometime before Dec. 19-Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women, said this week.

Dean Carmichael said it will be assumed that any coed not making reservations for a room will not be attending the University during the spring semester or will be moving to a sorority house.

The procedure for making room reservations is follows:

1) Pay the $10 room deposit at the Cashier's office in the basement of South Building and get a receipt for the payment:

2) Bring the receipt to the dean of women's office at 104-C South Building and fill out application for room reservation cards: and

3) Be sure the cards are marked paid.

Any coed who is uncertain of her plans for spring semester has been asked to discuss her problem with Miss Isabelle MacLeod, secretary in the dean of women's office.

Brennan Buckets 31 Points In Win

TAR HEELS GET JUMP

The Tar Heels went to work carefully hitting their first four shots from the floor and nine of their first 12 to pull ahead 19-8 after four minutes. Furman cut this margin to 20-16 in the next two minutes but that was as close as the Faladins were to get.

The shorter Paladins went eight minutes without getting a point and the Tar Heels took quick advantage to roll up a 20-point lead, 36-16, which they built to 57-36 by intermission.

FURMAN USES ZONE

In the second half Furman, playing a zone which the Tar Heels couldn't penetrate, cut the lead to 12 points at 49-61, then moments later reduced the margin to nine points, 65-74. At this point, North Carolina slowed down the action to draw the Paladins out of their zone. The strategy succeeded and the Tar Heels ran the margin back to the final 17 points.

ACCURATE SHOOTING

The Tar Heels had a torrid 53.5 field goal percentage in the first half and wound up with 48.1 for the game. Furman had its best percentage of the season, a respectable 47.3.

Dick Wright topped the Furman scoring with 20 points, Tom Conard had 19 and Byron Pinson 17. Tommy Kearns, who has led the Tar Heel scoring thus far, got 13 points.

Insurance Required For Cars

Fred Weaver, Dean of Student Affairs, reminds students who own cars that every owner of a self-propelled vehicle must have automobile liability insurance in order to obtain his 1958 license plates.

Students should understand the following stipulations which were enacted by the General Assembly at its last session concerning the Vehicle Financial Responsibility Act of 1957:

On and after Feb. 16, 1958, any owner of a motor vehicle registered in North Carolina who operates it or permits anyone else to do so without having in full force and effect the financial responsibility required by the 1957 Act is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Upon conviction, such a person may be punished by a fine of not less than $10, but not to exceed $50, or imprisonment not to exceed 30 days.

In order to obtain 1958 license plates for a vehicle, the owner must present a certificate of insurance unless he is able to deposit $11,000 in cash or securities, post a $15,000 bond secured by real Estate lien, or qualify as a self insurer (own more than 25 vehicles.)

This certificate of insurance is a single sheet of paper, yellow in color, 3 1-2" x 6" in size, called Form FS-1.

In order to obtain an FS-1 from an insurance company, an owner must have a policy with minimum limits of "5 10 and 5". The standard North Carolina automobile liability insurance policy will provide the necessary coverage.

FS-1's are provided by insurance companies, not the Department of Motor Vehicles. Owners who already have insurance will probably receive the necessary FS-1 before January 1, 1958.

In insurance coverage is terminated because of cancellation or failure to renew by the company, 15 days advance notice will be given the policy holder.

This Act affects every owner of a self-propelled motor vehicle to be registered in North Carolina during 1958. This excluded vehicles owned by the state, and its subdivisions the United States, or any common or contract carriers regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the North Carolina Utilities Commission. Trailers, not being self-propelled, are not affected.

Yule Classic To Be Read

A reading of Charles Dickens' classic, "A Chirstmas Carrl," will be presented Sunday by Samuel Selden, chairman of UNC's dramatic art department and director of the Carolina Playmakers. Student, faculty, townspeople and particularly children are invited to the performance, which will be presented at 4:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

The annual reading of the famous Christmas story of Scrooge and Tiny Tim was begun at Chapel Hill by Frederick H. Koch, founder of the Playmakers. During his lifetime "Prof" Koch gave 278 readings of the story all over America, including four performances at Town Hall in New York City.

Selden came to UNC in 1927 after experience as a member of the Yale Playcraftsmen and as a professional actor in New York.

He was a member of the old Provincetown Playhouse at the time Eugene O'Neill was beginning his career there.

Preceding the performance and forming interludes between the staves of the story, selected recordings of Christmas music will be played.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Save Dark, Roger Foushee, Charles Reyner, Robert Perry, John Bielefelt, Joel Dimmette, Paul Erhardt, Darwin Caffity, Robert Easley, William Allen, Dean Culbreth, Donald Warren and Arthur Fountain.

Orientation Advisors Needed For This Spring

Those who have served in the past as orientation counselors are urged to contact Jerry Oppenheimer, chairman, at 6031 or 9460 or Mary Jane Fisher at 8-9083.

Counselors are needed for the orientation progam Jan. 29 and 30, preceding the spring semester, according to Oppenheimer.

Second semester classes start Jan. 31.

IDC Court Hears Three Cases

The last official session of the IDC Court was held on Wednesday. There were three cases on the docket.

One student was found guilty of placing paper under the door of a dormitory room and setting fire to it. He was placed on indefinite probation by the court.

Another student was found guilty of spraying lighter fluid under the door of a dormitory room and setting fire to it, causing damage to the door and floor of the room. The court placed him on indefinite probation and assessed him a fine of $5.

In the third case a student was found guilty of lighting a firecracker in the dormitory. He was removed from the dormitory and placed on indefinite probation.

Students Attend NYU Debates

Four representatives of the UNC Student Debate Council will take part in New York University's Hall of Fame Tournament today and tomorow.

They are John C. Brooks, Greenville, and Thomas V. Long II, Thomasville, as the affirmative team; and Carl A. Barington Jr., Fayetteville, and William G. Phefferkorn, Winston-Salem, negative.

Accompanying the students to New York will be Richard P. Douthit, English instructor at UNC and advisor to the debate council. He will act as tournament judge.

States Need No 'Strings' Tied To Federal Funds

Two members of the Council of State—Commissioner of Agriculture L. Y. Ballentine and State Commissioner of Public Welfare Dr. Ellen Winston—told a House Intergovernmental Subcommittee Wednesday that they would oppose the dropping of federal aid to their departments.

"Frankly," Ballentine said, "I doubt that we can find any way back to the so-called 'good old days' of simple living and simplified government."

What Ballentine's and Dr. Winston's testimony before the subcommittee boiled down to, as one newspaper saidk is a doubt that local governments could take over full support of programs in which the federal government now participates.

We doubt it, too, because the federal government turns over huge sums of money annually for such operations as health and welfare departments. It would be a burden—almost a prohibitive burden—to lump all this responsibility on the individual states—without some changes.

But while sounding out the need for federal participation, many states resent the many "strings" that are attached to receipt of federal funds, feeling that their local departments know better than federal officials the areas of expenditure for which money should go.

The same is true when state funds are involved. Counties sometimes, like the state departments, resent "strings" fastened to receipt of state funds. They feel that county governments sometimes are more aware of their needs than an official sitting in Raleigh.

Perhaps that is true. But, nevertheless, local departments must pyramid to a state office if operations such as the health and welfare departments are to be performed efficiently and in proportion to the needs of individual counties.

We question, however, the advantages of federal participation when "strings" are attached to the government's allocations to individual states. And we disagree with some people who believe that "he who pays the fiddler may call the tune"—meaning, of course, that the federal government is the payer and the states are the fiddlers.

What we must come to realize is this: just who is the fiddler and who picks up the check? We submit that individual states, because their citizens contribute to the national coffers, are the governments which ultimately do the paying, anyway.

Perhaps it would be well to direct the flow of tax money for certain departmental oprations into the pockets of the state, instead of to the government in Washington. That way we would eliminate federal "strings" which could conceivably sometimes work against the advantages of state control.

Surely an official in Washington isn't as familiar with the needs of a backwoods North Carolina county as an official sitting over in Raleigh—strings or no strings.

And frankly, regardless of whether we can "find any way back to the so-called 'good old days' of simple living and simplified government," it would be a noble effort to attempt to do so if it would mean better administration on the local level.

Newspaper Notes Race Relations

Recent moves by two national organizations of substantial power and prestige are bringing to a head the most appalling era of racial prejudice to come out of the so-called non-prejudiced Northern colleges and universities in quite some time.

The two organizations—the national conventional of Theta Xi fraternity and the National Interfraternity Conference; the prejudice — race restrictions by fraternities.

In the case of Theta Xi, the fraternities national convention has condemned for pledging a Negro student; whereas the National Inter-fraternity Conference unanimously approved a report which referred to restrictive racial and religious clauses of fraternities as "a social right not to be confused with civil rights."

With the South now being looked upon by many people as an isolated kingdom still living in Civil War days, the Northerners who are so quick to criticize should take a look at their own prejudices. Reams of publicity have been given to the racial prejudices of the South and the hatred and misery that are its kin, while the North puts on its translucent cloak of righteousness.

College fraternities have always been held in a high regard by anyone who has had any association with them, but when a controversy like the one presently rising about racial prejudice appears, it makes a person begin to think about what a fraternity actually is.

Many constitutions prohibit the pledging of Negro students to the fraternity. In some places at certain times this decree may be applicable, but it will not work in all cases. Each chapter, while tied to the national by name and ritual, is still an individual with individual problems and individual tastes. So when a Southern bloc passes a recommendation against members of a race entering its fraternal grounds, this may be applicable to them but it is not so desirous in many places in the North.

If a chapter house wishes to bar Negroes or Jews or any other race or nationality from membership, that is the chapter house's business. So long as the individual retains the ideals and keeps the standards of the house, it should make little difference whether his skin is black or white.

If a permanent ruling is made barring a race from membership into a house, the following years may see a marked change in the ideas of the brothers. With this change and the turnover of brothers and their ideas may come a desire to allow the barred race entrance into the fraternity. Rulings on such things as race and religion in a fraternity system can only send the Greeks in one direction, and that is down.

'Pseudo' Label All-Embracing About Campus

By GAIL GODWIN

Every campus has its own little labeling system through which various individuals (and non-individuals) are appropriately categorized. This makes things extremely easy. When one learns the marks of a certain "type" one can immediately say, "Oh, there goes a . . ." and think no more of it.

In high school I remember that a "square" was one who didn't peg his pants to at least 13 inches at the ankle, and a "grind" was one who studied during study hall and handed in his homework the day it was due.

Among all the titles slapped on persons daily, I have heard one bantered about frequently in the past few months. It is given to people who wear glasses, people who are quiet, people who are not so quiet in voicing opinions people who wear unusual clothes, too many clothes, or not enough clothes, people who study in certain places, people who take philosophy courses and enjoy them, people who quote the popular philosophy courses and enjoy them, people who quote the popular philosophers of the present, and people engaged in any sort of creative work.

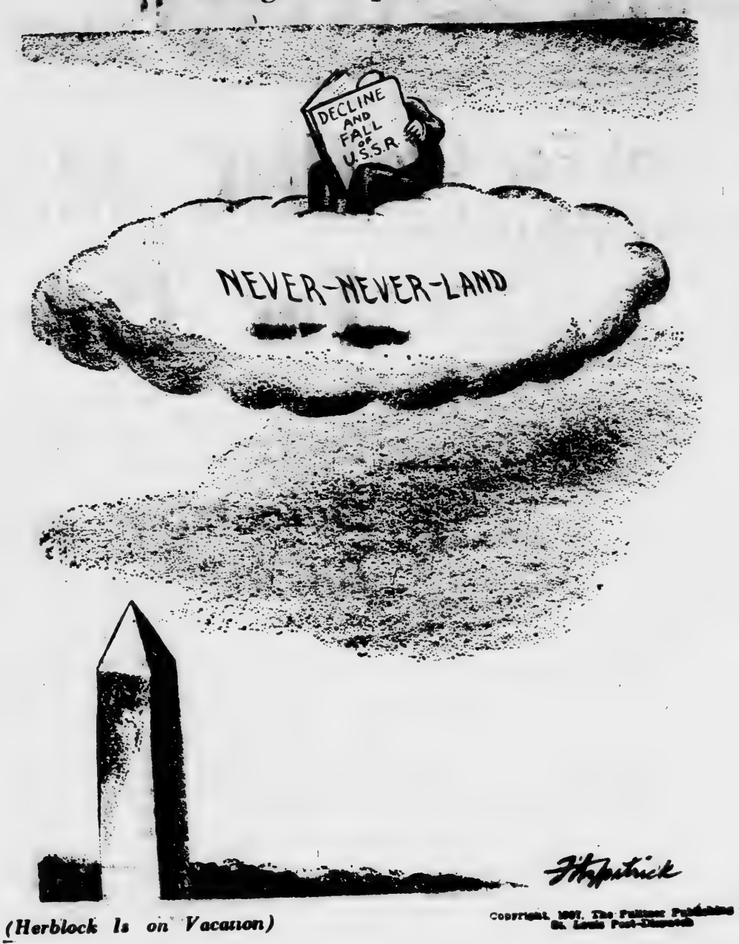
This all-embracing, all-encompassing label is the label of "pseudo."

I have had various "pseudos" pointed out to me, I have been pointed to, and I have pointed at "pseudos" in the popular fun of the day.

Still, I am at a loss as to what people mean by this label.

If you are different in any way, then you are one.

If you love to learn about things you don't already know, you are one.



If you don't say and do the very thing people are expected to do at certain times, then you are one.

If you act in plays, write stories, or paint pictures, then you are one.

Macaulay once observed that "Perhaps no person can be a poet or even can enjoy poetry without a certain unsoundness of mind." Was he labeling poets as unsound, "different" animals, or was he laughing at our little labeling system which rejects the uncommon?

Wait a minute! I just saw the strangest boy pass the window of the office. He was wearing a pink and green shirt and carrying an easel under one arm and an unabridged dictionary under the other. He was whistling Duke University's Alma Mater and quoting Albert Camus as he crossed the campus leading to the Old Well. I very definitely think he was one.

UNC Exchange Student Writes About Christmas In Germany

By DAVE DAVIS

Christmas in Germany, like Christmas in America, can be described as that season of the year during which the spirit of forgiveness and liberality is most manifest, and is further characterized by the re-uniting of families, the singing of Christmas carols, the exchanging of gifts, and the worshipping of the "Christkind" (the baby Jesus).

The celebration actually begins on the first Sunday in Advent. On this Sunday and each of the three following Sundays, a candle is lighted in the German household to remind the mof the approaching Christmas Day. On December 6th, St. Nikolaus Day, excited children leave their shoes outside the door, anticipating a gift of nuts, fruit, chocolate and cookies to be left there by the good St. Nikolaus.

The children's interest is also kept high by the "Weinachts—Kalendar," a large picture which is hidden by small windows, one of which is opened each day as Christmas draws near, until on Christmas day a complete picture of the Nativity is revealed. The children can be seen making gifts for their parents, and the greeting "Frohe Weinachten und ein Gutes Neues Jahr' (Merry Christmas and Happy New Year) echoes the feeling of good-will and generosity which is abroad in the land.

On Christmas Eve, after attending church in the afternoon, the entire family gathers for the Christmas dinner, usually Goose and all the trimmings, which the German housewife has spent days preparing. After dinner the "weinachtsgeschenke" (Christmas presents), which have been laid under a gaily decorated tree, are opened. The singing of Christmas carols is then carried on until late in the evening. At no another time during the year is the spirit of worship and brotherly love so high in Germany.

ABOUT GANS

"Out of the mouths of babes and 'students.'" (Matthew 21:16)

To The Editor:

In my personally revised edition of the Bible you will find the above. If Matthew had lived today and known some of our brilliant students I feel sure he would have substituted students for "sucklings" in Matthew 21:16.

Curtis Gans, in his "Education 11: Question of Control," has hit the nail on the head so many times and so much more ably than most oldsters could that I nominate him for North Carolina"s Hall of Fame. I also offer a prize of $25 to anyone who can lure Governor Hodges to debate the contents of this article with the author in open and public bout.

MARY B. GILSON

ON STEALING

To the Editor:

Recently, several articles have appeared in the DTH concerning Student Body President Sonny Evans' proposal to the administration on cut excuses. It would seem that our student leaders place so much confidence in the honor of the student body as to believe that they will be honorable in getting cuts excused.

Despite this naive confidence in the honor of our "Carolina Gentlemen," I must ask this question: If there is so much honor on this campus, why can't one leave a book or a raincoat or anything in the lobby of a well-known cafeteria on campus long enough to eat a meal without it being stolen?

This is not a case confined to me alone (I have only had two raincoats stolen from the lobby of the aforementioned establishment during the past three weeks), it is getting to be a widespread menace. I know of several other cases as well.

My concluding question — can there be honor among theives?

Skeptically yours,

Superstitions & Friday, The 13th

It is better to be born lucky than to be wise. So goes an old Irish proverb. And come this Friday, Dec. 13, as on other days, there will be those who will attempt to woo the elusive factor without which hard work does not pay off, prudence comes to nothing, and scientific logic fails before happy guesswork.

The term "luck" was originated to indicate the happenings of life that seem to be dependent on chance alone. In all the civilizations of the world, rules have grown up to insure that these happenings are favorable. The rules are called superstitions, and intelligent people do not believe them. Nevertheless, nearly every New York building is without a thirteenth floor.

He who plays it safe on Friday the thirteenth or at other times will get out of a bed that faces north and south from the right side, being careful not to sing before breakfast, but sneezing if he happens to feel like it. The north-south position of the bed stems from the ignorant belief that the poles of the earth exude beneficial magnetism. The right side is almost a sure thing for other endeavors besides bed-leaving; the left side (in latin, sinister) attracts malevolence. The injunction against singing illustrates the universal axiom that to appear overly joyous is to invite the attention of the Evil Eye. An accidental sneeze will ward off an evil spell for Zulus and other peoples, since it is believed that during a sneeze the soul escapes for a moment from the body.

The wary individual will hold the soap with which he washes so that it does not slip, for as the soap slips so does fortune slide out of his hands. If he dons any garment inside out he will leave it that way as a disguise against death — as effective now as in the times of the medieval plagues. He will put money in the right-hand pocket of a new jacket so that while he wears it he will never know want.

When the cautious man leaves the house, he must not walk straight away from the door. This policy had its start in the days when hosts vented their dislike of parting guests by stabbing them in the back. Once abroad, the day may be most profitable spent picking up pins or searching for horseshoes, rabbits' feet or four-leaf clover.

Pins are sharp, and like many sharp objects, can puncture evil. Horseshoes derive their power from their curved shape, which was the symbol of the path of the sun and of the sun Goddess Isis, who reigned over ancient Egypt. A rabbit is distinguished from all other creatures (except the less common greyhound and cheetah) by the fact that his rear feet hit the ground in front of his forefeet when he is running swiftly, which makes one of his feet something to be prized. A four-leaf clover may first have been looked over by the Druids, who venerated it because of its difference from the three-leafed varity. A human tongue tip was also once considered a lucky charm, especially in England, but today's seeker of fortune may do well to concentrate in other directions.

If a hankerchief is found on a street, however, it must not be touched; for handkerchiefs are for tears, and tears are for sorrow. Similarly, lovers must not give knives or scissors to one another, for sharp instruments will cut their romance in two. School children will pass their exams if they sleep with their books under their pillows. A woman who loses her wedding ring will also lose her husband. This law of like following like reaches a modern epitome in Illinois, where it is believed that anyone who saves $400 worth of postage stamps will inherit $400.

A bachelor may gain himself a wife and $10,000 a year by seizing the last piece of bread and butter on a plate. An unmarried woman will remain unmarried if she seizes the last piece of anything. This thought began in the time when men seized women, and it was unladylike for a woman to be aggressive. Hence a man who seized the last piece of bread and butter demonstrated the strength that would win him a rich and beautiful wife. A woman who performed the same feat shoed the brawn that would scare off potential suitors.

But no matter what pains are taken it is no matter to avert the Evil Eye. The crux of the matter is that the Evil Eye has patterns of behavior that have never been accurately defined, and signs and omens vary from one locality to the next with devastating inconsistency. A white horse, for instance, is generally lucky in the United States, excepting in New England; especially after dark. A dropped fork may mean that a love has been broken in two, or that a strange lady will be calling. Black cats may be the pets of sorcerers, or descendants of the god cats that flourished in Cleopatra's age. Spider webs bring prosperity to many houses, but not to homes in Louisiana. A robin may be giver of wishes, or else a harbinger of death.

The quandry grows with the approach of the New Year, for occurrences on New Year's day set the tone for the entire 12 months to follow. The Anglo-Saxons climb to their roofs to watch for the approach of fortune. Later, they cleared chimneys to make a path for good luck.

Now, in our country, the future of the New Year is often indicated by the first person to cross the threshold after mid-night. In many places, good luck is personafied by a dark man, and the attentive householder may therefore arrange to have an appropraitely-swarthy friend enter at the stroke of twelve. But, in other areas, dark hair is associated with the dark powers of evil, and only a blond visitor can guarantee prosperity.

Advocates for both parties base their conclusions on the interpretation of color, which has meaning whether connected with the head or anything else. Blonde or yellow may stand for cowardice and fear, or for gold and prosperity. There is no solution to the dilemna. Even the obvious device of inviting a woman to be January's first guest will not work. All facets of superstition are united in declaring that should the first visitor be a woman, whatever the color of hair, disaster is certain to follow.

SAYS SATELLITES WILL PROVE THEORIES

Self-Styled Physicist Returns To UNC

William Lee Ballinger, artist and self-styled physicist who predicted here last spring that an earth satellite, if launched into space, would not stay up, stated here yesterday that there is still "slight proof" of earth's is constant and its efects can be predicted.

Ballinger now predicts that any satellite sent into space at a distance of 5000 miles or more will eventually fall back to earth.

The satellite programs of the United States and Russia will eventually prove his theories, Ballinger says.

The artist, who will be in Chapel Hill for the remainder of the week drawing charactures in local fraternity houses, is on his way from a circuit of Ivy League schools to Florida, via the University of Virginia and UNC.

Ballinger explained his theory to a Daily Tar Heel reporter as follows:

"When a satellite is launched and in an orbit 5000 miles or so high, the gravitational pull on that from the sun and the moon will be roughly the same as when the satellite was still on earth, but the gravitatigonal pull from the earth of the satellite wil be considerably reduced.

"The pull from the moon will cause considerable erratic results," he continued. Because of the fast orbit of the moon—once every 27 and one-half days—its exact effects cannot be predicted but the sun's position with relation to the

"If the satellite is launched with a declination of 65 or more degrees from the equatorial plane, its gravitational pull upon the satellite would cause it to be pulled slowly toward the sun.

"It seems a reasonable assumption to predict that within a couple of weeks the satellite would be pulled toward the sun and away from its original orbit. It would be pulled away from the earth to where it would be orbiting around absolutely nothing."

Balliner illustrtaed the action of the satellite when pulled away from the earth by a hoop and volley ball. The satellite, he says, will move away from the earth "as you would pull a hoop around a volley ball and then away from it."

"Then as it slowed down, apparently the earth's gravitational pull would take over and pull it down to earth again," he concluded.

Ballinger debated his previous theory that a satellite would not stay up with members of the physics department here last spring. The discussion resulted in an unsucesful experiment aimed at proving Ballinger's theory.

Ballinger staed yesterday that he will not have time to discuss his most recent theory with University physicists. He will leave Chapel Hill over the weekend, he said.

SATELLITE THEORY — William Lee Ballinger explained his theory that an artificial satellite launched over 5000 miles high will eventually fall back to earth with the drawing above. The artist explains his theory as follows: "The long curving arrow shows how the gravity from the sun could possibly effect the flight of an artificial satellite if and when one is launched several thousand miles high. Ring (A) shows the first orbit. (B) the orbit after one week, (C) the orbit after two weeks and (D) the orbit after three weeks. travels a small orbit (E). Then the gravity from the earth takes ravels a small orbit (E). Then the gravity from the earth takes over and pulls the satellite back to earth as shown by the arrow pointing back down to earth."

DECK THE HALLS

The days grow short, the nights grow long, the north wind doth blow, and a light frost appears on the knees of coeds. Christmas is icumen in, and once more our keen young minds turn to the vexing problem of Christmas gifts.

Let us examine first the most vexing of all gift problems: What do you buy for the person who has everything? Well sir, when you encounter this dilemma, the best thing to do is seize it by the horns. Ask yourself this question: Does he truly have everything? Does he, for example, have a birthmark? A Mach number? A lacrosse net? An I-beam? An S-hook? A U-bolt? A T-square? A Primus stove?

(There is, incidentally, quite an interesting little story about how Primus came to invent the stove. Before Primus's invention, cooking was rather a hazardous occupation. People just built fires any old place—the floor, the closet, the escritoire—and often as not the whole house would go up in flames along with the dinner. Primus, a goose plucker of Frankfurt-am-Main, kept thinking there must be a more efficient way to cook. Finally, in a flash of inspiration, it came to him: Why not build a device to contain the fire and keep it from spreading?

...his mistake was in building it out of paper...

(Well sir, he built precisely such a device and named it after his beloved wife Stove. Primus's first Stove, it must be confessed, was less than a triumph; his mistake was in building it out of paper. The next Stove, built of wood, fared hardly better. Not until he made one out of metal could the Stove really be called a success.

(But even then the Stove was not entirely satisfactory. The trouble was that the Stove filled up with ashes and became useless after a few weeks. It remained for Primus's son Frederick to conquer that problem. He invented a mechanism to remove ashes from the bottom of the Stove and was thenceforth known to posterity as Frederick the Grate.)

But I digress. We were discussing Christmas gifts. This year, as every year, a popular gift is the smoking jacket. And what do the smoking jackets smoke? Why, Marlboro, of course—every man jacket of them. And why wouldn't they smoke Marlboros? Why wouldn't anybody with a taste bud in his head? You get such a lot to like in a Marlboro—filter . . . flavor . . . flip-top box.

Here is no filter to hollow the cheeks and bug the eyeballs; here is a filter that draws nice and easy. Here is no flavor to pale and pall; here is a flavor ever fresh, ever zestful. Here is no flimsy pack to crumble and shred its precious cargo; here is a sturdy box that keeps each cigarette plump and pristine.

Speaking of smoking, the year's most unusual gift item is a brand-new cigarette lighter that never needs refilling. You are scoffing. You are saying you have heard such claims before. But it's true, I promise you. This new lighter never, never needs refilling! The fuel supply lasts forever.

Of course, there are certain disadvantages. For one thing, the lighter is rather bulky—170 feet long and 17 stories high.

But look on the bright side: As the fuel runs out you can rent rooms in it.

© 1957, Max

Good to give, good to receive, at Christmas or any other time is a carton of filter-tip Marlboros, whose makers take pleasure in bringing you this column throughout the year.

Covering The University Campus

GRADUATE CLUB

An informal Graduate Club Dance will be held tonight in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial from 8 a.m. to twelve o'clock.

Admission is free.

The Graduate Club has urged all graduate students, faculty members and UNC employees to attend—with or without dates.

IDC-IWA

The co-sponsored informal IDC-IWA Dance will be held tomorrow night from eight o'clock to twelve o'clock in the basement of Cobb Dormitory.

The combo of Bobby Haas will provide music.

Rudy Edwards, social co-chairman of IDC, has urged all students to attend. Admission is free.

CANTERBURY CLUB

The Canterbury Club is sponsoring a dance at the Episcopal Parish House on Dec. 16 from 8 to 10:45 p.m.

The public is invited. Those attending have been asked to bring one or two cans of food to put in Christmas boxes for the welfare program.

CHRISTMAS CONCERT

A concert of Christmas music will be presented by the Sanctuary Choir and the Junior Choir at the United Congregational Christian Church on Sunday at 5 o'clock p.m.

The Junior Choir, directed by Mrs. Harvey L. Carnes, wil lead a candlelight procession to open the service. Worshipers entering the church will leave at the altar white-wrapped gifts of food for the community Empty Stocking Fund.

The Sanctuary Choir, directed by William G. Stoser, will offer selections by Bach, Handel and Mendelssohn and several old-world carols. Among the soloists will be Rev. Samuel Magill, baritone; Rebecca Carnes, soprano; Roy Weaver, tenor; Clyde Umphlett, tenor; Adel Morris, soprano and Doris Weaver mezzo soprano.

OPERA

The Extension Division's weekly operatic broadcast, "Let's Listen to Opera," will present for its Christmas show Hector Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ" (The Infant Christ) at 8 o'clock tonight over WUNC.

The plot comes from the Second Chapter of St. Matthew which deals with the flight of the Holy Family into Egypt to escape Herod's order to slay all male childder two years of age.

National Jaycee Veep Speaks To Delta Sigs

The primary aims of the Jaycees are community betterment and leadership training, Bob Cox, national vice-president of the Jaycees, told Alpha Lambda Chapter of the International Fraternity of Delta Sigma Pi Wednesday night.

For success in any endeavor, Cox said, "enthusiasm is contagious." "Do not become so wrapped up in what you are doing that you cannot see where you are going. You must think big if you are to succeed," he stated.

Expressing concern over the attitudes of people in this country, he said, 'We must always be proud of what we have-proud of our heritage. We should meditate, think of our origin, of the Declaration of Independence ,of the Consitution and of their meanings."

"If we are to have a really strong country," he said, "we must make it strong at the base, the average people, not at the top where our leaders are."

A 1948 graduate of UNC, Cox was active in football and other activities while at Carolina. A partner in a local clothing store, Cox began his executive work with the Jaycees as president of the Chapel Hill organization. He served as president of the North Carolina Jaycees before becoming vice-president of the national organization, the position which he now holds.

Guests present at Wednesday's meeting included Carl Fisher, Clyde Carter and Dr. Claude S. George, faculty advisor to the local Delta Sigma Pi chapter.

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Tatum Not Even Considering Another Job

In his own words, football mentor Jim Tatum is "not even considering another job."

Tatum, whose name springs up everytime a new coaching position is open, was referring specifically to the recent news release that he was high on the list for possible successors to Hugh Devore, the present coach of the Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League.

"All I know about the rumor," Tatum commented, "is what I have read in the papers. I am not even considering another job. My only object is to work hard to improve the situation here next season."

Thus another "Tatum is leaving" rumor has been squelched by the man who just completed his second season at Carolina with a fine 6-4 record.

Hathaway And Blazer Are Elected Co-Captains

While we're on the subject of Carolina football, Janoirs Curt Hathaway and Phil Blazer have been elected co-captains of the 1958 team.

Hathaway, the Tar Heel's number two quarterback until he broke his arm against South Carolina in the eighth game of the season, hails from Norfolk, Va. He'll be in a cast until February, but the talented Tar Heel veteran will be ready to go soon after spring practice rolls around in March.

Blazer is a 6'1, 225 tackle from Whitaker, Pa. whose performance with the Tar Heels this season won him All-Atlantic Coast Conference recognition and national honorable mention. Blazer is expected to bolster the Tar Heels at a spot where they will be a little weak next season.

The Tar Heels have made a good choice in these two fine boys.

Champs Prepare For Strong Intersectional Foes

This has been a busy week for the national basketball champions and the home folks will get another chance to watch them on television Saturday afternoon. The Tar Heels have met George Washington and Furman thus far and Saturday afternoon it will be South Carolina here.

After the South Carolina game, the Tar Heels will begin to experience the pressure of intersectional rivalry and this is what Tar Heel followers have been waiting to see. They want to see how the sophomores who promise to play such a large role this season will fair when they run up against powerful teams outside the conference.

The first test comes next Friday when the McGuiremen go against Minnesota in the first round of the Kentucky Classic. That affair will last for two days. Then in Raleigh, the Tar Heels will defend their Dixie Classic title, Dec. 26-28. This should be another fine holiday extravangaza for cage fans in the area and there is a good chance that Big Four dominance will be broken this year as several fine outside teams will participate in the tourney.

Should the Tar Heels get through until January 1 in good shape, they can start taking a long range look at their chances of repeating as NCAA champions.

Frosh Footballers Now Play Basketball

A look at the Carolina freshman basketball lineup against Wilmington Junior College Wednesday night reiterates the fact that athletes are just about as versatile as ever.

A fellow named Bock and another named Hollers each had four points for the Tar Babies. The significance is that Larry Bock and Russ Hollers were a couple of football stars for the Carolina freshman this fall and with just a couple of weeks practice, have already gotten the eye for the old basket.

Both of these boys were big name high school stars and both are expected to see quite a bit of action with the Tar Babies as the season progresses.

Lotz Hopes To Be Ready By Kentucky Classics

Carolina's fine track star, Dave Scurlock has been invited to participate in the Sugar Bowl indoor games starting Dec. 29.

Everybody at Duke is preparing for the Blue Devils trip to the Orange Bowl New Year's Day. Sports Publicist Ted Mann has recently released a special Orange Bowl brochure with all the pertinent facts about the Blue Devils.

Danny Lotz, Carolina's junior basketball forward who sustained a broken foot against Clemson last Saturday, is hoping that he'll be recovered in time to make the trip with the Tar Heels to Lexington, Ky. for the Kentucky Classic next week. Danny figures his chances of playing by then are "just fair."

Season book sales for the Dixie Classics will continue at the Reynolds Coliseum Box Office until Dec. 15. There are still plenty of tickets available, although all the duecats on the sides have been sold.

Big Weekend On Tap

The mad Christmas rush is not centered just on downtown shopping in Chapel Hill. There's a rash of last minute activity on the sports front at Carolina too and Saturday is the biggest day so far this fall for Tar Heel teams.

Most of the interest will be centered on the national cage champion's basketball tilt with South Carolina at two o'clock in Woollen Gym. For the second straight week, the Tar Heel will get regional television coverage.

But four other Carolina teams will be in action Saturday, two in Chapel Hill and two away.

The freshman basketball team will meet the Pheiffer Junior College freshmen following the varsity game at four o'clock. The other home activity is a freshman wrestling match between Carolina and Pheiffer.

Elsewhere, the crack Carolina swim team goes into its third regular season match against the University of South Carolina at Columbia, S. C. and the varsity wrestling team engages in a grappling match wtih a tough Maryland club at College Park.

Dick Kepley And Lee Shaffer

Much Is Riding On Two Tar Heel Sophs

By BOB MYERS

It takes big men to make little men big and it has taken both to make Carolina's Tar Heels the number one basketball team in the nation.

And whether the Tar Heels will remain kings of the collegiate courts with a bevy of potenial behemoths gunning for them in every outing may depend largely on two big sophomores. Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley.

The young giants. 6-9 Dick and 6-7 Lee donned varsity uniforms for the first time as Carolina downed Clemson 79-55 and wrapped up their 33rd victory on a string.

And while the little man, Tommy Kearns was throwing in 32 points in All-America fashion, Coach Frank McGuire was watching Shaffer and Kepley out of the corner of his anxious eyes. They had stepped into the slots left vacant by names synonomous with Tar Heels basketball, Lennie Rosenbluth and the injured Joe Quigg.

Tallest Men

How well will the two tallest men now left in action on the Carolina club transend the wide gap between leading the freshman team and stepping into a varsity uniform for starting chores?

The play of Shaffer, handsome blonde, 18-year old from Pittsburgh, and Kepley, dark-haired 20-year old Rebel pivot man from Raonoke, Va., drew encouraging word from McGuire after the opener, along with 6-5 Ray Stanley and 6-1 Harvey Salz.

Shaffer hit two out of six field goals, threw in two free tosses and got six rebounds, one less than veterans Pete Brennan, but the hustling forward didn't think his effort was enough.

First Game Jitters

"I put on that new uniform, number 12 which I wore in high school at Baldwin in Pittsburgh. The uniform stood out from all the rest, which had sweated throught 32 victories, and when I ran out on the floor I felt helpless," Shaffer said.

It was his way of saying an initial varsity start before 6,500 screaming students and partisan fans and TV cameras gave him a slight case of the jitters. But Shaffer is cocky enough to be confident and he had been working tirelessly for a starting spot.

It was much the same story for Kepley, who sank one field goal in three tries, dropped all four free throws attempted and grabbed five rebounds from the boards. Out of the 28 rebounds shared by Carolina in the opener, the Kepley-Shaffer combo got 11.

Versatile Duo

Both men have fine offensive as well as defensive potential. Although they attempted only nine shots from the floor, they are expected to loosen up with a little seasoning.

Shaffer scored 463 points, an average of 22.1 per game as a freshman to lead the team. He's capable of hitting from any spot on the floor and fancies a one-handed push shot.

Kepley was third in scoring as a freshman, tallying 320, an average of 15.2. Kepley brought down 320 rebounds, second to York Larese, sophomore sensation whose knee operation may keep him out of the varsity lineup for the season.

McGuire is even more concerned about the progress of Shaffer and Kepley since injuries have cropped up like bananas. The third big man, 6'7" Junior Danny Lotz will be out of action for "several weeks" because of a foot injury.

That means an extra burden for a pair of talented aspirants on a team playing under the weight of a 33-game winning streak.

Former Maravich Pupil

Lee Shaffer, 6-7 sophomore forward on the Carolina basketball team, is a former pupil of Coach Press Maravich of Clemson College. Shaffer played for Maravich coached teams two years at Baldwin High School in Pittsburgh. Starting for the Tar Heels against Clemson in the opener which Carolina won 79-55 brought back many memories to the talented, 18-year old Shaffer.

Varsity, Frosh Mermen Swim At Clemson Today

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Carolina varsity and freshman swimming teams go after their second victories of the season this afternoon when they take on the Clemson Tigers at Clemson, S. C.

Both of the teams won their opening meets. The varsity trimmed East Carolina College 61-23 while the Tar Babies whipped Staunton Military Academy 52-33.

Coach Pat Earley is hoping for repeat performances from Bill Roth, Paul Wachendorfer, Walter Rose, and Telfair Mahaffy. All of these boys took first places in their events in the opening meet against East Carolina. The 400 Medley relay team, which won in 4:20 last Monday, should do equally as well today.

Schiffman High

Tony Schiffman, high scorer in the first meet, will lead the team entry in the 220 and 440 yard freestyles.

The freshman team, which set two pool records in stopping Staunton, will again be led by Randy Dodson and Harry Bloom. Dodson, whose speciality is the butterfly, will try to improve on his record time of 1:01.6 for the 100 yard event.

The Tar Babies, who won seven of the ten events in their opener, will have Joe Kaulkarst, Vincent Simmton, and Bob Hunter to back up Bloom and Dodson. Dick Nichols, who did not swim against SMA will bolster the tea mentry in the freestyle.

National Champs Come Home Today For ACC Battle With South Carolina

Carolina Goes After 36th Straight Win

By BILL KING

The finale of a three-game week for the national basketball champs gets underway at 2 o'clock in Woollen Gym this afternoon as the Carolina Tar Heels encounter a formidable South Carolina aggregate.

A capacity crowd of about 6,500 plus a large regional television audience is expected to view the battle between the two clubs which competed in the Atlantic Coast Conference finals in Raleigh last March.

The Tar Heels are seeking win number 36 in a row as they go against their Carolina counter-part and all pre-game speculation tabs it a prospectively thrilling duel.

Furman Last Victim

The North Carolinians made it 35 straight in Charlotte Thursday night with a 91-74 victory over Furman College in a surprisingly rugged battle.

Coach Frank Johnson's Gamecocks are led by high scoring Ray (Cookie) Pericola who is averaging over 21 points per game. Fred Lentz, a veteran center and veteran forward Dick Hoffman are the other two men who contributed greatly to the Gamecock's 17-12 record a year ago.

Thus far this season, the Gamecocks have beaten Georgia (95-57) and Georgia Tech (70-64) and lost to N. C. State (81-68).

The Tar Heel's who continue to feel the pressure of their fabulous winning streak, will get a few days rest after this contest. They go against Minnesota in the first round of the Kentucky Classics in Lexington, Ky. Friday.

Usual Starters

Shaffer has labeled himself a real comer in the Tar Heel's last two games, scoring 20 points against George Washington and dropping in 28 against Furman. Kearns fell off from his usual scoring consistency against Furman getting but 13 points. This gives him a total of 69 points for the season. Brennan's 31 against Furman was his single high for the season.

S. C. Has Reserves

McGuire will probably continue to substitute freely in an effort to come up with his best combination. Thus far, he has used Harvey Salz, Ray Stanley, Grey Poole Roy Searcy and John Crotty effectively in relief. Forward Lanny Lotz will miss today's action as he continues to recover from a broken foot suffered against Clemson in the opener last season.

The South Carolina lineup is completed with 6-3 junior Dick Prater and 6-5 sophomore forward Bury Hudson in addition to Hoffman, Pericola and Letz. Johnson also has several good reserves which are due to see plenty of action. Guard Walt Hudson, center Larry Dial and forward Bury Hudson are all capable Gamecock replacements.

Glee Club To Perform At SC Game

The UNC Men's Glee Club will perform at half time today at the Carolina-South Carolina basketball game for its second regional television performance.

The return engagement of the 60-voiced club is due to a large appreciative response from people of many corners of North Carolina and neighboring states who saw the Clemson-UNC ball game on television last Saturday.

Dr. Joel Carter, director of the organization, stated that the group will perform in the same manner as last Saturday. They will be seated in a body in the stands. From there they will march onto the court at half-time and sing four songs before the regional TV audience and the several thousand spectators expected for the game.

Songs to be sung include:

"Aye Zigga Zoomba;" "Carolina Fight Song," often dubbed the "Victory March;" "To Thee We Sing," a secular number, and "Carolina Loyalty Song." The traditional "Hark The Sound" will immediately follow the last verse of "Carolina Loyalty Song." Cheerleader Black will lead the students in joining the Glee Club in singing the chorus of the alma mater.

An announcement over the public address system will be made at half-time introducing the Glee Club as it parades onto the court.

Seating Plans For Cage Tilts Is Announced

The reserved seats policy, which was used so effectively last year to accommodate fans at some Carolina home basketball games, will be employed again this year at four home tilts.

The first reserved seats game will be played on Jan. 4 against Wake Forest. Students, faculty members and employees of the University must exchange their athletic passbooks for specific seating.

A priority for the Wake Forest game will be given to persons whose last names start with the letter A-M. Distribution to this group will be made on Dec. 16, 17, 18. Any tickets remaining after 4:30 p.m. on Dec. 18 will be distributed the following day on a first come first serve basis.

A similar procedure will precede the N. C. State game on Jan. 15, only this time the persons whose last names start with N-Z will have the priority. Other games which involve this program will be the Duke game on Feb. 8 and the Maryland game on Feb. 22.

Episcopal Students Will Present Modern Morality Play This Sunday

By GAIL GODWIN

The Episcopal Student Congregation will present "The House by the Stable," a Charles Williams modern morality play, at 7 p.m. Sunday in the Chancel of the Chapel of the Cross.

William White will portray the lead role as "Man," representing every man whose head is turned by Pride.

Gambling for White's soul will be Amanda Meiggs who stars opposite him as "Pride," and her brother "Hell," who is played by Darwin Solomon.

The theme of Williams' play is the basic sin of man—Pride. Williams develops the idea that the only way Pride can be conquered and man saved is through divine intervention.

Thus, while White and Solomon are sitting around gambling for White's soul, the Holy Couple (played by Ann Dunlap and Peter Reichle) arrives. They ask "Man" for shelter. Not wishing to send the couple back out into the cold, White hastily instructs his servant Gabriel (played by Bill Kane) to "Go put them in the stable."

What follows is a dramatic development of the Christmas theme. Pride and Hell are thrown out of Man's house following an intervening event.

Charles Williams was a major impetus in the English Religious Drama Movement before his death a few years ago.

As a poet, Willimas has been recognized as "difficult" because his imagination is highly intellectual.

E. Martin Brown, renowned drama critic, gives credit to Williams as "a Christian thinker, both acute and deep."

"Williams does in fact what Shaw has done for a larger public, and does it in austere ways as well as Shaw," cites Brown.

Bob Insko, student chaplain at the Chapel of the Cross became interested in Williams while he was visiting in England this summer. He brought several plays back and "The House by the Stable" was selected as an ideal Christmas project.

Dean Luxon Named To Sigma Delta Chi Board

Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, dean of the School of Journalism, has been appointed to a seven-man board to make a special report on membership eligibility for Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity.

Bernard Kilgore, president of the Wall Street Journal, is chairman of the committee which is holding its first meeting in Chicago December 16. Delegates at the 1957 national convention directed that the committee be established and that its report be published in the Quill, monthly magazine of the fraternity, at least three months prior to the November 1958 convention in San Diego.

U P Representative May Lose His Seat

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Unless excused by the rules committee one UP representative will possibly lose his seat in the Student Legislature because of action taken last Thursday night.

Jack Lawing (UP) asked for a roll call vote on Tally Eddings' (SP) bill concerning a street light to be placed between Lenoir Hall and Raleigh Road.

This action was taken after one SP and 12 UP representatives, who had been present earlier for the debate concerning the SSL resolution, had left the hall.

The representative could not be located for comment nor could Student Legislature Speaker Don Furtado.

A representative, according to the Student Legislature's by-laws, must be present for every roll call vote, or else he is counted absent for the whole session.

A legislator is granted one unexcused absence from each assembly (it lasts from one general election to the next). If he takes more than one unexcused cut, he can be unseated.

Charlie Gray's (UP) resolution to "condemn" the action of the State Student Legislature provoked the largest number of Student Legislators to speak so far during the twenty-fourth session.

Gray, the introducer of this resolution which was debated Thursday night, argued that the adverse comment in the state newspapers on the SSL resolution concerning inter-racial marriage "is reflecting back on us."

Pat Adams (SP) claimed that the resolution had internal conflicts and that the main action of the SSL resolution was to curtail "the abridgement of individual rights" (from the text of the SSL resolution).

Al Goldsmith (UP) claimed the matter "probably is a dead issue" and that Gray's resolution contained certain ambiguities.

"The action was to grant freedom of choice and that alone," explained Erwin Fuller (SP) with regards to the SSL resolution.

Dick Robinson (UP) said the issue had been "grossly misconstrued and that he thought that Gray's resolution was "basically sound."

He claimed that the people of North Carolina were not aware that the SSL is not representative of the students.

The issue, he claimed, was not whether the Student Legislature liked the SSL resolution but whether the matter would be clear for the state.

Gray, speaking again, said that he wanted to absolve the UNC Student Body from the responsibility of having passed this SSL legisltaion.

He quoted Representative Fuller as having said the SSL action had "blackened our name." Many people he claimed, were not fully acquainted with the SSL resolution.

He said he agreed with the moral reasoning behind the SSL resolution: however, he claimed the public was not fully acquainted with the particulars of the controversy and that the issue was still alive in their minds.

Harold O'Tuel claimed that the only logical parts of Gray's resolution were the fourth whereas clause which said the SSL had passed the resolution and the second article which said the SSL could not claim to be truly representative.

Payne Not Guilty

Buddy Payne was found not guilty last night of murdering Pete Brennan in the annual Phi Alpha Delta Mock Trial.

Foreman Frank Berry delivered the verdict after the jury had deliberated forty minutes.

With its verdict the jury declared that the killing of Brennan was done without malice, premeditation nor deliberation.

Chief Defense Counsel Gaston Gage and Payne appeared overjoyed at the verdict.

Racing With The Moon?

Steering by heavenly bodies is fine for sailors, but it left three noted astronomers at sea when they tried it Thursday night on a Tar Heel highway.

The distinguished party was returning northward after a Chapel Hill visit. A. F. Jenzano, director of the Morehead Planetarium, directed them to the proper highway and saw them off.

Moments later, Jenzano observed the car turn around and head southward. He stopped it.

"We looked at the moon and found out we were going in the wrong direction," the party informed Jenzano.

"Steer by the road signs instead of the moon," advised Jenzano. "The men who laid off the highway's weren't astronomers."

The visitors included J. M. Chamberlain, chairman of the American Museum of Natural History and director of Hayden Planetarium in New York; Dr. Thomas D. Nicholson, astronomer for the planetarium; and John Thomas, chief technician. They came to Chapel Hill for a viewing of the "Star of Bethlehem" show at the Morehead Planetarium.

Yule Program Slated Sunday

Christmas will be celebrated tomorrow night in a festive and international way when GMAB presents its "Christmas Around the World" program in Graham Memorial at 8:15.

The program will present the Chrismas songs, dances, and customs of countries throughout the world through a Christmas pageant. After the pageant there will be an open house in the television room of Graham Memorial.

Featured in the pageant will be the Men's Glee Club and numerous students from foreign countries. The following countries will be represented: France, Spain, Uruguay, England, Germany, Sweden, Puerto Rico and the United States.

According to Betty Huffman and Mary Moore Mason, co-chairmen of the pageant, the purpose of the program is "to make us feel the true spirit of Christmas in an international sense through seeing and learning about the fascinating Christmas customs throughout the Christian world."

Empty Stocking Fund Seeks Cash Donations

The Empty Stocking Fund is in need of cash donations according to Mrs. Mark Hanna, chairman of the fund.

Mrs. Hanna said the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill, sponsor of the Empty Stocking Fund, is operating a booth on Franklin street to collect any donations.

The Empty Stocking Fund is designed to take care of needy families in Orange County during Christmas.

Mrs. Hanna reminded organizations and persons who have adopted families that boxes for the families should be delivered to the bus garages behind Sinclair Service Station in Glen Lennox from 1 to 5 p. m. now through Saturday.

Campus Chest Drive Plans Now Underway

The Campus Chest Drive is scheduled for Feb. 22-28 according to Libby McCord and Gene Parker, Campus Chest Committee leaders.

The proceeds from this year's annual drive will go to organizations which supply aid to students in need.

The committee will announce further details of the 1958 Campus Chest Drive at a later date.

Note To NATO: Reaffirm Unity Against Russians

Nations of the free world now sending delegates to the giant NATO meeting in Paris must once again reaffirm their unity despite pleas and threats of Russia to the West.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization must tell the Kremlin once and for all that it will maintain a strong alliance against the Russian might even if annihilation must come from the defensive barrier thrown around the Kremlin.

Russia has shown the world, by her recent displays of earth satellites and ICBM's, that she has far outstripped technological development of the United States. But she has yet to prove that her military might outstretches the power-packed arm of NATO.

With the coming of the big Paris meeting the Kremlin has used all the propoganda and political maneuvering at her command to incite a cleavage between members of the Western alliance. She has taken advantage of the split over Suez. French anger at Anglo-American arms shipments to Tunisia and a host of minor grievances of NATO members against the United States.

But by these very actions Russia has admitted her own fear of the military unity of the West, making a last-ditch effort to destroy that one organization in which Europe is united in common defense.

To a degree Russia's pleas and threats have been successful. Franco has said he doesn't want U. S. air bases in Spain if they will bring a defenseless war to his people. France, remembering bombardments of the last two wars, fears her role in a war in which Russia would be supreme would lead once again to mass bloodshed and destruction in that country. Again and again the closness of European nations to the Russian threat has placed a grave responsibility on the United States.

In that responsibility we have faltered. Our much-publicized satellite fell hopelessly to the ground. Our lagging missile program has been exposed for the world to see. We have strained to put commercial jet aircraft into the skies while Russia is making daily flights in jet-propelled planes. Our total capitalistic science program seemingly has fallen far behind Russian advancements.

These are the factors to which NATO nations will point in Paris. And they will wonder: Why should we expose ourselves to the communist might if there are no weapons to repel it? We in America don't quite understand the plight of the Western European nations. We have not experienced modern warfare on the homefront.

What NATO must do is reaffirm its trust in Western leadership and then fight back endlessly to recapture the military lead which only recently has been threatened by Russia. The Kremlin still would have a man-sized job thrust upon it in warfare against a 15-nation unity; that job will become even more difficult if NATO boldly meets its challenge and refuses to back down from Russian threats.

Today Russia is ringed by a unified military force which remains a fear to the Kremlin even if the weapons of that unity are, as the Reds call them, obsolete. But there is something modern about U. S. planes flying over Britain with live hydrogen bombs and short-range missiles pointed north and east toward the Kremlin from the NATO nations.

In fact, those weapons are far more deadly than Sputniks and Muttniks orbiting the earth. The proximity of them to Russia makes them as impressive as the long range ballistic missiles which the Reds can aim across the ocean.

Nothing Is Safe Bank Robbers Find

An out-of-state subscriber to a North Carolina newspaper would think, by a flood of recent bank robbery accounts, that Tar Heelia is as wild and wooly as the west a century ago.

A holdup in Fletcher Wednesday, which netted near $2,000 for a 23-year-old Brevard man, brought to nine the number of bank robberies in North Carolina this year. All but one have been solved.

The robberies have occurred in virtually all areas of the state: From Asheville on July 22; to Raleigh on March 18; to Apex on July 12; and so on.

We don't know the reason for this latest violation of the federal bank laws. But we do know that several of the robbers in the eight other attempts said they needed money to pay bills, and robbing a bank was an easy way to get it.

What we're getting at is this: maybe this credit-backed prosperity the nation is experiencing is little more than just that. A great deal of our prosperity is on paper, and when time comes to meet the bills the money has to come from somewhere.

Why, then, not rob a bank? It seems pretty easy to do, although the chances for escape have this year been very slim in North Carolina.

Maybe it would help not only to prepare for bank robberies before they occur, but also to take stock of our credit-backed prosperity and make it harder for the criminally weak to borrow money so they won't have to rob banks to pay it back.

Accident At State: Lesson In Tragedy

From Raleigh the other day came the tragic story of a State College student's drowning in the Frank Thompson Gymnasium pool while a life guard and 15 or 20 others were in the area.

Apparently the freshman victim had dived into a shallow area, struck his head on the bottom of the pool and drowned unnoticed by others swimming in the pool.

The tragedy points out the fact that not only officials but students as well must always be on the lookout for tragedy when it is least expected. They must prepare for the unexpected assuming that someday it will happen.

As an outgrowth of the accident, it has been proposed that student swimmers at State College enter the pool in pairs of two, or the well-known "buddy system." Perhaps it would be a good practice at Woollen Gymnasium here.

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Top Drummers Lack Public Acclamation

It seems that everybody likes a drum solo. There isn't anything quite as exciting as a well executed, dynamic, drum solo, but there aren't many drummers who are capable of performing one. Drummers like Gene Krupa, Buddy Rich, and Louis Besson, though capable of swinging work, are really not very imaginative soloists; yet the public seems to like them the most. Perhaps this merely serves to illustrate the point that the public would rather have noise than musicianship, as the rock and roll fad indicates.

There are, however, three drummers who are capable of giving a good performance every time around. They are Max Roach, Jo Jones, and Shelly Manne, and of these three the only one who has achieved any degree of public approval beyond the barest minimum is Manne. Most people never seem to have heard of the other two.

Max Roach is the most violent of the three. He belongs to a school of jazz known as the "Hard Boppers," a school led by Miles Davis and Art Blakey, among others. While Blakey tends to become overly-exhibitionistic and sacrifice musical value for surface excitement, Roach is the musician's musician, a continually searching, alented musician. This adventerous spirit can be seen in his new EmArcy recording, "Max Roach In 3/4 Time"—no, this is not the "Blue Danube" bit.

The name of Jo Jones is synonymous in jazz circles with taste, humor, and amazing dexterity. Jones was the anchor man in the great Count Basie rhythm section of the late thirties and forties, and now is a free lance operator who records any where, any time, and with any school. Jones is not the showcase drummer, preferring to be the swinging, inventive influence behind a group. The happyface of Jo Jones, propelling Teddy Wilson or the Count, is one of jazzdom's most precious possession. Although he is featured on countless albums, he only has one record of his own, a Vanguard release called "The Jo Jones Special," which contains one of the most delightful solos on record anywhere. If you can find it, buy it.

An album of modern jazz performances of the tunes from "My Fair Lady" brought Shelly Manne to national attention. Manne is the technician of drummers--many have said that he is the best technician in the world, excluding none. Despite this great technical ability, however, he has not fallen victim of stiffness and lack of spirit. His backings are considered the most sympathetic and capable in progressive jazz, as can be seen on the "My Fair Lady" recording. The fact that he is beginning to reach national acclaim is most encouraging for jazz, for he may be able to lead the way, so to speak.

I have omitted a great many wonderful drummers--Chico Hamilton, Osie Johnson, and Don Lamond, to mention a few—but I think I have hit upon the three greatest. They are the bearers of Big Sid Catlett's tradition of swinging, tasty drumming.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Education III: Down With Joneses Up With Individuality, Initiative

Curtis Gans

The basic goal of a good educational set-up is the stimulation of thought and individuality. It is a necessity for a strong democracy.

With American psychology as it is today, it is doubtful that this goal will ever be reached.

Americans today are fed group consciousness and the avoidance of individuality. They worship heroes who are athletes, entertainers, and generals. The criterion for this adulation is the group's approval of this man's "Talent", and how much hold he has over the group.

Americans today look at the Joneses as their ideal, and to become equal to the Joneses is the American's goal.

The American community first and above all frowns on intellect. They become scared when a man of ideas crosses their path. This is especially notable recently with the case of Adai Stevenson. It becomes notable in the case of any ideological or scientific development, for the American populace not only does not understand these new ideas, but makes no effort to try to get the knowledge necessary to understand.

Here again is the idea of the "Golden Mean", and the cult of comfort. An deviant from the norm is looked on as untoward and anathema.

Yet, what the American fails to realize is that the individuals the people of initiative, who have seen fit to push themselves above and away from the levels of the Joneses, have shaped this world.

It is the man with extraordinary mental energy, like Einstein, Descartes, Socrates, Machiavelli, Newton, Locke, Aristotle, and many others, who has produced the ideological and scientific world in which people live.

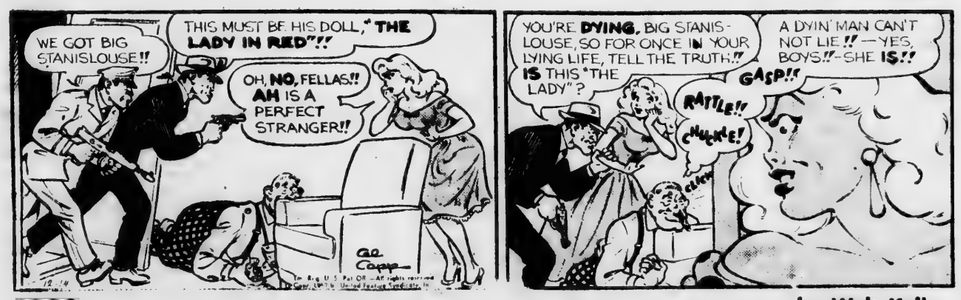
But people have a natural propensity for saying that "this is the best of all possible worlds," and for acting as if any individual who threatens to change it would harm the world.

It isn't so. It is the individual who sees things wrong, that, if given the freedom to act, will better the situation. And the risk that he might worsen the situation is worth taking.

This rambling around a point leads one to the point, that the stolid conservation that is part of this country and the lack of ability of Americans to be stimulated by anything but a television set and an occasional glimpse of a woman's legs, is destroying the country through destroying individual initiative.

In order that the educational system be changed so that brain power, the nation's number one resource, can be cultivated, one must change the prevailing climate of opinion. One must cut down the bondage of conservatism and disinterest, and foster individuality.

Perhaps one of the best ways for doing this, and Russia has done this quite successfully, is to substitute for American athletic, military, and acting hero, a hero in the form of the man with initiative and intellect.



If Americans can so easily create these other heroes, whose function in a peaceful world or even in a world of troubles is indeed small, it should be quite easy to dramatize the role of intellect in the fate of the world. And that role is great.

But Americans will find it a little troubling to do this, for some of the basic premises of materialism and conservatism will be shaken as a result. If, however, this is overcome, a strong and efficient democracy may be the result.

If the American educational system is to be upgraded, as is necessary in the face of the Russian challenge, if a system of education which will be devoted to stimulation of individual initiative and intellect is to be established, if America is to be a strong democracy, making the best possible use of its resources, then there must be a change in its present way of thinking.

America must change its God. It must recognize the mind over the body.

WINSTON TO WINSTON

Frat Members & Their Restrictions

BARRY WINSTON

Funny thing happened to me on my way to the typewriter today. I had just left the library (I was using their phone) to drive home for lunch. As I reached for the handle of my car door, the beep-beep of a woman driver in the street drew my attention for a moment, and I was still watching her intimidate some helpless truck-driver as I slid in under the wheel. I had already started the car and put it in reverse before I realized that there was somebody sitting next to me, on the front seat.

It was me. Or was it I? Anyhoo, the guy's face looked like the same one that stares groggily at me every morning when I shave. So, naturally, the first thing I said was, "Who in the ever-lovin' blue-eyed world are you?" And he, in a very sarcastic tone of voice, replied, "Who, in the ever-lovin' blue-eyed world do I look like?"

Now if there's one thing I can't stand, it's sarcasm. So my first reaction was to get rid of this screwball as fast as possible. I figured that if I insulted him, he'd get the idea. ?

"Well," I said, "as a matter of fact, you look like me. But my philosophy instructor looks like Burt Lancaster, and that doesn't make him a trapeze artist. I don't care the first thing about who you look like. I asked you who you are!"

"Not that it really makes any difference," he said, grinning like a cheshire cat, "but my name is Barry Winston."

You can imagine the effect that remark had on my nervous system. First the clown makes himself at home in my car, and then he tries to convince me that he's me!

I was in the process of reaching under the seat for a pipe wrench that I keep there for just such occasions when he spoke up again. "But enough of this idle chit-chat. I haven't got the time to be playing 20 Questions with you. There are some things I want to know about an article that was in the Tar Heel the other day, and I'm asking you because I know you better than I know anybody else on the staff."

I couldn't say a word. This was too much! All I could do was wonder how he thought he knew me when I had never met him before.

Without even giving me time to interrupt, had I been able, he started in again. "You're one of these frat men, aren't you? Well what's all this jazz about discrimination in the clauses? I thought this was a liberal-type campus."

Frat men! I started for the pipe wrench again, but he threw me off balance by grabbing my cigarettes out of my shirt pocket, so all I said was, "Look, my fraternity doesn't even . . ."

"Bully for you! I didn't ask you about your frat. What's the story on discriminatory clauses? The editor of the Tar Heel says that there are frats on this campus that have them, and he thinks it's all right. What do you think?"

Actually, I'd never given the matter much thought at all, but I was darned if I was going to admit it to this wise-guy. So I started off cautiously, "Well, like the editorial says, the policy is set by the national chapter. And since one of the basic principles of a fraternity is selectivity—admittedly not a democratic process—why shouldn't there be a discriminatory clause if everybody wants one? After all, isn't it just as much discrimination to keep a guy out for scholastic reasons?"

With almost too much patience in his voice, he replied, "Your analogy holds about as much water as a German's weekend highball. What have grades got to do with discrimination? If you're going to get ridiculous, it would be discrimination for a salesman to refuse to sell me a car for the insignificent reason that I didn't have any money. And as for the principle of selectivity, your reasoning makes about as much sense as trying to open a keg of gun-powder with a blow-torch. You just admitted that your frats like to be able to pick and choose as they please, didn't you? Talk sense, one time! How can they pick and choose when the national chapter hands down clauses that limit their right to do so?"

Now I had him, by George! "So you think that the national chapters should be required to let just anybody into the fraternity! You think you should be able to tell a private organization who it can have in its membership, do you?"

Surprisingly enough, he looked very thoughtful for a moment or two, and when he answered, it was in a much more pensive tone than he had been using. "No . . . I don't think that I or anyone should be able to dictate the membership of any organization. But it seems to me that's just what he nationals are doing to their local chapters. And there's still another, more practical consideration. If the national chapters don't loosen up, they stand to lose some houses on campuses that have already started to clamp down on this sort of thing. It hasn't happened here, yet, but even if it does, and your frats have to give up their discrimination in writing, you'll still have the right to blackball anybody you want to. But you boys had better be giving some serious consideration to what you're going to do if the University decides that it can't sanction any organization with such clauses."

Now I was mad. I had a cause. "Let them persecute us and try to clamp down. We have rights. We'll tell the whole world that we're being deprived of our basic freedoms!" He just looked at me, and and smiled a sort of sad little smile. And then he said, 'While you're telling the whole world about your basic rights to discriminate against any group whose color, or creed, or nose-shape you don't like, be sure to holler loud enough for Pravda to hear you. They'll give you all the publicity you want."

115 Sophomores To Receive Certificates For Frosh Work

Dr. Ernest L. Mackie, dean of awards said yesterday that 115 sophomores will be presented certificates for outstanding scholastic work during their freshman year sometime soon.

The presentation of the certificates is in accordance with a bill passed by Student Legislature in May, 1956.

The bill went into effect September, 1956. This fall, Dean Mackie went through the records of freshmen for the two semesters of fall and spring, 1956-57.

The certificate awards are to be regarded as encouragement for scholarship in the freshman class, the bill states, since many freshman have gone unrecognized because of technicalities in election into Phi Eta Sigma. Phi Eta Sigma is a national honorary fraternity for freshmen who make a scholastic record of half A's and half B's.

The Student Legislature bill has been implimented by a faculty committee and has been interpreted to mean that all freshmen with an equivalent of a B average will be eligible for the certificates. The actual working of the bill says the awards are to be made freshmen "who maintain an equivalent to the Dean's List for the first two semesters." However, a student may not be on the Dean's list with a C on his scholastic record.

A freshman will be eligible to recivee a certificates so long as he has a B average, even with C's on his record.

Dean Mackie said those freshmen who qualified for certificates but are no longer enrolled in the University will be mailed the awards.

UNC Band Director Fred Goes To Meet In D. C.

Herbert W. Fred, director of bands at UNC is attending the meeting of the Southern Division of the College Band Directors National Association in Washington, D. C. this weekend.

As chairman of the Southern Division, he is presiding at the meeting. Also, he was to have presented a paper entitled "Adapting French Band Scores to American Bands," using two of his transcriptions, Danse Persane by Guirand and Ballet du Plaisir by Charpentier, as examples.

On Thursday night Fred was guest conductor of the U. S. Navy Band in their concert.

The Daily Tar Heel SOCIETY

Joan Brock, Editor

SPE Fun

After a hard week's studying, the SPE's were ready for a vacation. They attended the game Saturday with their dates to cheer the "Number One" on to victory. They later returned to the House for an evening of informal dancing.

Chet Davis, senior from Habana, Cuba, has pinned Alpha Gam Andrea Stalvey from Charlotte.

Phi Delt Party

Although the combo the Phi Delts had scheduled to play for their dance Saturday night went "out to lunch" and forgot to show up, they still managed to enjoy a successful evening of partying with music provided by their own juke box.

The newly-elected pledge class officers are president, Bill Stem; vice president, Rhode Corbett; secretary, Peter Austin; treasurer, Ruddy Waldorf; and social chairman, Jack Mitchell.

Zeta Beta Tau News

Approximately ten Zeta Beta Taus and their dates found their way to Woollen Gym Saturday to yell for UNC, and then celebrated the victory with an informal party at the House.

John Kridel, junior from South Orange, N. J., has given his pin to Heddy Davis, a Monmouth College student from Deal, N. J.

Phi Kap's Entertain Dukes

The Phi Kaps supported the Tar Heels by attending the game Saturday, but after it was over they played host to the Phi Kaps from Duke in a basketball game of their own. Sad—but true—the "Blue Devils" won by a large margin.

After the game, the Phi Kaps treated the Duke players and their dates to a chicken dinner at the House.

The Phi Kaps and their dates also began the weekend with an informal party at the House Friday night.

SAE Pinning

Chi Psis

Approximately 20 Chi Psis and their dates cheered Carolina to victory at the game Saturday and then returned to the House for an old fashioned UNC victory party.

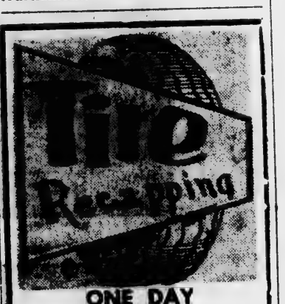
Smith-Evergreen Party

To get into the Christmas spirit, the girls over at Smith-Evergree Dorm are having an open house Sunday afternoon from 3 to 5 p.m. for their professors and their wives and children.

Shields, Chadwick Are Tops In Student Card Tournament

Jerry Shields and Barbara Chadwick won honors and prizes in the North-South division of the all-student bridge tournament this week. Rick Grausman and Bob Horowitz (ZBT representatives) took top East-West honors in the tournament.

All four students won master points. The prizes awarded each were $5 gift certificates at Town and Campus clothing store.



"Booby" prize awards of UNC glasses and ash trays went to Stephen Wolper and Robert Neal, who scored a 32 per cent game.

Other student winners in the bridge tournament were: in the North-South division, Gene Whitehead and Malcom Clark, second place (.50 master points); Don Gray and Jim Butler, third place (.25 master points); and Philip Moss and Philip Straus, fourth place (.15 master points).

East-West winners were: Sidney Thames and Bee Newman, second place (.50); Jim Vance and Gerry Boudreau, third place (.25); and Jerry Graham and Jean Syer, fourth place (.15).

The Tri Delts and the DUs tied in the placing of winners. Both had four winners in the brigde tournament.

A nine-table Mitchell movement was played in the tournament. Dan Duke was coordinator of the Graham Memorial Tournament Committee sponsored bridge tournament.

Gamecocks Could Give Tar Heels Rough Game

It is very likely that South Carolina will offer the Tar Heels their strongest competition of the season this afternoon in Woollen Gym.

The Gamecocks have a well-rounded veteran outfit that is capable of giving anybody a tough time and television fans can expect a good show from the two teams who met in the Atlantic Coast Conference finals last March.

Top man for the Gamecocks is captain Ray Pericola, better known as Cookie, who fans in the area may recall played such fine ball at SC last season. Pericola is averaging 21.3 in three games this season. The Gamecocks have a 2-1 record, having beaten Georgia and Georgia Tech and losing to N. C. State.

Rounding out the top five for South Carolina is 6-8 center Fred Lentz, forwards Dick Hoffman and Walt Hudson and Dickie Prater at the other guard. The Gamecocks are also well-stocked with reserve power.

Carolina Was Sluggish Against Furman

Carolina will have to play better basketball today than it did Thursday night against Furman in order to stop the Gamecocks.

The Furman game was one of the poorest showings this writer has seen in the past two seasons for the Tar Heels. That spark which is usually so prevalent was missing against the Purple Paladins and the defense was far below its normal effectiveness.

There is no cause for alarm, however, considering the circumstances. Regardless of what might be said, it is hard for a great team like the Tar Heels to really become enthusiastic against a team like Furman, and that, frankly, is a fact.

That is not to detract from the ability of Lyles Alley's fine group. The Paladins are a hustling aggregate and should do well in the Southern Conference, admittedly, though, quite a bit weaker than the ACC.

Prospects for a good game today are great. The Gamecocks should be up and the Tar Heels will be trying to bounce back strong after the Furman game.

McGuire Sends Boy Away In Happy Frame Of Mind

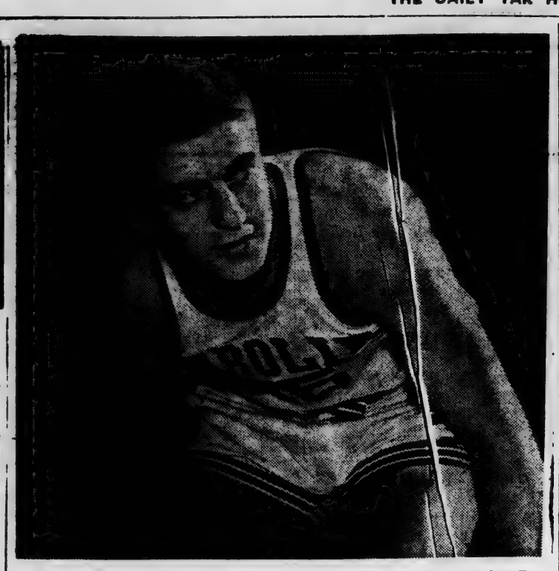
McGuire recalled the time back during the 1951-52 season that he came up with only nine men against The Citadel and had to insert Hale into the lineup. McGuire had a long chat with the boy and sent him away beaming with a specially ordered brochure autographed by all the Tar Heels.

The Charlotte Coliseum is a real tribute to modern architecture. The dome shaped master-work ranks favorably with any coliseum in the country for beauty and facilitation. There's a good vantage point at every one of the approximately 15,000 seats with no pillars to obstruct vision.

Not a member of the Clemson squad looks over 18 years old but the Purple Paladins don't play like high school kids. Five-eleven guard Dick Wright is an especially fine ball-player as any of the Tar Heels can tell you. He's the boy who scored 365 points last season and seems well on his way to another great year.

Was Brennan Really Slain By Payne?



An interesting note about today's game is that South Carolina has a set of twins, Walt and Bury Hudson which you can hardly tell apart. Fellow was talking about them the other day and admonished that if they ever get in together you'd better memorize their numbers because you certainly won't be able to distinguish one from the other.

A letter signed "a McCallie fan" reached our desk the other day concerning a couple of Carolina athletes who went to high school at McCallie. One is freshman Carl Hunt and the other is sophomore Bill Stem who the letter-writer calls a couple of tremendous track prospects.

Common occurrence department: Have you ever seen a tie football game in which the coaches of the teams involved failed to say that "a tie game leaves you flat."

Duke football mentor Bill Murray has a fan in Tulsa, Okla. For eleven straight days Murray has received an unsigned postcard from this fan which reads: "Don't wait, charge hard, keep coming, you will win."

The Tar Heels will miss Pete Brennan. We learned from the front page of The Daily Tar Heel the other day that Pete had been slain by football end Buddy Payne. Pete was a great guy, too. We still smell a rat . . . Payne wouldn't do anything like that. We knew he was a snow man but murder, my gosh!!

MAN TO WATCH: Ray (Cookie) Pericola is one man the Tar Heels will have to watch closely today. The South Carolina ace has averaged better than 21 points per game this season and leads a strong SC team into this contest.

Freshmen Cagers Play Pfeiffer JV's Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina freshman basketall team will be out to make it 3-1 today against the Pfeiffer junior varsity, and as last Saturday the game will be an inversion of last year's policy, the frosh following the varsity.

The yearling cagers own victories over High Point (84-75) and Wilmington (85-68), their only setback coming at the hands of the powerful Duke Blue Imps (71-68).

The frosh built up an early lead against High Point and held on to it, in spite of frequent attempts by the losers to catch up. Although they led at the half against Duke, the Tar Babies couldn't buy a basket in the closing minutes and finally lost to the Imps. The Wilmington game was more or less a romp; the Tar Babies won going away with a 27-point spread.

Moe Leads

So far this season, Doug Moe holds the individual point lead and the single game point high. He hit for 32 against High Point and has a composite total of 83. Following Moe are Jim Donahue with 60, Pete Longnecker at 53, Bill Hart with 16, and Tam Shuford with 14.

Since the season began, several freshman footballers have joined the squad. The most outstanding so far have been Russ Hollers and Lenny Beck, both getting four points against Wilmington.

Greenday Playing

Also on the squad is towering end Mike Greenday. The team is looking forward to the return of Lou Brown, now on the injured list with a broken hand. Sub guard Ed Graham is also out with a fractured ankle.

Freshman Coach Ken Rosemond will probably start 6-8 Jim Donahue at the pivot, slick-shooting Moe and Longnecker at forwards, and playmakers Shuford and Hart at guards.

Mermen Take 2 Wins Over Clemson

CLEMSON, S. C.—Three Clemson Pool records fell here yesterday as the Carolina varsity swimmers downed Clemson, 63-21. The Carolina freshmen made it a clean sweep by beating the Tiger yearling, 47-24.

Tar Heels Brent Nash, Paul Wachendorfer and Bill Zickgraf all set new marks. Nash's time of 4:10.6 in the 400-medley relay set one mark. Wachendorfer broke the 200-butterfly record set in the freshman match by Tar Baby Randy Dodson. His time was 2:18.7. Zickgraf's 100-freestyle time of 53.5 was also good for a record here.

The Carolina mermen now take on the South Carolina Gamecocks this afternoon.

VARSITY SUMMARY

400 medley relay—Nash (C); Wachendorfer (C) Mahaffy (C) Rose (C)—4:10.6. (record)

400-relay—Roth, Green, Rose and Zickgraf—3:51.9.

Varsity, Frosh Wrestlers Will Compete Today

The varsity and freshman wrestling teams swing into action again this afternoon. The varsity travels to College Park, Md., where it will take on a powerful Maryland squad. The freshmen will entertain Pheiffer in a 7:15 match in Woollen Gym.

The varsity, with victories over Washington and Lee and Davidson, will be trying to make it three out of four by taking this meet from the Terps. Coach Sam Barnes' varsity lost its opening meet to Virginia before taking the next two straight.

In their opening meet this year, the Terps drubbed Wake Forest 33-3 picking up six pins along the way.

Coach Jim Carse's freshmen enter tonight's met with a 1-1 record on the season. After losing the opener to Virginia, the Tar Babies came back and beat Washington and Lee the next day by a 30-10 count.

"ROLLER FREIGHT" ENDS THE NO. 1 CAUSE OF FREIGHT TRAIN DELAYS

EVERY year, over 125,000 freight trains have to stop en route and drop cars for repairs. All for the same reason. Hot boxes—railroaders' term for overheated friction bearings.

But the railroads are winning the battle against this No. 1 cause of freight train delays. They're going "Roller Freight"—mounting freight cars on Timken® tapered roller bearings. "Roller Freight" speeds trains through terminals, too. You inspect Timken bearings just by touching them—save 90% of the time.

That's Better-ness. The result of an American conviction that "good enough" isn't. With "Roller Freight", America's railroads will save an estimated $224,000,000 annually. Earn 22% on their "Roller Freight" investment. "Roller Freight" brings Better-ness to all America by helping the railroads speed service.

WANT TO HELP CREATE BETTER-ness? Are you looking for a bright future with a big and growing company—one that rewards ability and imagination? Then send for our free booklet, "Career Opportunities at the Timken Company". It tells all about the fine opportunities we offer college graduates. The Timken Roller Bearing Company, Canton 6, Ohio.

61 railroads and other freight car owners now have over 24,500 "Roller Freight" cars in service or on order.

McGuiremen Halt Gamecock Attack For 70-58 Win Before 6,500 Fans

Brennan High Man For NCAA Champs

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels started slow, picked up vicious momentum, then slacked off again and in the process gained their 36th straight basketball victory with a 70-58 victory over the South Carolina Gamecocks in Woollen Gym yesterday.

The slow start was due to the Gamecocks' clever little game of 'hold onto the ball,' the momentum quickened about midway the first half and lasted until midway the second with all the Tar Heels supplying about equal scoring punch, and the slight relapse came in the final ten minutes when the Gamecocks got hot, and the Tar Heels got cold.

That was about the story as Frank McGuire's charges continued to add luster to that fabulous winning streak which started over a year ago. It was the fourth time the Tar Heels have beaten the Gamecocks during the streak.

South Carolina was tough, the Tar Heels were tougher. The North Carolinians grabbed an 11-9 lead with 10:48 left in the first half and never gave it back. But, the boys from the Palmetto State kept fighting back as evidenced in the final 10:48. Carolina held a 53-33 lead with 10:38 remaining, but at 2:53 the scoreboard read 64-55 in favor of the Tar Heels.

From that point the McGuiremen took but one shot from the floor and that was Tommy Kearn's two-pointer with four seconds to go. Harvey Salz in the meantime had hit four free throws to build the Tar Heel back to a respectable 10 point margin.

Top man for the Tar Heels was forward Pete Brennan, but practically everybody got in the act. Bob Cunningham hit 14, his replacement Harvey Salz stripped for 12, Kearns poured in ten, Dick Kepley had nine and Lee Shaffer had eight.

The Gamecocks got the first basket after three minutes of the first half. From there, the lead changed hands four times before the Tar Heels finally went ahead for good. The Tar Heels had 12 point advantage, 36-23 at halftime and that was just about the margin they had held throughout the last ten minutes of the half.

Three quick baskets by Cunningham, Kearns and Kepley at the start of the second half gave the Tar Heels a 41-23 advantage but the McGuiremen could never get that 20 point advantage until 9:22 had elapsed in the second period. A field goal by Cunningham made it 51-33. Mike Callahan hit for

Negro Rapes Wake Forest Coach's Wife

WINSTON-SALEM, Dec. 14 (AP)—A Negro service station attendant today was charged with raping Mrs. Al DePorter, attractive young wife of the Wake Forest College assistant basketball coach.

Capt. W. R. Burke, chief of Winston-Salem detectives, said Charles Moore Jr., 27, signed a statement "which contained very little difference" from the story related to police by the 25-year-old Mrs. DePorter, whose husband was the captain of the Wake Forest basketball team in 1955-56, as saying Moore had brought the DePorter family car from a service station to their apartment and insisted he drive on the return trip to the station. Mrs. DePorter said the Negro threatened her with a knife and attacked her on a deserted dirt road.

Winston-Salem Police Chief James I. Waller said the side road is in "as isolated section as can be found within the city limits."

Capt. Burke said Mrs. DePorter told them she freed herself and drove to her apartment and a friend notified police. Burke said Moore left on foot, went to a service station where he had been employed previously, and had a friend telephone police he wanted to surrender.

The police captain said through directions provided by Moore, the knife was found about 20 or 30 feet off the dirt road and about 200 feet down the road from where the attack occurred.

Moore, who commutes to his work at the service station here from High Point, made no denial, police said. The rape warrant was signed by Det. Sgt. J. H. Lentz.

Moore was held without bond for arraignment in Municipal Court on Tuesday. He will be given a preliminary hearing in the same court on Friday.

DePorter was notified immediately and hurried home.

Self Defense Considered By Jury In Its Acquittal Of Buddy Payne

By ED ROWLAND

Friday night in the annual mock trial the jury rejected four possible verdicts to return a fifth, that of not guilty, against the state's charge that Buddy Payne did willfully, with malice and aforethought kill Pete Brennan.

Judge Malcolm Seawell explained the meanings of the possible verdicts to the jurors, and observers feel his charge enabled the jury to return the not guilty verdict.

The state had attempted to prove Payne went to the scene of the killing with a pistol in his pocket to murder Brennan. Testimony from Gail Willingham implied that Payne had threatened both her and Brennan as early as Sunday before the killing.

The second-degree charge omitted the premeditation requirement and included only malice, which was defined as hate and a condition of mind to take another's life unlawfully.

Manslaughter includes neither malice, not deliberation, but implied accidental killing. This possibility was discarded by the jurors, one of them disclosed after the trial, because it was felt Payne had acted in self defense.

The defense testimony attempted and apparently did show Payne's threats to Miss Willingham and Brennan were jokingly delivered. In the words of witness Fred Swearingen, "He said them to blow off steam."

Defense witness Betty Hoffman neatly torpedoed prosecution witness Sarah Van Weyk's testimony by declaring that she was in a perfect position to see the fight between Payne and Brennan and that she saw Brennan shove Payne to the ground.

She added that it seemed to her that Brennan was the aggressor throughout the fight.

Payne verified this testimony on the stand. He said he was surprised to meet Brennan, that Brennan yelled to him, "You're going to see my woman," and that Brennan shoved him to the ground.

Payne added that when Brennan drew a knife from his belt, he (Payne) tried to wrest it from him. In the struggle Brennan apparently rolled onto the weapon, he saidd.

Payne testified that he had resolved the day of the killing to forget the whole "mess" between he and Miss Willingham. He said he went to the Tri-Delt house to get class notes from Miss Mott Butler.

The defendant further testified that he had possession of a pistol that night because he had just obtained it from his roommate to do some target shooting, which he said he had often done in the past.

His roommate Fred Swearingen substantiated Payne's statement.

Miss Hoffman said Payne appeared shocked after rising from the ground and seeing Brennan remain still. She said she heard Payne say sorrowfully, "I didn't know he had a knife."

Payne testified under cross-examination by the state that he figured he could get back into the good graces of Miss Willingham by showing her he was the man of love he had supposed. "I thought I'd scare her to get her to see something better in me," he said.

On the stand Miss Willingham, attired in a close-fitting brown sheath dress, said Payne saw her in the library Tuesday before the killing and loudly cried, "If I can't have you nobody can.'" She said Payne said something about an apology and accused her of leading her on and two-timing him.

Miss Willingham admitted under

Brinnin Speaks Of British As 'Rebels Without A Cause'

By VIRGINIA SANDIDGE

"'Rebels without a cause is a good name for the angry young men of postwar Britain," said Prof. John Malcolm Brinnin, delivering his lecture on "The New British Poets and the Angry Young Men" Friday night in Gerrard Hall.

"The poets are not angry young men. In their quiet rooms they speak softly. They do not make public spectacles of themselves as the angry young men sometimes do," the Prof. asserted.

The name "angry young men" is attached to people who do things that others only dare to think about. They are not an organization of people; instead, they are a diverse group, which reflects a new note in English literature, he explained.

"These people are products of the time. They are of the lower middle class, educated during the war years when class levels were levied, and bewildered now that class distinction has returned in Britain," said Prof. Brinnin. They have been graduated from the 'red brick universities' of Great Britain, universities other than Oxford and Cambridge.'

"Aside from fighting the class distinctions, these young journalists find it necessary to fight the desire of the average British public for horror in its daily newspapers. On one day, a British newspaper was 95 percent police records on sex crimes. This newspaper has a circulation of seven million," he added.

Several nicknames have been attached to the young writers. "Messiahs of the milk bars," is one. Somerset Maughm put it this way: "I consider them scum."

Important members of this group are Kingsley Amis, Colin Wilson, John Wayne and John Osborne. The tempers of these men turn on three factors: poverty, lack of opportunity and the sense of the war and the hydrogen bomb.

Continuing, he pointed out that the philosophy of these writers is that "it is the young writer's duty to have a profound sense of responsibility, a responsibility to write in a way that will arouse people from satisfaction with the world as it now is." As yet, the angry young men have not written much.

"The poets are of a quieter nature. They have published anthologies, which have served to stimulate interest in contemporary English literature.

"Dylan Thomas was one of the radical poets. The rest are mostly librarians, editors or teachers. They live in or near London, with the exception of a few. They have been graduated from both Oxford and Cambridge and the 'red brick' universities," he concluded.

NSA Urges That Harding Invite Former Negro Student To Return

RALEIGH—A regional conference of the National Student Association urged here Saturday that Charlotte's Harding High School student body invite a humiliated Negro girl back to classes there.

The girl, 17-year-old Dorothy Counts, withdrew from the Charlotte High school soon after she entered last September at the order of the Charlotte School Board. The school board's ruling was based on the N. C. Pupil Assignment Act.

Delegates to the Carolinas-Virginia regional conference of NSA, in passing the readmissions resolution Saturday, said Harding students recently demonstrated their favor of Miss Counts' return when they gave Dr. Frank P. Graham a standing ovation after he had addressed the Harding student body.

Dr. Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, urged in his address that the Negro girl be allowed to resume her education at Harding High School.

Miss Counts became one of the first Negroes to attend a formerly all-white North Carolina high school when she entered Harding in the fall. She voluntarily withdrew, however, after demonstrators spat and threw articles at her.

In passing the UNC delegation-sponsored resolution, the conference voted to send copies of it to the Harding High School student body president and to the school principal there.

The readmissions resolution was among several passed on the final day of three-day conference held at the N. C. State College Student Union building here. Others passed included:

1. A resolution affirming the belief that a student-operated honor system is both feasible and desireable.

2. A resolution urging that foreign students studying in the United States not be charged unduly high tuition at state supported institutions.

3. A resolution urging that (a) secondary schools in this region of NSA increase and strengthen their requirements in both college preparatory and in vocational courses; (b) that requirements for high school education should be set up by each respective state educational boards on a level that would develop each high school student's ability to gain the maximum from their high school education; and (3) that colleges in this region raise their requirements for entrance in order to eliminate important courses of a secondary school nature.

Men's Glee Club, Choral Club To Present Concert Tuesday

The Chapel Hill Choral Club and the UNC Men's Glee Club will present a Christmas concert on Tuesday at 8 p.m. The program under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter will be given in Hill Music Hall.

The featured work will be the "Christmas Oratoria" of Camille Saint-Saens to be performed by the Choral Club. This work, one of the composer's earliest, was written in 1863. The following soloists will be heard in the Oratorio": sopranos, Gladys Teague, Barbara Peacock and Quillian White; mezzo-sopranos, Dolores Edwards and Inge Rader; altos, Marilyn Zschau and Helen Jones.

Tenors, James King and Gene Strassler; basses, Roy Sommerfeld, Everett Hall and Edgar vom Lehn. Harpists Suzann Davids and Emily Kellam, and organist Lee Bostian will accompany the "Oratorio."

The Choral Club will open the program with a group of four French Christmas pieces. A 15th century Gloria by Dufay will be followed by three carols: Noel de Frere Jacques arranged by Pendleton, Le Sommeil de l'Enfant Jesus arranged by Gevaert, and Pat-a-pan arranged by Davis.

The second group of numbers will be sung by the Glee Club and will open with a fifteenth century Ave Maria by Arcadelt. The familiar carol, Bring a Torch by Jeanette Isabella and arranged by Davison, will follow.

The next number, Thou Must Leave Thou Lowly Dwelling, is from the "L'Enfance du Christ" of Hector Berlioz. The carol, The Babe Divine, arranged by Fox-Strangways, will conclude the group.

Familiar Christmas carols will also be included in the program. The audience will be asked to join the Choral Club and Glee Club in singing them.

Phi Mu Alpha Fraternity To Go Christmas Caroling

Christmas carolers from Phi Mu Alpha, honorary music fraternity, will make a round of houses and dormitories here Sunday night, beginning at 8 o'clock.

A 10-piece brass band will accompany the groups on its caroling tour. The brass band will represent some of the festivities characteristic of older Yuletide celebrations. Phi Mu Alpha fraternity members will sing several rarely heard English carols.

Summer Job Opportunities Open At Placement Service

UNC students desiring summer jobs have been asked to register with the Placement Service in 204 Gardner Hall as soon as possible. The bureau is now assembling information about opportunities for summer employment.

The opportunities are many and varied. More and more businesses, organizations, and governmental agencies are sponsoring training programs for sales, accounting, office work, research, and social work.

These not only offer an income for the summer but also good work experience, so important to applying later for permanent employment, according to the Placement Service. Already, many of the companies have set up dates to visit the campus.

Not so lucrative, but offering good experience and fun, are camp jobs. Representatives from several of these camps visit the campus every year.

Resorts in western North Carolina, New England, Canada, and in the West offer hundreds of opportunities for would-be waitresses, bellhops, desk clerks, and social counselors. The Service has addresses and descriptions of many of these.

Information on opportunities in social service projects, work in mental hospitals, crop measurement, recreation and commission sales is also available.

Students who want summer jobs should start looking early, reports the Placement Service. After March most of the training programs are filled, and resorts are swamped with applications.

Coed Open House

The Smith-Evergreen Christmas Open House, as reported in yesterday's Tar Heel, will be held in the parlor of Smith Dorm with coeds from both Smith and Smith-Evergreen participating. Time for the event is today from 3 to 5 p.m.

Buckets Of Paint And Them Good Ole Days!

The judge remembered when he was a college student and the rivalry between Carolina and Duke, so he was indulgent with Carolina students caught with a bucket of paint and brush on Woman's College campus.

The judge, William M.Poteat of Municipal-County Court, chided the two 17-year-old students for picking Woman's College for their proposed statue painting.

"Why," asked Judge Poteat of William Honeycutt and Richard Martin of Chapel Hill, "didn't you think of taking that paint over to Duke instead of Woman's College?"

The boys remained silent as the judge continued. ". . . Back when I was a student at Carolina, it was customary, if there was any painting to be done, to do it over at Duke." He then fined the pair $1 and costs each. —THE GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS.

Should 'Peanuts' Replace Comic In Daily Tar Heel?

Charlie Brown—that ingenious little character of Peanuts—is liable to cause an uproar at the University of North Carolina. And here's why:

On December 12, the legislature passed a bill introduced by Pat Adams appropriating $5.30 weekly to add "Peanuts" to the comic strips of The Daily Tar Heel.

Already the campus newspaper is publishing two other daily comics—L'il Abner and Pogo. Both are printed on the editorial page and, we feel, two comics are enough. And we want to keep the comics on the editorial page.

Consequently, one of the three comic strips—L'il Abner, Pogo and Peanuts—must be ommitted from publication in the Daily Tar Heel.

The Polls Committee of GMAB recently conducted a survey showing that more students at UNC preferred "Peanuts" over "Pogo." But it was only a sample vote, reflecting the opinion of only a small segment of the student body. Therefore it should not be accepted as the overall, total opinion of the electorate.

We feel that to best get the majority on which of the two of the total three comics to print in The Daily Tar Heel, a vote should be conducted by the newspaper which would allow all its readers to express their preference for the comic strips.

To that end the Tar Heel will print ballots in the newspaper Tuesday. If you would like to retain Pogo and L'il Abner in the newspaper, then indicate so on your ballot. If you prefer to read Peanuts and Pogo, or Peanuts and L'il Abner, thn you should vote to that effect.

All ballots must be turned into The Daily Tar Heel (either by mail or by personal presentation at Tar Heel offices in Graham Memorial) not later than midnight Thursday. We will tally the votes and abide by the wishes of the majority of the student body.

There are several reasons why the Tar Heel cannot print three comic strips a day. In the first place, we generally have only four pages and thus cannot fill our news pages with comics. They must be retained for the purposes for which they are intended.

Secondly, since the comics must remain on the editorial page so long as we have a four-page paper, we cannot print three strips there because much of the edit column space would thereby be consumed. The editorial page must be used for editorials and columns, and should not be filled with comic strips.

Consequently, you are the ones who must decide which two of the three comic strips will henceforth appear in The Daily Tar Heel. Passage of the "Peanuts" bill by the legislature, representing the student body, points out the fact that a substantial segment of students at UNC would like to have "Peanuts" in the newspaper. But if it is to appear, it will be published at the expense of one of the other two comics.

When you mark your ballot after Tuesday's edition, be sure to select only two comic strips for publication in The Daily Tar Heel: A ballot with all three comics marked will be invalid and thrown out of the election.

Letters To Editor Should Be Signed

It is not now, nor will be so long as we are in the editor's chair, the practice of The Daily Tar Heel to print anonymous letters.

Our name is on the masthead of every Tar Heel published, and that fact makes us responsible for comment appearing on the editorial page. We feel that other contributors to the page should likewise have the courage to identify themselves with their handiwork.

Nevertheless, some of the more mature individuals continue to write letters to the editor but refuse to sign them. One fellow writes his name 'Reluctant Dragon," while another closes with the signature, "Author Forgotten."

Of course, most of the anonymous letters boil down to fiery criticism of The Daily Tar Heel. We would remind their writers that the newspaper is open to and even invites students who can materially improve the newspaper to join its staff.

And the paper also is open to criticism by those who pay for the publication: but we feel that those who are so free to critize — and probably sometimes they have just cause to do so—should have nothing to fear by signing their names.

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS

It All Began With Etaoin Shrdlu . . .

Every horrorstruck editor is convinced that a fellow named Etaoin Shrdlu makes a career out of touring newspaper plants and publishing houses with one demoniac mission in mind—to wit, the scrambling of type. You'll never convince any of us that certain typographical errors "just happen." Oh, no. There is some infernal prankster who makes them happen and Etaoin Shrdlu is his name.

Etaoin (familiarity has put us on a first name basis with the gent) was in England the other day playing hob with the great, gray British Broadcasting Corporation. The BBC's Nov. 12 program bulletin announced: "Friday Nov. 21 at 9:50 p.m. Gary Watson will read passages selected by Kathleen Raine from Beane's Pathetic Books." It meant "Blake's Prophetic Books" but Etaoin fixed that.

Fortunately, William Blake is too dead to care but the victims of some other prize typographical bloopers culled from U. S. and Britain newspapers recently are not. They are upset. Why? Read on:

"Mrs. David Miller has a new baby boy at her house. Dave is just as happy as if it was his."

"When a Suffolk fisher-lad sets his heart upon a maiden, he does not beat about the bust."

"Here the couple stood, facing the floral setting and exchanged cows."

"As soon as Miss W—— knew she was to sin, she telephoned her husband in Kansas."

"Our mortality rate in Fairfield is low while our birthrate is high."

"He had the privilege of viewing a number of rare Egyptian tummies."

"A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. William Kleintop, Leigh Avenue, during the past week. Congratulations, Pete."

A Londoner by the name of Denys Parsons is perhaps the world's greatest collector of Etaoin Shrdlu's handiwork. He passes along this classical advertisement, which would never appear in "The News' "employment columns:

"Stenographer—Five years legal experience, seeks permanent connections. Late 1927 model, good shape, many extras, used for pleasure spins by private owner. A real bargain."

Etaoin, go home!

The Quarterly: Student Mag? It Needs Life

By GAIL GODWIN

That the Carolina Quarterly is not doing too well was brought to light quite thoroughly in a Wednesday DTH feature.

It is reassuring to know that the few of us who thought we were out of step because we did not simply adore the Quarterly are very much in step.

The campus trend, it is thought by worried Quarterly boosters, is an attitude of Middle Age Melancholia or Anemic Apathy or something of the sort.

It is the opinion of this columnist that the sole reason the Quarterly is not making the splashing success it should is because it is not the student publication it purports to be.

A student magazine which can only boast that half of its work is that of campus writers is not enough. One hundred percent, "All or Nothing at All, "All the Way' is the only way.

To be a genuine, alive student "outlet" a student literary magazine must have student writing as its backbone, its padding, and its every motive. And by "student writing" students from other universities is not meant.

The have their own literary outlets. And national fiction contest winners are published every year in many anthologies of college writing, for the ones who need more outlets.

No, students are not flocking to the Quarterly office waving their manuscripts in hot little hands simply because no one looks forward to being turned down, and what possible hope is there for a green beginner when his work is placed side by side with Lucy Daniels and literary whizzes who teach at Yale or Harvard, and campus prodigies from the western universities and so on?

The Quarterly will either have to devote itself wholeheartedly to U.N.C. talent at the risk of becoming less "highbrow," or continue to bear the heavy loads of "black bile" under which it is slowly smothering.

More encouragement to timid young hopefuls will perhaps result in the loss of a certain discriminatory aura which religiously surrounds the Quarterly. But it might bring it back to life.

Look, No Wasps!

One of Charles Combs' farmhands at Olney, Ill., knew a surefire way to get rid of those wasps in the barn. He would burn them out. It worked. The wasps went up in smoke. So did the barn, 5,000 bales of hay, 2,000 bushels of barley, a utility shed, a garage, three drums of gasoline, and 200 loads of manure. And that ain't hay!

Women's Dormitory Council: Lots Of Noise, But Little Work

Not much has been said about the Women's Dormitory Council since orientation. Here in the South, seldom do we consider how fallable women are. The belles of our campus are placed high on a pedastel, set apart from the complexities that plague the Men's I.D.C. A most apathetic attitude is taken by females toward the rules and regulations. A sort of cooperative ignorance of the so-called rules is the generally accepted thing.

Council members are elected at the beginning of the year by incoming students. Out of a group of semi-acquaintances is selected the girl who has received the most phone calls in the past week, to serve as a representative to the Dormitory Council. This person is automatically a good kid, will not squeal on you, or reprimand you when you are screaming down the halls at one A.M. on a week night, about what a Micky Mouse your date was last weekend. "Typical women," the men say; but are they? Are our fragile "queens" of the campus just plain silly and giggly as a result of their innocence and physical incapacity to be confronted with unpleasantries.

No, I think not. In fact, there is more to it then meets the eye of the Carolina gentleman. These little ladies have an amazing lack of fragility when it comes to elbowing their way into the dining room. How many times can you can you boys say that you actually discussed a challenging subject with a girl on a date, or is it more entertaining to pass the time drinking at the frat house observing the act she puts on in front of you and all your half-drunk brothers as she girates to the beat of "Jailhouse Rock."

Or try, for instance, calling your gal at the dormitory. If the phone is not occupied, as it usually is, you ask for the person you want. When you hear the answerer bellow down the hall the name of the person you are calling, in a far from feminine voice, it jars you, doesn't it?

Not too many of the problems of female dormitory life are of any consequence, for what goes on within the second halls must remain ever a mystery to the male population of our campus. Why? I'll tell you why: it would be too great a shock for the men.

Someone has stolen approximately $60. in our dormitory, and no one does anything about it. It is unladylike to be outspoken and complain. Trying to keep people quiet on the halls is like admitting you are a subversive. You're marked as a lizard. Sometimes I wonder why some little ole Dayadies sent their daughters to Chapel Hill. It would be nice to meet your future husband here, but lets not get neurotic about it!

It seems like these things stem from the group attitude. Everyone is afraid to deviate; show some interest in sports, or tell people to be quiet when it is quiet hour. It is not very wise for a person to question the attitudes of the group. If you do, "you ain't shahp eenuff."

To Finance Science Students

Letter to the New York Times:

As a parent who is struggling to send his son to college, I find it difficult to believe that the Administration is really interested in doing anything to further science education. If they were, they would allow taxpayers to deduct the cost of a college education from their income tax—$600 against $2,500 represents a big difference to the average man. Many would send their children to college if allowed this deduction.

Government sponsored scholarship for, say, 10,000 students at $15,000 would only cost $15 million, or less than one battleship. Surely 10,000 scientists are worth one battleship.

Wit, Charm Seen In Current Play

By ANTHONY WOLFF

"What Every Woman Knows" is an old play; if it is not nearly as old as "Oedipus Rex" or even "Hamlet," neither does it wear its years so gracefully. The theme of the play, if you will have a theme, is the old saw "behind every successful man stands a strong woman." Around the turn of the century, when this play was first produced, this may well have been a novel commentary on the marital arrangement; in the light of current sociological thought, hoever, the humor takes a reverse twist. In this modern day of "Momism", emasculated males, and Madam Ambassadors "What Every Woman Knows" has become quite a different play. While it may have warned our grandparents of the revolution to come, today — if it has any meaning at all — it must exist as a reminder of what has happened and should perhaps have been avoided long ago.

(Note to my editor: Should the Ladies Auxiliary storm the office, please tell them that I am unable to see them because I'm in way over my head.)

The current Playmaker production is a very enjoyable evening's entertainment. If the play has lost much of its original impact, the appeal of the characters and situations, when burlesked lightly as they are in this revival, are still amusing.

This is not to say, however, that "What Every Woman Knows" is still a good play. It most surely is not — and perhaps the Playmakers should be criticised for selecting a play which is not in itself particularly worthwhile. All the more credit, then, to the cast, which is the finest the Playmakers have assembled in one vehicle during the past two seasons.

Marion Fitz-Simons' characterization of the Comtesse de la Briere was the high point of the evening, and gave the show much of its wit and charm: where most of the other characterizations were appealing and well done, hers was superb.

Her style and sophistication were undeniable, and her wit was perfectly timed. Mrs. Fitz-Simmons' French accent might well have been natural to her, it was so easy and musical. In short, Mrs. Fitz-Simmons is a grand stylist and a fine actress.

This ticklish business of accent seemed to give the best of the cast considerably more trouble than it gave Mrs. Fitz-Simmons. Almost without exception, the Scottish Brogue assumed by the actors was something of a hindrance in places; likewise with Taylor Williams' British speech. Instead of lending grace and music to the speeches, the affected brogue made many words and phrases unintelligible; the effort required to produce the accent was both visible and audible, and thus slightly disconcerting.

As John Shand, the politically ambitious young Scotsman, Robert Ketler did a consistent and highly commendable job; but he never reached the height of naive idealism and enthusiasm which were in the character. Ketler might well have been more fiery and obstreprous, these being the special contributions of youth to obstinate idealism and egoism. Particularly at te beginning of the play, these qualities were lacking; once he had gained success, the character seemed more natural in his less domonstrative attitude.

Carolyn Myers portraval of Maggie Wylie was excellently done. Her scenes with Mrs. Fitz-Simmoons were the most spontaneous and charming in the show; in fact, Miss Myers was the only member of the cast who held her own with the Comtesse. The only criticism is that at times Miss Myers was a bit too theatrical, particularly in her timing and her movement. Too, she lacked the necessary maturity for the role.

Taylor Williams had more trouble than anyone, and little of it through any fault of his own. As an aging but still dashing MP and former lover of the Comtesse, he could not possibly appear plausible; the thought of his having carried on an intrigue with the very grand Comtesse 30 years before was ludicrous. Within the insurmountable limitations, however, Williams did an excellent job, particularly in the last scene.

As Lady Sybil Tenterden, Donna Hastings was quite amusing, although she burlesqued her lines too much to make them convincing. Granted, the whole play might have been done this broadly, but this was not the directors intention. At any rate, despite the fault of Miss Hastings' part, she was so excruciatingly blase and wideeyed that it is impossible not to at least partially forgive her overdoing it.

Harvey Knox, as Maggie Wylie's youngest brother, gets full credit for saving the play from a very slow start. His characterization was comic, and, unlike Miss Hastings', it was comic within the context of the play. His timing was particularly excellent.

The older brother, Ross Baumstone, was not quiet so successful. His delivery was often stiff, and he seemed to have particular difficulty with the accent. Aside from this, his sincere feeling for his sister was quite appealing.

The technical aspects of the show were well handled, particularly in regard to the costumes. Russel Link did some excellent research, and the production is as well dressed as any here in two seasons.

The sets were also good, but they were too basically alike. This is probably due to technical limitations, but it would have been interesting to see designer Tommy Rezzuto's considerable talents used with more variety.

Perhaps the most complimentary thing that can be said about the direction of a play is that it was nowhere to be seen. In the case of the current production, this is largely true. Obviously, Director Harry Davis had to choose the style of the production as a whole, and a good choice he made. Holding his actors to the happy medium seemed to have given Davis some trouble. Mrs. Fitz-Simmons' characterization was as broad a style as the play could contain: in Miss Hastings' overplaying the unfortunate casting of Williams, the director's control was needed.

Lest this review be considered unfavorable, as it is the current public practice to translate qualified praise into damnation, let it be known that "What Every Woman Knows" is a well acted and well presented revival of a creaky piece with a creaky charm all its own.

Men's Glee Club Loyalty Record Makes A Good Christmas Present

By BEN TAYLOR

If correspondence is any indication, the UNC Men's Glee Club has had its prestige boosted tremendously since its performance at the Carolina-Clemson basketball game on Dec. 7.

Letters from all over the U. S. and its possessions have deluged the club's office in Hill Hall, complimenting the group for its initial home television performance. Most of these letters emphasized their laudatory comments with an order for the club's 45" LP record of UNC Loyalty Songs.

President Charles Shoe and Records Chairman Don Gray said that the Glee Club office had received orders for records from places as far away as California, Oregon, New York, Minnesota, Louisiana, Texas and Puerto Rico. Many of the requests stated that the party ordering was using the record as a Christmas gift to loved ones and friends.

A committee of club offices had to call a special meeting Tuesday afternoon in order to mail the mounting mail orders. Each record was jacketed, sandwiched between two stiff pieces of cardboard, enclosed in a manila jacket and shipped to Carolina alumni and friends all over the country.

The Glee Club is now on its second shipment of records, having sold the initial 500 in a matter of weeks.

And mail orders are still pouring in!

The record is encased in a light blue jacket with a background shot of Graham Memorial surrounding the words "UNC Glee Club sings Carolina Songs." A short summary of the history of the Glee Club, its present director, and the six songs recorded therein appears on the reverse side of the jacket.

The thrilling alma mater, "Hark The Sound," is the first number recorded on side one. "Integer Vitae," a well-known ode by Horace set to music, and "Carolina Loyalty Song,'" written by Dr. Carter in 1951, round out the songs on side one.

The flip side contains songs exemplifying the spirit of Carolina. "Old Chapel Hill;" a harmonious number capturing the sentimental attachment that UNC students and alumni feel for "The Village;" "Carolina Fight Song,'" familiar to generations of Tar Heels, and an arrangement of "Dixie'" by former Glee Club member James Chamblee (Class of 1957) round out side two.

The record was cut over a period of months last year with a 55-voice Glee Club. Most of the men who recorded the disc are still with the present 70-member touring organization.

Covering The University Campus

BANQUET

The Wesley Foundation will hold a Christmas banquet this afternoon at 5:45 o'clock at the University Methodist Church. A charge of 50 cents a person will be made to help defray costs, Larkin Kirkman, president, has announced.

CAROLINA QUARTERLY

There will be a meeting of the fiction board of the Carolina Quarterly Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

ART LEAGUE

"The Paintings of Vincent Van Gogh" will be the subject of a color movie to be presented by the University Art League Monday night in the second of its series of lectures for the year.

Dono Hulsker, a high-school exchange student from The Hague, will deliver a short lecture before the movie, which centers around Van Gogh's environs and paintings, and will be available for questioning after the movie.

Hulsker's father produced the movie.

The public is invited to attend the lecture which will be at 7:30 p.m. in Room 210 Gardner Hall.

RHODES INTERVIEWS

Nominees for Rhodes Scholarships from North Carolina colleges and universities will be interviewed here on Wednesday by a six-man state selection committee, meeting in the Morehead Planetarium Building.

The committee, headed by D. Hiden Ramsey of Asheville, has scheduled its first meeting for Tuesday afternoon at 2 p.m. The members will meet informally with the nominees Tuesday night, and hold official interviews Wednesday.

REGISTRATION

Students who have not already done so and plan to register for the spring semester must do so between now and Dec. 17. They should see advisors, get a green form and take it to number one Hanes Hall.

CHRISTMAS CONCERT

A concert of Christmas music will be presented by the Sanctuary Choir and the Junior Choir at the United Congregational Christian Church this afternoon at 5 o'clock.

ORIENTATION COUNSELORS

Those who have served in the past as orientation counselors are urged to contact Jerry Oppenheimer, chairman of the orientation committee, at 6031 or 9460, or Mary Jane Fisher at 8-9083.

Counselors are needed for the orientation program Jan. 29 and 30 preceeding the spring semester, according to Oppenheimer. Second semester classes start Jan. 31.

CANTERBURY CLUB

The Canterbury Club is sponsorin ga dance at the Episcopal Parish House tomorrow from 8 to 10:45 p.m. The public is invited. Those attending have been asked to bring one or two cans of food to put in Christmas boxes for the welfare program.

COED ROOMS

Applications for room reservations for women students are now being received in the office of the dean of women.

All women students must make reservations sometime from today through Dec. 19, according to Dr. Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women.

CANDLELIGHT SERVICE

A Christmas candlelight carol service is planned for 7 o'clock tonight in the sanctuary of the University Methodist Church. The program will include familiar and lesser known carols, as well as the telling of the Christmas story.

Students and faculty members are invited to attend, according to Larkin Kirkman, president of the Wesley Foundation.

COMMUNITY CHURCH

The Community Church Christmas services will be held this morning at 11 o'clock in Hill Music Hall.

The choir, under the leadership of Gene Strassler, will present a program of Christmas music. Included in the program will be carols from several nations. Featured will be the "Fantasia on Christmas Carols" by Ralph Vaughan-Williams with Dr. Everett Hall as baritone soloist.

A brass ensemble will assist the choir and organist at the service, and will start the prelude at 10:30 a.m. The public has been invited.

questioning, "Even at this point I'd have dated him."

Nancy Hamilton, who was sitting at the same table in the library with the state's star witness, added that she heard Payne ask for an apology and Miss Willingham refuse. She said Payne declared he'd get both Brennan and Miss Willingham, then turned and stomped out of the room.

Payne declared he attempted to apologize to Miss Willingham for what he called "my abusive behavior." "She refused," he stated.

Judge Seawell, in his charge to the jury, made it clear that the duty of the state was to prove Payne guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt.'" He said innocence need not be proven.

During the recess when the jury was out the crowd that had packed the courtroom dispersed until the room was less than half full. Lawyers, witnesses and spectators mingled freely, discussing the testimony.

After the jury had announced its decision Payne was swarmed under with congratulators and well-wishers.

Yesterday's Answer

Mermen Subdue Gamecocks, 61-20

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The Carolina Tar Heel varsity swimming team eased through to its third straight win of the season here yesterday handing the South Carolina Gamecocks a 61-20 defeat in the South Carolina pool.

The Tar Heels set three pool records that, added to the three they set against Clemson Friday, gives them six records on their two-day invasion into the Palmetto State.

The first Tar Heel record came in the 400-medley relay. Brent Nash, Wilson Cooper, Paul Wachendorfer and Walt Rose made the distance in 4:15.8 for the mark.

Wachendorfer Wins

Wachendorfer, the highly-regarded Tar Heel merman, took the 200-butterfly with a 2:18 mark and that was good for a record. He swam the event by himself as South Carolina forfeited.

Bill Zickgraff was the other Carolina record-setter as he turned in a time of 52.2 in the 100-yard freestyle.

Carolina lost only one event. Arthur Gaston took first place in the 440-freestyle for SC. He and Glen Green of Carolina were the only competitors in that event.

Other Tar Heel winners were Bill Roth in the 50 free-style, Ned Meekins in the diving event, Nash in the 200-backstroke, Mac Mahaffy in the 200-breaststroke and Pete Reynolds, Ned Meekins, Kelly Maness and Rose in the 400-relay.

Reynolds and Mahaffy paced the Tar Heel scoring with eight points apiece.

The Tar Heels will make their second home appearance against Duke here Tuesday.

THE SUMMARY

400 medley relay — Nash, Cooper, Wachendorfer and Rose (C), 4:15.8 (record).

nolds (C); Myers (SC).

200-butterfly — Wachendorf, 2:18 (record) — SC forfeit.

200-backstroke — Nash (C); Poulmet (SC); Richter (SC), 2:27.

440-freestyle — Gaston (SC), Green (C), 5:48.5.

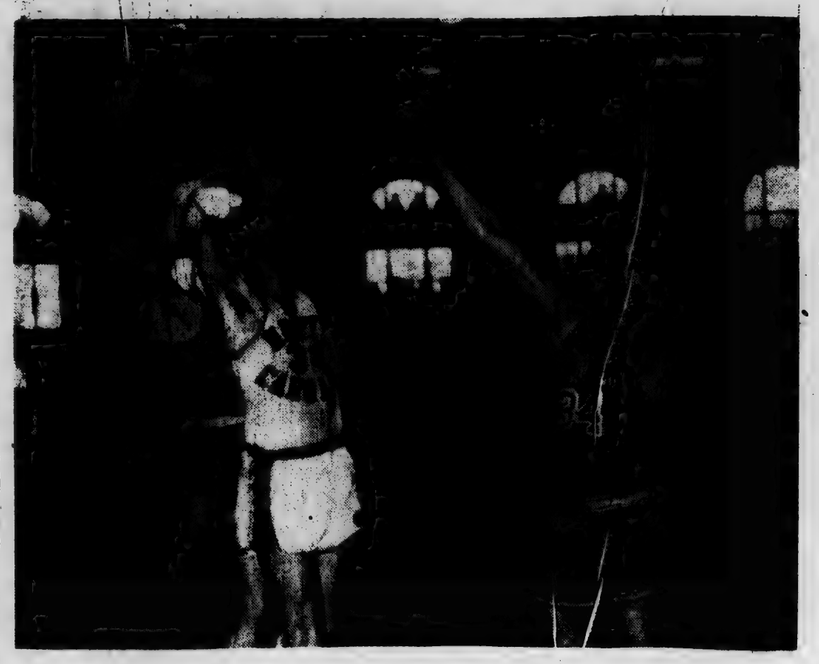
400-relay — Reynolds, Meekins, Manes and Rose (C), 3:57.9.

Frosh Matmen Pin Pfeiffer Team, 27-12



The Carolina freshmen wrestling team put together three pins, two forfeits, and a tie to whip Pfeiffer 27-12 last night at Woollen Gym.

Forfeit Loses

Pfeiffer lost two matches by forfeit. In the 123 and 137 pound classes, Carolina's Walker and Marks picked up the forfeit victories.

Pfeiffer's victories came in the 157 and 167 events. Carolina's David Turnbull was pinned in the first period by Weblor. Pfeiffer's Conger picked up the other pin for the losers when he pinned Frank Elkins in their 167 match.

YESTERDAY'S NOTEBOOK

McGuire Thought SC Smart; Final Stats Give Tar Heels Slight Edge

By BILL KING

The Tar Heels were outscored again in the second half yesterday, 35-34. Least concerned about this is the Tar Heel's coach, Frank McGuire. McGuire is of the opinion that you'll outscore very few teams in both halves. "It's the final score that makes the difference," McGuire reasons.

Lot's of fans wonder exactly what Bob Cunningham is supposed to do when Harvey Salz runs with Tommy Kearns at guard. Actually Cunningham moves to forward but he doesn't have any special position on the court. Yesterday, he moved into the pivot, shot from the side and played out behind the circle while Salz and Kearns brought the ball down. It all depends on the opposing defense.

The majority of the sportswriters who work for morning papers like these afternoon contest. It doesn't work a hardship on deadlines and it gives them more time for other office work at night. McGuire says he likes the afternoon games too.

The Carolina cheerleaders are doing a great job keeping the students noisy. It dosen't take much to induce them to yell. Everybody's so proud of this ball club that they'll even give the refs an occasional cheer. Sportsmanship has been just great during the first two home games.

Final statistics of the UNC-USC game show that the Tar Heels hit shot 57 times and hit 23 for a 40.4 percentage from the floor. South Carolina was 22-57 or 37.5 percentage. From the free throw line, the Tar Heels hit 24 of 32 (75.0) and the Gamecocks 14 of 20 (70.0).

McGuire said after the game yesterday that he thought his club's man to man defense was much better than it was against Furman in Charlotte Thursday night.

The Tar Heel coach was talking about his stragedy this season. "I try to keep three tall men in there all the time," he said. "When Salz goes in, I move Cunningham to forward and that gives us more height under the basket."

McGuire thought that his opponent, Frank Johnson played it smart by hanging onto the ball in the first half. "They played us in our gym and they didn't give us the ball right off. That way we start with nothing. That's smart basketball." McGuire had a feeling the Gamecocks would employ that type ball and he was all set to go into a full court press ha dthey continued to play possession.

Carolina's next opponent is Minnesota in the first round of the Kentucky Classics, Friday. McGuire hasn't scouted the Golden Gophers too much but knows their style. "They're tough," he says. "They've got a very fine ball club, undefeated in their first three games."

The Smiling Irishman stated that he was still taking them one at a time. "We haven't given much thought to Minnesota. We'll start working for them now."

Asked if he thought Kentucky would be tough in the finals, McGuire smiled: "That's mighty optimistic. We've got to beat Minnesota first and Kentucky has to get by West Virginia."

SC but Kepley ran the margin to 20 again with a quick basket.

After that the Gamecocks chopped away at the lead but the Tar Heels were able to beat down any serious challenge the rest of the way.

The South Carolina scoring attack was paced by tricky little guard, Ray Pericola with 19 points. He was followed by Callahan who collected 16.

Pfeiffer JV's Are Victims Of Carolina Freshmen, 101-61

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina Tar Babies won their third game of the season here today by beating the Pfeiffer junior varsity to the tune of 101-61.

The freshmen showed both depth and strength as the second unit played a majority of the game and still went over the century marks. It was hit with only 49 seconds remaining in the contest when Russ Hollers sank two free throws to give the Tar Babies an even hundred.

The game was featured by sharp rebounding and lightning fast-breaking by the Carolina yearlings. They led at 16-1 and 27-4, and after the first five minutes Pfeiffer was never anywhere close to making a ball game of it. The count at the half was 44-24.

5 In Double Figures

The high scorer for the game was Carpenter of Pfeiffer with 15. But Carolina placed 5 men in double figures—Jim Donahue had 14, Russ Hollers 14, Doug Moe 12, Lenny Beck 12, and Roland Longnecker 12. Following them were: Bill Hart 9, Billy Dunlap 8, Charles Baker 8, John Hickey 7, Phil Matthews 2, Tam Shuford 2, and Bob Deaton 2.

Fast Break

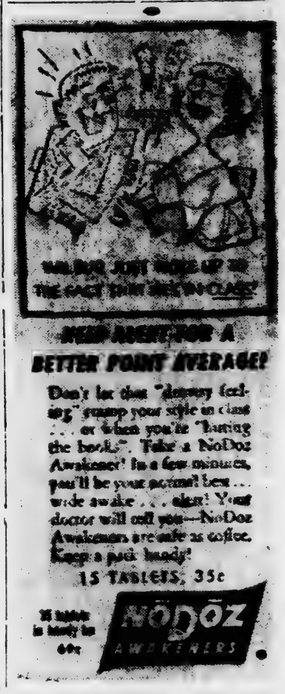
The first unit guards—Shuford and Hart—and the second unit guards—Hollers and Beck—worked a devestating fast-break to near perfection as they raced up and the down the hardwood, pouring in the points. Centers Donahue and Baker practically owned the backboards all afternoon. All the forwards performed very well on driving and outside shooting.

The frosh played before a practically deserted Woollen Gymnasium but there was absolutely no lack of spirit on their part. When the final horn was approaching and the Tar Babies were pushing toward the century mark, the bench was alive with shouting and encouragement. Coach Ken Rosemond has shown that he has a squad that can run with the best of them or lay back and play possession ball.

Powerful Terps Top UNC Matmen, 32-0

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—A powerful Maryland wrestling team shut out their Carolina visitors here yesterday 32-0. The Terp grapplers won all eight matches, taking four of them by falls.

The Terps, who are the Atlantic Coast Conference wrestling champions, won their second straight mat victory by taking the Tar Heels. With three conference champs in their lineup, the hosts made quick work of Carolina.



Conference Champs

In all of the middle weight divisions, Carolina wrestlers were able to avoid being pinned. In the 137 pound class, Perrin Henderson was edged by Santo 7-6. At 147 and 177, conference champs Nick Biondi and Dick Dean decisioned J. W. Welborn and Ray Russell respectively. David Atkinson was edged by Sal Amato, Maryland's other champ, 6-5.

THE SUMMARY

123—Osborn (M) pinned Champlin (2:53); 130—VanAuken (M) pinned Rhyne (3:57); 137—Santo (M) decisioned Henderson (7-6); 147—Biondi (M) decisioned Welborn (8-1); 157—Besnier (M) decisioned Hoke (5-0); 167—Amato (M) decisioned Atkinson (6-5); 177—Dean (M) pinned Russell (1:08); Heavyweigh — Marinelli (M) pinned Cooper (1:37).

Cards Win By 31-27

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14 (AP) — Quarterback Lamar McHan tossed touchdown passes of 42, 58 and 34 yards to fleet Woodley Lewis as the Chicago Cardinals won a wild-scoring National Football League game from the Philadelphia Eagles 31-27 at Connie Mack Stadium today.

The Cardinals and the Eagles, meeting with news still reverberating that the coaches of both squads were due to be fired, put on what easily qualified as a television sports spectacular. The two Eastern Conference also rans traded touchdowns and field goals throughout the cold grey afternoon.

Bobby Thomason lost the duel of passes of McHan, although the Philadelphia quarterback field two touchdown aerials and scored a TD himself. Thomason completed 13 of 19 passes for 257 yards while McHan collected 12 for 13 and 253 yards.

Huntington, Robinson And Young To Handle Symposium Publicity

Three Carolina students have been appointed by the Executive Committee of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs to head up the publicity for the organization. They are Charlie Hunington, Dick Robinson and Davis Young.

Huntington is the chairman of the committee, while Robinson and Young will serve in the capacity of assistant chairmen, the former in charge of leaflets and posters, while the latter will deal in newspaper publicity.

The purpose of the committee is as its name indicates, publicity. It will be charged with distributing posters, leaflets, brochures posters and with keeping local and state news agencies supplied with information concerning the progress of the Symposium.

Huntington is a junior from Florence, S. C. He is chairman of the Honor Council Commission, a member of the University Party, former assistant floor leader in the legislature and a member of Chi Psi fraternity.

Robinson is a sophomore from Greensboro and a member of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. He is in the Interfraternity Council, the student legislature and the University Party.

Young is a freshman from Princeton, N. J. Aside from his Symposium activities, he has been actively engaged throughout the year as a member of the Daily Tar Heel staff.

Huntington was unable to be reached for comment, but Robinson and Young both gave statements to The Daily Tar Heel. Robinson explained: "My committee will not only get posters and leaflets around the Carolina campus, but also see that they are distributed to every major university in the state. We will also distribute programs each night of the Symposium week."

Young added: "Those working in conjunction with me will be noticeably active from now until late March. We will give stories on each committee, background articles on the personalities who will participate in the Symposium and periodical progress reports from the General Symposium."

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt To Appear Here At State Conference On Jan. 12

Good Ol' Charlie Brown: He Got The Editor's Vote

All three comic strips—Peanuts, Pogo and Lil' Abner—will be included in The Daily Tar Heel, according to Doug Eisele, editor.

Contrary to what Eisele had said in an editorial Sunday, all three comic strips will appear in the paper, starting probably after Christmas.

In his editorial Eisele said that all three strips would take up too much room on the editorial page. He said that an election would be conducted to determine which two of the three, students would prefer to have run in the Tar Heel.

In reversing his decision, Eisele said that by putting the titles of the strips to the left and by a tighter make-up on the editorial page, the three strips would take up only one more inch in length than the two comic strips do now.

Eisele said he decided to include all three after a discussion with the printing shop that publishes the newspaper. The printing shop indicated to Eisele that under a revised make-up, all three strips would take up only one additional inch.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT
To Speak At Carolina

Press Conference Set On Day Of Appearance

By ANN FRYE

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of the late president, will be on campus Sunday, Jan. 12, for a public lecture, press conference and informal discussion groups.

Her visit here is being sponsored jointly by the Orange County chapter of the American Association for the United Nations (AAUN) and the UNC chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations (CCUN).

Mrs. Roosevelt will appear on campus in conjunction with a statewide organizational conference for the CCUN. The local chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, the only formal chapter in North Carolina, is seeking to help organize other chapters on North Carolina college campuses at the conference.

The public lecture will be given by Mrs. Roosevelt at 8 p. m. in Memorial Hall Jan. 12. A press conference for the former UN delegate has been tentatively set for 2 to 2:45 p. m. Jan. 12.

Mrs. Roosevelt will hold an informal discussion from 3 to 3:30 p. m. the same day. This informal discussion will probably concern the Collegiate Council for the United Nations and will be of major interest to delegates attending the entire organization conference for the CCUN.

The local chapter of CCUN has invited two delegates from each college campus in the state for the conference.

Co-ordinator of the conference is Bill Sugg, a member of the Seminar Committee of the local YMCA-YWCA [illegible] public appearance here.

Ed Crow, chairman of the Seminar Committee, and Sugg yesterday released the tentative schedule for the conference and Mrs. Roosevelt's lecture. Crow is also a special representative on the National Board of the CCUN.

The organizational conference for CCUN chapters in North Carolina will open on Saturday, Jan. 11, with orientation talks and small discussion groups on what CCUN is.

In addition to Mrs. Roosevelt's talks, the delegates to the conference will have a special briefing Jan. 12 from 3:30 to 4:30 p. m. by C. M. Eichelberger, executive director of the American Association for the United Nations. Eichelberger is expected to talk about the Collegiate Council for the United Nations in relations to the American Association for the UN.

The CCUN has been explained as an educational organization which seeks to promote an understanding of the structure, aims and accomplishments of the United Nations, in addition to encouraging an awareness of United States policy in the UN.

UNC AFROTC Will Initiate Flight Program

Today the Carolina AFROTC will initiate a program to give seven senoirs who have qualified for pilot training approximately 35 hours of flying time.

The senoirs will fly from Horace Williams Airport at Raleigh. They will be instructed by a private concern and will fly a Cessna 172 rated at 145 horsepower.

Cadet Dwight E. Brown of Asheboro will be the first to fly. The program is expected to be run during most of next semester. At the completion of the [illegible] training entered the AFROTC as freshmen or as juniors if they were veterans. They will serve five years in the Air Force after graduation.

This is th first time that flight training has been offered to the cadets at UNC.

Luther L. Walker, a freshman from Rockingham, has been selected the "Air Force Cadet of the Month" for November in the AFROTC detachment here.

The award is given every month to the "outstanding" freshman, sophomore or junior Air Force ROTC cadet. The selection was made by a board of five cadet officers.

In competition with four other cadets Walker won his distinction by demonstrating his knowledge of drill and air science when subjected to rapid-fire interrogation by cadet officers.

IN THE INFIRMARY

The following students were in the infirmary yesterday:

Mary Moore, Roberta Chapin, Roger Foushee, Robert Bernhardt, Charles Reynor, Richard Smith, Robert Easley, Wendell Harper, Daniel Rader, Bill Allen, Julian Smith and Arthur Fountain.

Israeli Ambassador

Carolina Forum Speaker, Abba Eban, Considered Very Forceful Diplomat

By ED ROWLANDS

Abba Eban, ambassador from Israel to the United States and permanent representative to the United Nations, will speak here Jan. 8 in the second presentation of the Carolina Forum, Forum Chairman Jim Holmes has announced.

Holmes said Eban, usually an extemporaneous speaker, has not disclosed even the bare outlines of his talk. The speech is scheduled for 8 p. m. in Hill Hall.

The first forum presentation this year was Norman Thomas, former candidate for the presidency of the United States.

Eban is generally recognized as one of the most eloquent and forceful diplomats serving any country in the United States or the United Nations.

He first achieved international prominence in May, 1948, with a powerful and persuasive address presenting the case for Jewish statehood before the Politcial and security Committee of the United Nations. With the admission of Israel to the United Nations a year later, he was appointed permanent representative of the Israeli delegation.

In September, 1950, Eban presented his credentials as Ambassador of Israel to the United States. Then 35 years old, he was the youngest official to hold a position of such rank in Washington. Although the varied and complex problems facing Israel are sufficient to keep any man busy in either position, Eban has carried out both jobs with distinction.

Born in South Africa in 1915, Eban was raised in England. After graduating with honors from Cambridge where he specialized in Oriental languages, he was appointed to the faculty of Pembroke College, Cambridge University, as an authority on Hebrew, Arabic and Persian literature.

In 1940 he went to Jerusalem with the Allied forces' Liason Headquarters to secure participation of Jewish volunteers in special missions in the Near East and Europe. Later he became chief instructor at the Middle East Arab center conducted by the British army in Jerusalem.

Eban remained in Jerusalem after the war to enter the service of the Jewish agency, remaining with it until the establishment of the state of Israel.

Eban has been awarded honorary degrees by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, New York University, Boston University and the University of Maryland.

ORIENTATION COUNSELORS

Those who have served in the past as orientation counselors are urged to contact Jerry Oppenheimer, chairman of the orientation committee, at 6031 or 9460, or Mary Jane Fisher at 8-9083.

Counselors are needed for the orientation program Jan. 29 and 30 preceding the spring semester, according to Oppenheimer. Second semester classes start Jan. 31.

Agreement

BERLIN, Dec. 15. (AP) — Defense Secretary Neil McElroy predicted tonight a U. S.-British agreement to establish medium rocket bases in Britain will be signed shortly.

Arriving here from talks with British leaders, McElroy told reporters "We see nothing that should interfere with the successful conclusion of the agreement."

McElroy did not go into detail but reports in London said there will be at least four rocket bases. There will be under British control and one under the United States.

Writer Analyzes History, Evolution Of Carolina Symposium

By DAVIS YOUNG

In less than four months the Carolina Symposium will present its 1958 program to the campus, state and nation. This is one of the foremost organizations of its type in the country and a closer analysis of the pertinent work that it is accomplishing now, what it has done and that which the future will reveal is important to a complete understanding of the Symposium's purpose.

Stephen Vincent Benet once stated: "There is a crisis in our national life and it is now. It is not tommorrow or the day after tommorrow, but now. How long it will last, not one of us can say. But, while it lasts, it will touch the thoughts, the acts, and the day-to-day lives of us all."

The recognition of the criticial situations we must constantly face as a nation has been one of the integral works of the Carolina Symposium and its parent organization the Institute of Human Relations. These two organizations have seen as Benet stated, the crises which touch our thoughts, acts and lives.

But the Institute and Symposium have done more than merely acknowledge the presence of our imperfections and problems. They have gone further than a mere dissection by offering concrete suggestions for our improvement through participation of outstanding leaders in various fields and through educating those who have come to listen and hear.

The reputation of the old Institute and the present Symposium is easily seen through the willingness of such outstanding men as Dr. Frank Graham, Ralph Bunche and General Carlos Romulo to participate. It is considered a high honor to be asked to partake in the activities of Symposium Week.

The first Quadrennial Institute on Human Relations was held in 1927 under the auspices of the YWCA. It started a strong tradition Institute-Symposium affairs by presenting the now standard three part program. It concentrated on relations and human elements in industry.

Although its speakers were not as renowned as those now invited, they represented a wide cross section of outstanding academic and clerical leaders. In retrospect it is easily seen that in an evaluation of this initial program its chief significance is that it was the first such venture at Carolina and would eventually evolve into the important and powerful Symposium of the 1950s.

In May of 1931 the Institute held its second program with much broader participation and interest. There were 19 guest speakers, 22 public meetings, 94 classroom seminars and a general attendance of over 25,000.

A similar program was held in 1935 as the third Quadrennial Institute on Human Relations. However, the 1953 committee recommended that in the future the Institutes be held on a biennial basis due to the rapidity in which the world conditions were changing.

With World War II becoming imminent, the 1937 and 1939 Institutes concentrated their efforts on examining our international relations and educational system. In 1941 the Institute covered the most pertinent of all problems facing us in this trying era: "The United States in the World Crisis."

Many political and diplomatic leaders from both the national and international scene participated in this event.

The seventh Institute in 1943 discussed "Total Victory and Global Peace." It presented a careful analysis of a "review and study of our domestic and international problems and responsibilities in the War, in Post-war Reconstruction and in the Peace."

On April 8 of that year, America's Town Meeting of the Air kicked off the '43 program from the UNC campus featuring Sen. Joseph Ball of Minnesota and John Flynn, noted New York journalist. Other speakers included Clarence Dykstra, former chairman of the Selective Service Board and ex-Sen. Josh Lee.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated in 1945: "As we dedicate our total efforts to the task of winning this war we must never lose sight of the fact that victory is not only an end in itself, but in a large sense, victory offers us the means of achieving the goal of lasting peace and a better way of life."

The Institute of that year realistically recognized the problems we would face after the most terrible war known to man. Such specitic topics as "The Stabilization of the World Economy" were discussed at length. Sen. J. W. Fullbright of Arkansas and Wendell Berge, assistant attorney general of the United States Justice Department were on hand for this program.

The termination of the 1945 Institute marked the end of an era at Carolina for during the next 11 years nothing was to be heard from this organization. However, in 1956, after this prolonged absence, the Institute on Human Relations was revived as the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs. The '56 Symposium program examined "Old Problems in the New South," "The Emerging World Community-Problems and Prospects," and "The United States in the World Today."

And now in 1958, we have prospects for a most pertinent, educational and provocative program. As outlined in the pre-Symposium brochure it will once again be presented in three parts: "Physical Survival," "Cultural Survival," and "American Values in Crisis."

Sonny Hallford, chairman of the 1958 Symposium had this to say concerning the program: "The 1958 Symposium is attempting to focus the attention of the University community on the key issue of our times - survival.

In subject matter the speakers and contributors to the Symposium will consider: "The threats and promises of contemporary science, the political strategies of peace and war, the strengths and weaknesses of contemporary education techniques, the relationships of American cultural patterns to other in the world, and the reasons why survival has value in human, democratic, religious and ethical terms.

"In the course of Symposium week in March a great variety of distinguished speakers will come to the University campus for seminars, classroom discussions and formal addresses.

"They will offer a variety of view points. We expect broad participation in these activities by students, faculty and citizens in what we hope will be a most stimulating series of experiences."

The 1958 Symposium will be the tenth such program presented on he University campus in the past 31 years. Participation for this year's program has come from a wide variety of sources: from the office of Chancellor Aycock to the general student body.

Aid, both in a monetary and labor sense has been contributed by almost every social and service organization on campus. With such widespread interest and a tentative list of outstanding speakers, the 1958 Symposium on Public Affairs cannot be anything but a success.

Writer's note—(I should like to acknowledge the help of William Patterson and the staff of library's Carolina Room and the Executive Committee of the 1958 Symposium in composing and compiling the material necessary for this article.)

Peanuts, And All The Others

We have, after all, found a way to add "Peanuts" to the comic strips of The Daily Tar Heel and still retain the other two comics presently published — L'il Abner and Pogo.

The feasibility of such a move was made clear Monday when we became aware that by closer make-up on the editorial page, the addition of "Peanuts" there would slash only approximately 16 lines from the editorial page.

And more people, we felt, would rather retain Pogo and L'il Abner, with the addition of Peanuts, than those extra 16 lines of editorial column copy.

There will be little noticeable change on the editorial page make-up. The comics now consume five column inches (vertical measurement) of space, over a width of four columns. After Peanuts is added, the comics will consume six column inches (vertical measurement) of the same four column width.

Consequently, there will be no election today, as we had previously planned. And as soon as business transactions are completed for the addition of Peanuts to the paper (probably beginning after the Christmas holidays), Charlie Brown will make his appearance in The Daily Tar Heel.

It is noteworthy to point out here the role which the GMAB Polls Committee played in securing Peanuts for The Daily Tar Heel. It was through that committee's survey of the campus that a broad sentiment among students for Peanuts was brought to bear on the minds of student legislators.

The polls' committee survey showed, in fact, that some 80 per cent of the Carolina students it contacted were in favor of adding Plain Little Peanuts to The Daily Tar Heel. The legislature showed its approval in passing a bill December 12 appropriating funds for the comic.

We still uphold our argument that the editorial page should not become a comic page. And with other modifications in the current make-up it may be possible to offer the same space for editorial column comment henceforth as has been offered with only two comics on the page.

The only noticeable changes on the page will be the placing of comic titles to the left of instead atop the comic strips. Too, the three comics will be pushed closer together to conserve some space which is now being wasted.

If for some reason now unforseen we find it impractical or impossible to publish all three comics on the editorial page, then we can make alterations to return to the current practice of printing only two comics there. But presently we don't see why that should happen.

The thing is at least worth a try. In the end whatever is best for the students and the newspaper will be the practice.

Charlotte And Miss Counts

The Carolinas-Virginia Region of National Students Association has boldly asserted the unquestionable role of high school students in solving the current race problems of the south.

The association's regional conference, convening in Raleigh last weekend, passed a resolution urging the student body president of Charlotte's Harding High School to invite a humiliated Negro girl back to classes there.

It based its proposal partly, the conference said, on the fact that Dr. Frank P. Graham was given a standing ovation at Harding High School after he had suggested in an address there that the Negro girl, 17-year-old Dorthy Counts, be invited back to school.

Miss Counts, one of the first Negroes to enter a previously all-white high school in North Carolina, voluntarily withdrew from the school after being subjected to severe humiliation by Charlotte students and adults in the wake of her admission.

The ovation given Dr. Graham after his "liberal" address points out a fact which long has been seen by many people in the south: young people are less prone to prejudices than their forefathers, and are willing to boldly meet the trying times which have been thrust upon them.

The young people of today are the shock absorbers of the grave racial question. If they do not bear the brunt of a troublesome integration, then their children, or their children's children will. What is not succeeded in today will be saved for tomorrow, but with more Little Rocks and more Clinton, Tenn.'s, to add to an already difficult undertaking.

No one denies that mixture of the races in our public schools of today will not be without incident. The fact has shown itself. But a grave American principle is at stake and eventually will show itself in the rightful indiscrimination of institutions on all levels of learning.

To that end the students—who, after all, are in the midst of the struggle—should play some role in its solution. To fight for a man who is fighting with you is one thing; to fight for a man who is not in agreement with you is another. And that, we feel, is what the student role boils down to.

Southern parents long bred in the victuals of prejudice too often find it a food distasteful to their offspring. Then they wave the banner of continued segregation, failing to impress the minds of an understanding younger set which long since has accepted the American tradition of equality.

That, if a standing ovation can be taken as a yardstick, is precisely the situation in Charlotte. Even John Kasper and his White Citizens Council could not make a lasting impression on the minds of a free-thinking student body.

Rather, when the time to be counted, the students stood up for what is right and what eventually will be, and they did it free of adult harassment and demonstration which often makes bigger fools of older people than of the young. The students have shown themselves the real men in facing the problem.

It now would be well for Charlotte's adult leadership to take stock of the wishes of the Harding student body. It also would be well for students to face up to their true convictions, and stand firm on the wishes which they as students have expressed.

We doubt that Dorothy Counts would return to Harding High School even if invited. But to be asked back to the classrooms from which she left because of riotous demonstrations and public humiliation, would be a long step forward for Charlotte and the South in the solution of their racial problems.

Charlotte, if it is truly the progressive city which it proclaims to be, will soon come to realize that. Little Winston-Salem and tiny Greensboro already have behaved maturely in their approach to the problem.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

Women Stay; Phi Society 'Saved Lives'

WHIT WHITFIELD

The Philanthropic Literary Society has just saved its own life, maybe without knowing it. Last Tuesday night a bill was debated calling for the "immediat removal of all coeds from the Carolina Campus." Little did they know that the coeds do not want to go and that the male students don't relish the idea either.

The vote on the bill was reported by The Daily Tar Heel as 8-0. This means one of several things: Either the DTH reporter made a mistake, or Delegate Coolidge was not eligible to vote (sponsor of the bill), or he didn't have the courage to vote his convictions.

In speaking for his bill, Coolidge said that the "pettieoat brigade . . . had hindered 'Carolina Gentlemen' scholastically." This may be true, but we have a hunch that the ones who have been hindered have not minded it at all. They may even desire to be hindered a little more. Not only this, but the ones who haven't been hindered at all are dying to be hindered as soon as possible.

He further stated that Carolina is a party school and that it is producing "mental midgets." It might be that he is not getting invitations to the parties and has some doubtful feelings about his own mental capacity.

Delegate Jacobs said that coeds were a "threat to the security of males." The word "security" is another of those abstractions which can be construed to mean most anything that the author so desires, so what kind of argument is this? Jacobs could not possibly be reflecting his own insecurity with coeds. Definitely not.

He said later that some students spend $35 to $45 per week on women. A scant knowledge of human nature is all that is necessary to refute this statement. People with a great deal of money did not get it by being so philanthropic, and people who don't have a great deal of money could never find $35 - $45 per week for coeds. Per year would be a better guess, except that it might be an overestimate.

Jacobs also said that "Women come here to get men to marry and support them." This is axiomatic — a universal problem which men have been facing since the dawn of time.

The whole affirmative argument reminds us of the story of the fox who desired a cluster of delicious grapes, but as he was unable to reach them he decided that they were obviously sour and not worth eating any way. That's about par for the course.

Education IV: Educators Needed; Responsibility Lies With Public

Every year, as regularly as Labor Day, in the late Summer teachers apply for higher wages. The populace expects this, and reflects on this in the manner of "Ho, Hum, the teachers want another raise." The teachers do not get their raise; in fact, the teachers almost never get their raise. The public pays much less attention to the teachers than they do to Labor Day.

The trouble is that the public should pay attention to the teacher, for the teacher is one key to a strong democracy. Every teacher lost to business because of low wages in the teaching profession is a blow to a strong, capable democracy.

The teacher is needed, and needed in quality and quantity. They are needed to help with the task of stimulating initiative and individuality.

The more individaual attention the student receives early in his educational career, the more chance his individuality will be fostered. The less attention he gets, the more chance there is for him to fall back on the group.

The country needs more individuals, and the country needs more teachers to stimulate those individuals.

This is not a job for women who believe the teaching profession is an interim job between their college education and their marriage. It must be handled by people who are dedicated to teaching, no matter if after a certain time they must drop out of the profession to assume a role as partner in marriage. The teacher must be dedicated, and this type of dedication must be rewarded.

This stimulation must take place early in the student's career, for it is at this time that attitudes are shaped and dispositions are molded. It is at this time that love of learning can be stimulated or completely crushed. It is at this time that the child can begin to recognize his potential as an individual, rather than his potential as one insignificant member of the group.

It is at this early age too, when women make the most effective teachers, for at this age children have not been emotionally weaned. It is then the woman teacher's responsibility to wean the child away from the protective aspects of the group, to foster the love of learning, to stimulate his individuality, and to start him on the road of being a creative, critical person.

It is for this reason that an abnormal amount of dedication and individual attention is necessary. It is this idea of dedication that must be instilled in teachers, for their personality can shape a good deal of the child's future. It is this type of attention that is demanded of the teacher, so that every facet of the child's personality and make-up can be made best use of by the child.

It is for the reason of lack of attention that any reversion to the old "Little Red Schoolhouse" idea will fail, for although it provides an opportunity for advancement at a natural rate, it does not provide the guidance and stimulation so necessary. It is here that the teacher fits in.

However, the above should not be taken as a compliment to the present school system, for the present school system is wholly inadequate, antiquated, and contrary to the stimulation of individuality. As has been said before, most students are held down to or held up to the "Golden Mean,' which is no more than tarnished brass.

There must be then some other system which will combine the good qualities of both systems. It must be able to both do the job of letting the student proceed at the rate that he is able to handle, and give the student the individual attention that he needs. There can be such a system; it will take money, it will take time, but it can be accomplished.

The first step on the road to this is the arousing of the public's interest in education. The second step is getting the public to devote time and money to the betterment of American education. The last step is the creation of a better school system to supplant the inadequate one that now exists.

It will take time and money, but to have a responsible, strong democracy, the citizens must have the interest and the courage to realize that it does not run by itself. The product, a good, efficient democracy, is the result of of much hard labor and expense.

There is a great need now for this type of labor and expense.

Genius & Madness Of Human's Mind

FRANK CROWTHER

In last Sunday's New York Times there appeared an extremely interesting article concerning the association of genius and madness .

Dr. Peter Giovacchini, assistant professor of clinical psychiatry at the University of Illinois, reportedly has shown that there is a possible connection between madness and genius in his treatment of a young Nobel Prize winning physicist.

The scientist presented himself as suffering from such psychotic-like symptoms as perceiving reality in a distorted fashion and a preoccupation with delusions and hallucinations. There were also symptoms indicating feelings of estrangement, as if his mind and body were separated.

The creative process, he said, has often been associated with mental disturbances that may be an autonomous, independent process, not necessarily associated with psychosis or neurosis. This ability to create, he noted, can be defined as an expression of the ego functioning at the highest level of its efficiency and flexibility, consisting of a balance between the unconscious, or instinctual, and logical thought processes.

Dr. Robert Linder, the late psychoanalyst, described another case which parallels the aforementioned study in his story "The Jet-Propelled Couch." Dr. Linder was analyzing a young physicist from one of the governmental projects in the Southwest who had created another world to which he would escape for days or weeks at a time. The man was completely mad, and his very life was sustained wholly by his madness. After more than a year of analysis, Dr. Linder realized that in order to separate the physicist from his madness it would be necessary for the doctor to enter his patient's fantasy world and, from that position, pry him loose from the psychosis.

In the ensuing weeks, Dr. Linder became so fascinated with this "other world," that he almost completely forgot what his original purpose had been. One day when the scientist came in for his usual hour on the couch, and the doctor anxiously solicited some further notes on the astronomical structure of their fantasy world. He noticed that his patient was upset and slightly irritated. Finally, the physicist blurted out that he thought the whole business was ridiculous and that the only reason he kept furnishing additional material was that he had found Dr. Linder so enchanted—almost possessed—by the second world. The patient had actually been afraid to break the doctor's illusion.

At the end of the story, Dr. Linder said, ". . . as I listen from my chair behind the couch, . . . I know that my chair and the couch are separated only by a thin line." Here is an example of a case where the primitive, psychotic forces of one man's mind—a man of extreme creative talent — were transferred to the normally realistic structure of another.

The implications of this are at the same time wildly exciting and morbidly terrifying.

Might not—in the near or distant future—a certain human being, either by accident or deliberately, stumble into the infinite depths of the "Jungle" of the mind, into the "nightside of life," into that mysterious prison that Van Gogh called "horrible,, horrible, utterly horrible cage."—might not this being discover a way of releasing ro recording whatever he finds there? Suppose this man is psychotic. And supose this psychotic, through pure creative theory, stumbles into the darkest secret of our nuiverse —or another, for that matter?

C. G. Jung remarked: "The work in process becomes the poet's fate and determines his psychic development. It is not Goethe who creates Faust, but Faust which creates Goethe." Knowing that the human being today utilizes less than 10% of his total brain capacity, who knows what lurks in the virgin territories of the mind. (And, technically, we don't even know if brain and mind are the same.) Morton Prince so well observed "that we know tooo little about the mechanisms of thought to draw wide generalizations or to dogmatize."

Possibly, one day, some genius—and we hope a non-psychotic—will find the certain combination of keys and open the doors of the one correct passageway to the cloistered sanctuary of mind and suddenly find himself in that "horrible, horrible, utterly horrible cage." Will what he finds be so frightening, or will it reveal all that man has sought throughout existence?

The University Club has come to a very good place, to stop and take stock of its work in the first part of the school year 1957-58. There have been some notable efforts on the part of the club members who represent the entire student body. There have been some singular successes among these efforts, such as the Homecoming weekend activities. To you and to many others on campus and off, we the officers of the University Club owe a sincere debt of gratitude. We thank you and we also look forward to the rest of the year with the same spirit and enthusiasm with which we began.

Glee Club, Choral Club Plan Concert Tonight

The annual Christmas Concert, given jointly by the UNC Men's Glee Club and the Chapel Hill Choral Club, will be presented tonight at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall. Dr. Joel Carter, director of the Men's Glee Club, will lead the two groups in the program.

The concert will consist of two sections, the first by the Choral Club and the second by the Glee Club. Later the audience will join in on traditional carols.

The Choral Club will begin the program with Camille Saint-Saens' "Christmas Oratorio." Choral Club soloists on this selection will be: sopranos, Gladys Teague, Barbara Peacock, and Quillian White; mezzo-sopranos, Dolores Edwards and Inge Rader; altos, Marilyn Zschau and Helen Jones; tenors, James King and Gene Strassler; basses, Roy Sommerfeld, Everett Hall, and Edgar vom Lehn. Accompanying the two groups will be Suzann Davis and Emily Kellam, harpists, and Lee Bostian, organist.

The "Oratorio" will be followed by four French Christmas songs and a fifth century Gloria, written by Dufay. The Choral Club will present three carols: Pendleton's Noel de Frere Jacques, Gevaert's arrangement of Le Sommeil de l'Enfant, and Davis's arrangement of Pat-a-pan.

The Glee Club will open its program with a fifteenth century Ave Maria by Arcadelt. Davison's arrangement of the folk carol, Bring a Torch, Jeannette Isabella, will be followed by Thou Must Torch, Jeannette Isabella, will be Leave Thy Lowly Dwelling, from the "L'Enfance du Christ," by Hector Berlioz. The conclusion of the formal program will be the singing of Babe Divine, arranged by Fox-Strangeways.

The audience will then join the Glee Club and Choral Club in singing many familiar Christmas Carols.

After the performance the groups will go caroling around the campus with any other persons who wish to go.

Tri Delts Introduce Pledges

By MARY ALYS VOORHEES

Twirling skirts, long dangling earrings and music in a yuletide mood set the tempo Friday night in the Carolina Inn Ballroom for the annual Tri Delt Pledge Dance.

However, the highlight of the evening came at 10 p. m. when the 1957 Pledge Class and their escorts were introduced. As their names were announced by Ray Jefferies, master of ceremonies, each pledge and her date stepped into the spotlight and joined the other pledges to form a triangle or the Greek letter, Delta.

Dressed in billowing white gowns, the pledges carried a bouquet of yellow carnations tied with baby blue satin ribbon and encircled with a silver triangle.

After each pledge had been introduced and the triangle had been formed, the girls joined together to sing one of the sorority's songs.

Immediately after the ceremony, with background music by the Ambassadors, a no-break dance was held in honor of the pledges and their dates.

Intermission followed shortly thereafter, at which time refreshments were served from a table in one end of the ballroom. Arrangement of red carnations flanked by five-branched candelabra holding lighted tapers, decorated the table, which was overlaid with a white linen cloth.

A huge red ring was suspended from the center of the ballroom and filled with mistletoe, and Christmas wreaths were placed at intervals throughout the ballroom.

Alpha Delta Pi

The girls at the ADPi House had a supper party last Thursday night with the Pikas . . .

Friday afternoon they joined the Phi Kapp's from Duke in giving a party for some children in Durham.

Yesterday they and the Chi Phi's gave a party for orphans and then enjoyed a party and dinner afterwards.

Tonight the ADPi's are having their annual Pledge and Big Sister-Little Sister party.

This sorority also has made big plans for the weekend following the Christmas holidays, Jan. 3 and 4. They are having their initiation weekend. Activities will include a dance on Friday night at the Chapel Hill Country Club with the Embers providing the band music. Also on Saturday, the big event will be a party at the Washington-Duke Hotel in Durham with the Sigma Ni's.

Pi Beta Phi

Tuesday night the Pi Phi's started off an enjoyable week with a covered dish party for the pledges. Sunday night they celebrated with a Christmas party and decorated their tree. Last night they had their Big Sister-Little sister party and went caroling afterwards. Tonight the Pi Phi's will join the Sigma Nu's in entertaining orphan children at a party.

Chi Omega

The Chi O's enjoyed a cocktail and dinner party with the Dekes Thursday night. Last night the sorority and the Phi Gams gave a party for orphans. Tonight the Chi Omega girls are having a Christmas party.

Kentucky Is Next Stop For Champs

It's on to Kentucky for the nation's number one basketball team and here the Tar Heels are destined to meet their stiffest tests to date this season in the Kentucky Classics Friday and Saturday.

The winning streak, now stretched across 36 straight games, goes on the line first against an undefeated Minnesota team Friday night. Should the Tar Heels win this one, it'll be the finals against the winner of Kentucky-WestVirginia.

All eyes will be trained on proceedings out in Lexington. Everybody is interested to see just how the Carolina sophs will respond to strong intersectional competition. A lot may be deducted on the performance of the Tar Heels in this tourney and the Dixie Classics which begins in Raleigh on Dec. 26.

Much May Be Determined By Class Resumption Date

The fate of the McGuiremen by the time classes resume should be much easier to predict. There will be a mixture of strong intersectional and talented conference competition on the agenda from now until New Year's Day.

The team will leave here tomorrow afternoon at five via air to Kentucky. The trip down will be unchartered. Coming back, however, the flight will be a chartered one. There is also a flight leaving Raleigh-Durham on Friday and this is the one which most of the sportswriters will take.

The Tar Heels will fly back to North Carolina Sunday, take a short time off for Christmas, then return to the hardwood in preparations for defense of their Dixie Classics crown. That will last for three days and features soem strong intersectional entries.

Swimmers Undefeated; Wrestlers Are 2-2

The Duke University wrestling team will be without one of its ace performers for awhile this season. The reason—The Orange Bowl, Jan. 1; the man—All-ACC fullback, Harold McElhaney.

The Carolina wrestlers have a 50-50 chance for a winning season. Coach Sam Barnes' squad has a 2-2 record with six matches to go after the Christmas holidays.

Carolina's terrific swimming team has started the season just as was predicted before the opening meet. The mermen have won three in a row and all have been comparatively easy victories. Duke will challenge Pat Earey's swimmers this afternoon in the final varsity match before the holidays.

The Daily Tar Heel sports would like to thank a couple of Carolina athletes who have graciously consented to aid the dwindling sports staff this season. Jim Purks, a member of the soccer team for the past two years, has done an an excellent job of keeping us up to date on soccer news. All-American swimmer Mac Mahaffy is doing our swimming for us this season.

Students Urged To Act On Seating Arrangment

Track star, Dave Scurlock has recently been elected captain of the 1958 Carolina crosscountry team. Scurlock will run the 440 in the Sugar Bowl Indoor Game on Dec. 25.

Suddenly there seems to be a waistline expansion fad on the Carolina campus. On closer observation, it seems that the bulging middles belong to a few of the Carolina footballers who are, so one of them puts it, "trying to catch up on the luxury we missed during the season."

One of the unsung organizations on campus is the glee club. The boys with the talented vocal cords are doing a fine job at halftime of home basketball games. The fans have reacted favorably to this unique feature.

This corner urges all students to react to the seating arrangement of four games in Wollen Gym this season. Due to the size of the gym, a reserve seating plan has been set according to alphabet (see story elsewhere on page) and it will be hard to get tickets after the designated dates.

Mermen In Action Here Today

The freshman swim team goes after its third win this afternoon at 3 o'clock, when it meets Raleigh High School in the Bowman Grey indoor pool.

The varsity swimmers go after their forth straight victory this season immediately following the freshman meet. The varsity will meet Duke University.

Gals Play Basketball Too!

By Julie Stokes

Basketball! Basketball! Basketball! That seems to be all you can hear around campus these days. Carolina has a varsity team (as everyone knows) and a freshman team (as everyone knows).

What they don't know is that Carolina has a third team. This teams doesn't get too much publicity although it plays teams from such schools as Duke and Wake Forest. These cagers are all co-eds!

The girls just recently started practicing every Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Women's Gym preparing for their games which will begin sometime after Christmas vacations. Any co-ed who likes basketball and who can play basketball is welcome to come any Monday afternoon and practice.

The schedule will be announced at a later date and anyone is welcome to come down to the gym and watch the girls' games. So, remember, if you have trouble finding seats at the Tarheels' game, or the Tar Babies' games, you can still see a Carolina basketball team in action. (We might call them the Tar Ladies?)

VOLLEYBALL

The women's intra-mural volleyball tournament finally ended with Alderman Dorm emerging in first place after a hard fought victory over the Pi Phi's. Alpha Gam II came in second place following thrilling over-time game with the Tri-Delts.

According to a new WAA ruling, Alderman, as the winner will be awarded a trophy. Formerly, individual points were given towards a monogram award.

PARTY

Friday afternoon the Women's Physical Education staff and the majors had a Christmas party in the lounge of the Women's Gym. Refreshments consisting of hot tea, coffee, fruit cake and nuts were served. Santa proved to be very nice to those present.

The reserved seat policy for four Carolina home basketball games will go into effect for the first time on January 4 when the Tar Heels play Wake Forest.

Ticket priority for this game will be given to persons whose last names start with the letter A-M. Distribution to this group began yesterday and will continue through Wednesday afternoon. All tickets remaining after this time will be given out on the first come first serve basis.

A similar procedure will be used for the N. C. State, Duke, and Maryland contests. Persons whose last names start with the letter N-Z will be given priority for the State and Maryland games.

TV Or Woollen; Take Your Pick In New Era

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Watch the game in relaxed comfort on TV, or buck the crowds and see the action in Woollen Gym? Which is best? This writer found out in a hurry.

When the National Champion Tar Heels opened their season against Clemson two weeks ago, we decided to be smart and stay at home; instead of standing in line and taking whatever seat just happened to be assigned we elected to tune in the game at our leisure and be assured of a front row center seat. The game was a romp for the Tar Heels, and completely uninteresting from the first few minutes on.

Changed Mind

The Saturday we were persuaded to venture into the Gym to observe the action first-hand. The difference was amazing and entirely enjoyable. The tremendous successive roars for Joe Quigg and Danny Lotz, for the National Champions, and for Coach McGuire, if nothing else, made it well worth our while to go. Observing the various intricacies of the sport of basketball, played by the best team in the country, was point number two. The final point, and perhaps the most evident, was the feeling of having hundreds of fellow Tar Heels all around us, also yelling their respective lungs out.

Modern television is truly a great invention. It can do almost anything imaginable. But it lacks a single quality which can never be replaced —being there.

Pete Brennan: A Spartan On The Court

By BOB MYERS

The scene was Kansas City and the occasion the semifinals game of the NCAA championship basketball tournament between Carolina and Michigan State.

The 31st claim to fame for Carolina was in jeapardy when a Spartan player, his team ahead by two points, stepped to the foul line for a free toss, fired and missed.

A rangy 6-6 Tar Heel grabbed the ball, dribbled uncourt and pushed a one-hander near midcourt. Swish! And the Tar Heels got another lease on life, won the game and went on to win the National crown as Kansas fell the next night.

Once again Pete Brennan of the Carolina team had come through in the clutch.

Veteran Star

And this handsome Senior forward reared in the concrete jungles and neighborhood gyms of Brooklyn, is one formidable reason why the Tar Heels are picked to maintain their top ranking as they move forward in a new campaign.

Pete was the number two punch behind Lennie Rosenbluth throughout last year's dream season. He didn't miss a game, despite a mid-season leg injury, and tallied 471 points for a 14.7 average per game.

Took Up Slack

Five times last season when Rosey wasn't hitting, Pete took up the scoring slack to outscore Lennie. In all but four of the 32 games, Pete scored in the double figures.

Since the size and strength of the Tar Heels have been cut down by injuries, Pete is the only seasoned veteran left in action in the front court.

Frank McGuire tabs him as an excellent team man, who is working well with Kearns and Bob Cunningham and the pair of upcoming sophomores, Dick Kepley and Lee Shaffer.

DURHAM AND JENKINS—Representative Carl Durham, chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy of the House and Senate is shown above with Prof. William S. Jenkins of the Bureau of Public Records and Research at the University.

At Banquet Last Night

Head Of AEC, Congressman Durham, Selected Honorary Rho Chi Member

The chairman of the Congressional Atomic Engery Commission, Rep. Carl T. Durham, was made an honorary member of the Rho Chi Society here last night.

The society is a national honorary pharmaceutical society. Usually one honorary membership is given each year throughout the entire United States.

Congressman Durham was presented with a certificate of membership and a fraternity key at the ceremony held here in the Lenoir Hall Banquet Room. The presentation was made by Ronald Austell of Shelby, President of the Xi Chapter of the society at the UNC School of Pharmacy.

Some 60 persons were present for the banquet and ceremony, including members of the local chapter and out of town guests. The University administration was represented by Dr. Henry T. Clark, administrator of the UNC Division of Health Affairs. He was accompanied by Mrs. Clark who is a member of the society and a graduate of the UNC School of Pharmacy.

The Xi Chapter of the Rho Chi Society was organized at UNC in 1929. Since that time, approximately 200 UNC pharmacy sutdents have been honored by membership in the organization.

Congressman Durham represents the Sixth Congressional District, which is composed of Alamance, Durham, Guilford and Orange Counties. He has held this office since 1938 when he was appointed to fill an unexpired term. Since then he has been re-elected 11 times.

The congressman was born in Chapel Hill and his early education was obtained in the Orange County public schools. He began work as an apprentice in a Chapel Hill drug store in 1912 and attended the UNC School of Pharmacy 1916-17. He was licensed as a pharmacist in 1917.

He volunteered for military service in World War I and served in the Naval Hospital Corps for the duration of the war. Following the war, he was married to Miss Margaret Whitsett of Greensboro and six children were born to the couple.

He continued work in pharmacy in Chapel Hill after his marriage and took an active part in civic affairs. He served as commander of the Chapel Hill Post of the American Legion, was a member of the Board of Aldermen and a trustee of UNC.

Rep. Durham has continued his interest in pharmacy since being in Congress. He took an active and effective part in the establishment of the Pharmacy Corps of the U. S. Army. He was co-sponsor of the Durham-Humphrey Law concerned with prescription practice. He has been diligent in all legislation affecting both pharmacy and the other health professions.

He is a Baptist and a Mason and a life member of the N. C. Pharmaceutical Association. He is an honorary member of the American Pharmaceutical Association and a member of the Kappa Psi Pharmaceutical Fraternity.

Durham Cites Far-Reaching Effects Of UNC's Bureau Of Public Records

Congressman Carl Durham this week said the large number of public records gathered at Chapel Hill and put on microfilm can have "a far-reaching effect internationally."

Representative Durham, who heads the Joint Atomic Energy Commission of the Senate and House, praised the collection of records in the Bureau of Public records and Research, headed by Professor William S. Jenkins of the Department of Political Science.

Congressman Durham was made an honorary member of Rho Chi Society, national honorary pharmaceutical fraternity, last night.

Representative Durham referred to the saving in time and money in the monumental collection of records of all of the states which is housed in the Louis R. Wilson Library at the University.

Durham's complete statement follows:

"Having been closely associated since its inception with the Project in microfilming state records in which Professor William S. Jenkins has been engaged, I am very much interested in its present position of service and prestige and opportunity for service. I personally consider it one of the most valuable collections of such records that has ever ben assembled on basic research of historical records.

"It goes far beyond just the time-saving aspect for basic research and appeals to me as not only valuable just to the American states but will have a far-reaching effect internationally. As we all know foreign nations are rich in literature which can be assembled by this method easily.

"Basic research, as we all know, is a time consuming form of research, but yet it is highly necessary in our way of life. I believe that the basic research which came out of the War effort kept our nation here in America from going into an economic tailspin.

"In this compilation of records, W. S. Jenkins has gathered together information that will save time and money. He has rendered a great service not only just to the University and the state of North Carolina but to all states of the Union.

"I fully believe that the people will be looking to the University for information for years to come. Because of what he has tirelessly assembled here, he has made a great contribution to a proud state university and to the Nation as a whole.

"I think also that what he has done can serve as a distinct contribution and will create and contribute to a better international understanding."

Butchart Heads NROTC Society

Senior E. W. Butchart has been elected commanding officer of the Naval ROTC unit Semper Fidelis Society for this year.

The society is composed of Marine Science students and is designed to promote better understanding of the professional requirements imposed upon future Marine officers and to provide a better understanding of the Marine Corps.

Butchart also commands the NROTC Drill Team.

Junior Walter M. Fitts was selected to fill the position of executive officer.

Other officers are John E. Hunnicutt, S1 (secretary); Clifton B. Metcalf, S2 (publicity); Pieter L. Hogaboom, S3 (social functions); Stanley G. Cook, S4 (treasurer); and Ervin E. Lanpert, Jr., chaplin.

Currently there are four chapters of the society. They are located at the University of Illinois, Duke, Notre Dame, and UNC.

The local chapter founded the honorary professional society and is officially chartered by the state of North Carolina.

America's Mightiest Weapon

Air Force Successfully Fires 100-Ton Atlas Ballistic Missile

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Dec. 17. (UP)—The U. S. Air Force successfully fired today the awesome Atlas Intercontinental Ballistic Missile, mightiest weapon in the American arsenal.

The 100-ton monster blasted off into a dark thundercloud at 12:38 p.m. (EST) as an excited woman screamed "go, baby, go." Minutes later the Air Force announced the test had succeeded.

The third time was a charm for the great silver-colored missile. Twice before, the Atlas has roared skyward from this top-secret base, wobbled in flight and was blasted apart.

"This was a limited range test of several hundred miles," said the Defense Department in an official announcement. "The missile flew its prescribed course and landed in the pre-selected impact area."

Basically, the Atlas is designed to carry a hydrogen warhead 5,000 miles or more at an average speed of 10,000 miles an hour.

Limited or not, the test gave President Eisenhower wonderful news for the representatives of allied nations with him at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meetings in Paris.

Throughout the free world, there has been dark uneasiness since Russia fired its two Sputniks into orbit around the world. The historic feat gave real authority to the claim of the Reds that they already possess an ICBM, a weapon capable of delivering H-bombs to targets anywhere in the world.

The woman who rooted for the Atlas on its way skyward today was one of a scattered group on hand to witness the fireworks from ocean beaches outside the missile test center.

"That'll teach those Russian so-and-sos," was the gleeful comment of a man who watched the "Big A" in its graceful climb toward distant skies.

The beautiful shoot did much to dispel the gloom which has hung over this bustling defense center since the Navy's Vanguard moon rocket, chosen for the first attempt to hurl an American satellite into the heavens with the Red Sputniks, blew up on its launching pad Dec. 6.

While the moon-launching effort was largely for prestige purposes, the Atlas firing was considered much more important because of the threat the terrible weapon can hold over the head of any nation that might be thinking of triggering another war.

A countdown on the Atlas was started yesterday but the scheduled test was postponed because of minor bugs in the mechanism of the 70-foot, three-stage missile.

Today, a determined Atlas crew went to work and got the job done.

During the morning hours, the Atlas could be seen clearly on its launching platform, gleaming in bright sunlight. Then black clouds rolled in off the Atlantic Ocean and the whole firing range was almost hidden in the haze. The Atlas itself became invisible.

At 12:34 p.m., the Atlas began to shine through the gloom like a huge icicle. It had frosted over as the crew pumped bubbling liquid oxygen into its tanks.

Four minutes later, there was a massive belch of white smoke, then a blast of flame and the Atlas began to rise slowly, coming into view as it cleared the ground haze. Its fiery exhaust burned a hole in the thick cloud bank overhead.

With its engines generating millions of horsepower in seconds, its speed increased and within one minute it was out of sight, leaving a trail of white smoke behind. The thunder of its engines could be heard for four minutes after it disappeared.

Among the observers inside the launching base was J. R. Dempsey, manager of the Convair Astronautics Division which builds the Atlas. Dempsey advised newsmen yesterday that use of the Atlas to shoot up an American moon has been considered "for a long time."

The Navy is believed about ready for a second Vanguard launching try and the Army is reported to have set the date for an attempt to fire a satellite with its Jupiter-C Rocket.

New TV Course To Be Offered

The Chapel Hill Studio of WUNC-TV, and the University Extension Division have announced the television credit course to originate during the spring from the Chapel Hill Studio.

Dr. Bernard H. Boyd, James A. Gray Professor of Biblical Literature, will return to the air to teach a new course, Religion 81, Introduction to New Testament Literature. Although Dr. Boyd has taught earlier telecourses, this is the first time the New Testament Literature Course has been offered.

The new telecourse will begin on January 28 and will be taught at 7:30 p. m. on Tuesday and Thursday evenings through the month of May. Three hours of credit will be given for those successfully completing the the course.

Both formal registrations for credit and informal registrations for non-credit are accepted by the Extension Division. Those interested in registering should write either to the Extension Division or to WUNC-TV in Chapel Hill.

Coed Rooms

Coeds have been reminded that room reservations must be made by Thursday for the spring semester.

The procedure for signing up for rooms is paying a $10 deposit fee to the University Cashier's office in the basement of South Building and then filling out reservation cards in the dean of women's office on first floor in South Building.

You Just Can't Cover Much Moon Real Estate With A Circus Tent!

By ARTHUR EDSON

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (UP)—At least one expert has predicted that a live Russian—well, anyway, live at the start—may whirl into outer space within three years.

And Sen. Lyndon Johnson (D-Tex) has said:

"We have left a period in which the idea of going to the moon is wishful thinking. It is a practical reality which, is rapidly drawing near."

All right. So some earthling may land on the moon and run up a flag. Will his country then own the whole shebang?

Fortunately, George Washington University here has been trying to find the answer in a television series called "Project: International Space."

Unfortunately, the answer isn't clear cut.

Yes, says Andrews Haley, a lawyer for the American Rocket Society.

No, say Dr. Raymond W. Young of the George Washington University Law School and Lt. Cmdr. Horace K. Robertson of the Navy Judge Advocate General's office.

They both feel merely landing on the moon isn't enough. Or, in Young's word:

"Putting a landing party there and then leaving would not give sovereignty."

The experts seem to agree only on this: It's going to take study, and it's time the nations did move combined thinking on outer space legality.

Complicating the lawyer's lot is the moon itself which doesn't fit in nicely with our earthbound patterns of thinking.

The Rev. Francis Heyden, S. J., of the Georgetown University Observatory also was on the program, and he seemed to take a sly delight in pointing out the obstacles facing the first moon tourist or homesteader.

As you no doubt know, the moon has no atmosphere. This mean that deadly ultra violet rays pound down steadily, that temperatures

This Kris Kringle Makes Many Orphans Happy

By MARY MOORE MASON and JERRY STOKES

"I didn't know that Santa Claus was a colored man," said the wide-eyed little Negro girl at last year's Phi Delt-Alpha Delta Pi orphan party.

"Santa alias Dr. Reet alias Matthew Mason, the Phi Delt house boy, beamed from behind his foot-long whiskers and chuckled. This was the third year that he had starred in the role of Kris Krinkle, and he was an old hand at it by now.

"Merry Christmas, baby," he said in his mellow southern voice as he handed out another Christmas present to another little child.

Matthew Mason, or rather Dr. Reet, has been a friend of many Carolina students ever since he first became house boy at the Phi Delt house 23 years ago.

Hearing it rumored that he had been a house boy longer than anybody else on campus, I asked him if the rumor was true. "Well, just about," he said, "cept for Sambo at the Beta house and Phi at the Phi Gamm house."

Dr. Reet is renowned for greeting rushees last year with a name tag on stating his name and U. S. A. as his home. When asked if the U.S.A. stood for the United States of America, he replied, "No, it stands for University of South Africa."

Matthew was given his name of Dr. Reet in 1938 by some of "his boys" after they saw a floor show performer of that name in New York. He is also a performer of a sort as he presides over the Phi Delt bar grinning from ear to ear singing forth his favorite expression, "Let the Good Times Roll".

Born in Durham County in 1911, Dr. Reet has 6 children most of whom are in college now or have finished college. Dr. Reet's duties at the fraternity house include everything from straightening the houses' many rooms to tending bar at the parties.

At one time he also worked as a cab driver. But now his only job besides keeping the boys and the house straight is an occasional one as a waiter at the Rathskeller.

On The Red Summit Talks

Two calendar years ago—in 1955—President Eisenhower met with top European leaders and a Russian delegation to smooth over problems of the world. The event has gone down in the annals of history as the Geneva Conference.

It will suffice to say that little was accomplished in this bold effort to bring harmony between the East and West.

Once again, recovering from an illness which was his third in five years, President Eisenhower has traveled to Europe. He has gone there this time to bolster the West against a Russian threat of war which was not erased in Geneva two years ago.

And it is significant to note that at the current conference, a meeting of delegates from the NATO countries, the call for another summit meeting with Russia has been raised by our top allies in Western Europe—or at least to "explore" Soviet intentions in her latest peace bids.

Once again we would warn the West that Russia's intentions are not always good; that the Kremlin has consistently balked at peace negotiations sponsored by the free world; that Red leaders have consistently used all the propaganda at their command to bring about a cleavage between the Western allies.

We also would remind the West of a fact that is only too clear in the minds of her leaders and her people: Russia is now supreme in scientific development of war weapons and stands as a threatening menace over the entire world. It will be a long time before she loses this advantage.

What all this points to is the possibility that the Kremlin, in event of another "summit" conference, would be holding the strings to a peaceful settlement of the world's problems. There is no reason to believe that she would not point to her military might in a persuasive argument to make the West meet her demands.

In fact, that might already has been displayed in the urgence of some Western countries for the free world to at least "explore" Russia's intentions in suggesting a new summit conference.

It therefore becomes necessary for the West to first reaffirm its unity against the Russian threat, with continued plans for peaceful coexistence but also with a defense program sufficient to turn back Russian military aggression should it be realized.

Once the West has assured itself of a strong alliance, it then will be on equal terms with the Russians when leaders seat themselves around the conference table. Perhaps the West at that conference would not be equal to the Reds in military strength, but Russia would be warned that equal strength soon would be attained.

It becomes hard to believe the Russians really want peace in the world when Pravda declares, as it did Tuesday, that American military plans for NATO "would turn Western Europe into an atomic gravevard." For that reason the West must approach with caution the Kremlin's bid for a summit conference.

If such a conference is held, we hope Ike comes back with more for the Americans than he did after the Geneva conference. It all depends on how much the Russians are willing to give.

Prohibition In Tar Heelia

Forty years ago today an amendment to the United States Constitution calling for the prohibition of liquor was introduced to the Sixty-fifth Congress. It became effective January 16, 1920.

Some 14 years later, when the 72nd Congress convened, that amendment was repealed by the 21st amendment, and liquor returned to its legalized status on December 5, 1933.

We point this out not as historic fact, but to remind that there was a time in this country when no liquor—legalized or otherwise—could be purchased in the United States without violation of the federal law.

But that is not to say that liquor, or any form of alcohol, was not consumed during that period. The impoverished moonshiner became rich; big - time criminals flourished off the illegal liquor trade; drunks remained drunks and abstainers remained abstainers.

In short, prohibition wrought such unwanted returns that those who had voted it in in 1919 did a complete turnabout and repealed the 18th amendment in 1933. They realized it was not a good law for the land.

Here in North Carolina precisely the same circumstances exist on a county level as existed on a national on for 14 long years in the United States. Where liquor is not legalized it is easily obtainable if you have to go in a back alley to get it. There are drunks, there are abstainers, but no one can legally purchase liquor.

It seems ironic that crossing a county line could save a man from violation of a state law, but that's what North Carolina regulations boil down to when the sale of liquor is outlawed in one county and legalized in the next.

It's not a violation to DRINK the stuff in Wilkes or Iredell or Burke County, but it's wrong to buy or sell it there. It's permissable to have your mixed drink at your home or at the Country Club, but don't let anyone know where you got the spirits for it.

Of course, all's well if you buy the liquor in a wet county and drink it in a dry one. It's just the fact that when a county prohibits legalized liquor you'd better not be caught buying it there. Keep on drinking but give the next county over the benefit of your taxes.

We don't know all the laws, but to our knowledge there is none making it a violation to consume alcoholic beverages. It seems that what legally can be consumed also should be legally purchased, else we will have the cart before the horse.

Meanwhile, our antiquated North Carolina laws remain on the books and drunks keep on drinking and abstainers keep on abstaining. But we can claim one prideful supremacy over our neighbor states: we're the top state in the nation when it comes to moonshine whiskey production, and they even come here to make movies about us.

The American people seemingly have sanctioned the sale of alcoholic beverages in repeal of the 18th amendment. They don't say you have to drink it, but that you ought to have the privilege of buying it legally when you want it. And that makes sense.

It is not just coincidental that North Carolina's moonshine business continues to flourish under present law. It is a result of it. The fact is that many Tar Heel law officers are quick to say that prohibition is not good, that it makes for problems that legalized liquor would erase.

On a nationwide basis it's a fact that college enrollment and suicides have increased proportionately since the war. But is that to say that it has become increasingly threatening to get a college education?

Those who draw parallels between legalized liquor and crime are making comparisons similar to that just mentioned. If the absence of legalized liquor is the absence of crime, then why has the era of prohibition gone down as one of the most violent periods of American history?

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Jazzmen Are Ignored In Own Country

Ray Anthony is playing at Winter Germans. That is very nice, because he has a good band, That is, everybody in the band can play his notes. I am sure we are going to have a very pleasant time dancing to the music of Ray Anthony. The concert won't be good, but who cares about that?

Well, for one, I do. The Germans Committee had a very good chance to get the Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra, and at a lower price than usual in all probability, because Diz is having trouble keeping his band together due to lack of engagements and would love to play a big college prestige dance. They say the reason they aren't getting Diz is that no one has heard of him.

I would like to ask the Germans Committee who is the symbol of modern jazz. Who is the person whose sense of humor, musicianship, and pure good will caused him to be sent on the first State Department-sponsored tour? It's not Ray Anthony. It's not Louis Armstrong. It's Gillespie, and he is perhaps the most beloved person in the world of jazz. He is far and away the best concert attraction in jazz, and his dances are perfect. The Gillespie band plays ballads as well as any jazz band and better than any dance band.

It is not the Germans Committee that this harangue is directed at, nor is it the students, who supposedly have never heard of Dizzy Gillespie or for that matter Gerry Mulligan or Shelly Manne or any topflight jazz musician. It is the American public and the men n Madison Avenue who are making an extremely successful effort to keep jazz as far away from the people who made it as they can.

Perhaps its very Americanism makes it subversive. Yet it shouldn't. Jazz is the one contribution America has made to the arts. As has been said before, it is the only true American art form. And it is a legitimate art form. The fact that it has been associated with bars and speakeasys and narcotics and liquor is one of the great crimes of the century. Jazz is not these things; it is the most delightful music in the world to a lot of people, and it isn't dirty music.

That America can smilingly tolerate rock and roll, the most tasteless and filthy form of music (?) I have ever heard, is beyond my comprehension. That some Senator from Louisiana can try to push bills keeping jazzmen from making State Department tours is even farther beyond me. Jazz has been proven, by Gillespie and Armstrong and Hampton and Tony Scott and countless others, to be the most influential good will weapon we have.

While the Europeans and Asians and Africans call for more jazz, Dizzy Gillespie has to scrimp to keep his band together and jazz clubs go out of business all over the country.

I hope everyone likes Ray Anthony.

"Oh Boy, This Is Going To Be Tres Gay"

POLITICAL PERSPECTIVE:

Rep. Lawing Acted Courageously

PRINGLE PIPKIN

Jack Lawing (UP) acted in a courageous if not fool-hardy manner when he asked for a roll call vote on Tally Eddings' (SP) bill concerning a street light to be placed between Lenoir Hall and Raleigh Road.

The roll call vote meant that the 13 representatives who had left before the meeting had been adjourned and did not answer the roll call would be counted as absent for the whole meeting. The meeting adjourned at 9:15 p.m.

A legislator is only allowed one unexcused absence from the legislature meetings during an assembly, which lasts from one general election to the other.

If he takes two unexcused cuts, then a legislator can be unseated. One UP representative, who already had one unexcused absence, left the meeting early.

Because he had one hour quiz on Friday and report to the Student Body President's cabinet due the same day, it is probable that he will be excused.

(A legislator must have two hour quizzes on the next day before he can be excused from attending a meeting)

However, whether he will be excused is in the hands of the rules committee.

Now I say Lawing was courageous because he did something that should have been done but which no one else was willing to do. His action was not popular and was hardly one which would assure his political future.

It was foolhardy because 12 of the 13 representatives who quit the hall prematurely were members of the University Party, the party of which he is vice-chairman.

Not all of those who left early will bet unexcused cuts, but those who do will not be endeared to Representative Lawing.

I feel his action was necessary in order to remind the legislators of their responsibilities. He stopped what might have been setting a bad precedent.

Actually most of what seemed to be the important business had passed when most oft he legislators had left. They left after the vote on Gray's (UP) resolution "concerned with the conduct of the State Student Legislature."

However, there remained three bills for the legislature to act on. It is true none of the bills were particularly controversial, but it would have taken the legislators only about 15 more minutes to conclude the business.

Only 25 legislators, just two more than the required quorum for that meeting, were left to finish the business.

Some of the legislators will be granted excuses; others can claim that they did not understand the procedure concerning a roll call vote.

However, Speaker Don Furtado announced the consequences of leaving the meeting before adjournment (however, some legislators had already gotten out of ear-shot before he made the announcement).

The by-laws to which the legislators have had easy access during the past several sessions state "if the legislator did not answer to every roll call," he would be counted absent.

The by-laws say of a roll call vote, "Upon the request of one legislator, the Speaker shall require the Clerk to call the roll and to record the votes cast . . ."

These legislators should have known what was going to happen. At any rate they do now, for Lawing is an efficient if not kind teacher.

I noted, not altogether happily, that an SP legislator had brought and played a radio during the meeting. The radio could only be heard by the legislator, and it was patriotically tuned to the Carolina-Furman basketball game.

The representative was even so kind as to write the "up-to-the-minute" score on a piece of paper and display it to the edification of the other legislators.

I personally feel that a legislator has a somewhat higher "calling" than listening to a basketball game (even though it be UNC) during the course of a meeting.

I hope that this legislator can wait until the end of the rest of the meetings to see how UNC is doing, or maybe the meeting can be conducted during the time outs and the half-time of the basketball game.

The bill to place the comic strip "Peanuts" in The Daily Tar Heel was written by Dave Jones, an SP Legislator during the last assembly.

The assembly closed before he could introduce the bill and have action taken on it by the finance committee. During this assembly the bill was introduced by Pat Adams (SP).

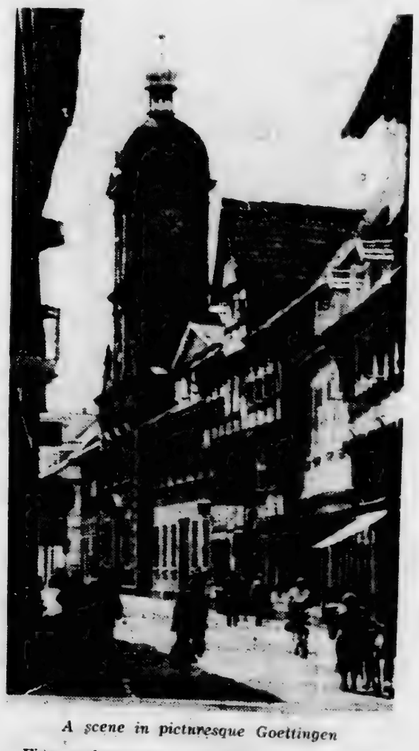
Goettingen Year Memorable One

In the spring, the student government Foreign Exchange Committee will select a UNC student to study at the German university where Bismarck had once been a student, the University of Goettingen.

Those of you who know John Raper and I, know that we feel we greatly benefitted from our experience at Goettingen, as two exchange students for 1956-57. We urge those students who are interested in studying a year abroad to consider the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship.

Let me give you a rundown on what we did last year. At UNC, John had had two semesters and I had had four semesters of basic German. In order to better prepare for lectures at Goettingen, we attended a Goethe-Institute language course near Munich for two months of intensive language study. With this background, we could understand the lectures at Goettingen fairly well after a few months.



International student home where Raper, Southerland lived.

During the first semester, we lived in an international student home. In the second semester, we chose to live with German families.

We both had a chance to travel quite a bit. Of the thirteen months, I was in Europe. I spent more than four and one-half months traveling. During the two months vacation between semesters at Goettingen, John and I traveled nearly 9000 miles together through Switzerland, Italy, France, England, Scotland, and the low countries. Probably the most interesting trip for John was the one he made to Spain to visit friends there for the Christmas vacation. My "adventure" was a three weeks' trip through Poland.

But the significance of the year in Europe was not that we could pile up a list of "things seen." The real meaning of the experience was to be found in persons whom we got to know there, especially German friends in Goettingen.

Perhaps you're wondering what this university at Goettingen is like; after all, most of us think only of Heidelberg when they think of a German university. Incidentally, many Germans think of the American troops stationed there when they think of Heidelberg. First of all, to find out what the university is like, be sure to read the articles in the DTH by Dave Davis, the exchange student at Goettingen this year. Personally, I felt after talking with Germans, that Goettingen ranks as one of the best, and is the best university in Germany in certain fields such as the German language and literature or theology. In the scientific world, Goettingen has gained world wide recognition. Three nobel prize winners are there at the present.

A scene in picturesque Goettingen

Fine, perhaps you would like to study at Goettingen, but you don't want to lose a year's credit at UNC. Several people have asked me if I were still a junior this year. No, I'm a senior. After a somewhat complicated process, which we hope to standardize in the future, John Raper and I both received credit for a full year's work at UNC. Although we cannot yet guarantee a year's credit, I think it can be worked out as in our case.

A sub-committee of the Foreign Exchange Committee is meeting now to plan for the method and basis of selection of the exchange student to Goettingen for 1958-59. Therefore, I urge those interested to begin to consider now this fine opportunity and to apply for the scholarship as soon as applications are available.

KDs, Delta Sig Entertain Orphans

The KDs and the Delta Sigs traveled to Oxford Thursday afternoon to play Santa to a group of orphans.

The party took place at the Oxford Orphanage Home and began as Santa made an early arrival, laughing heartily and distributing numerous presents to the children. The KDs and Delta Sigs assisted the children in assembling the toys and playing games.

The party was topped off with ice cream and cookies for everyone. The project was headed by Edith MacKinnon, president of the KDs and Jim High, Delta Sig president.

Prominent Magazine Invades Heart 'O Dixie

"Come along to Tarheel land where basketball coaches eat towels, students become spies, rivalries turn into full-scale wars, and some colleges even put damn Yankees into uniform."

This is essentially the text of a light and interesting story on basketball in the Atlantic Coast Conference, especially in North Carolina, in the latest issue of "True" magazine.

The writer, Wood Parkinson, has slightly outdone himself in his vivid and a bit exaggerated description of the way things are handled on the hardwood down here. Nevertheless, no harm has been done by the Yankee writer who came down to see how the other half lives. His story, in fact, is one of the best we've read this season.

Parkinson tells of the intense rivalry between the North Carolina schools and how the fans react when an old rival has fallen. "Going to a basketball game in North Carolina," says the writer, "is like fleeing a burning building during an earthquake—You got to go, but look out for flying missiles."

Governor Doesn't Throw, He Dribbles

The writer refers to the time students at State College staged such a riot that it took the entire Raleigh police force to quell the storm. Then there was the time two years ago that Carolina and Wake Forest had such a fist fight in Woollen Gym that two players were suspended and the Tar Heels fined $500.

And how's this for basketball enthusiasm. Parkinson says that the basketball fever in N. C. is prevalent from the poorest backyard in the sticks right up to the governor's mansion. But when the governor throws up the first ball at the ACC Tourney, there's some unique about the procedure.

"He doesn't throw it out like the President of the United States does. Not Gov. Luther Hodges. The Governor comes dribbling it out, moving at a dignified canter and dribbling with grace and precision."

Scouts Lurking On Every Campus

Parkinson says that scouting conspiracy is practiced by the students as well as the scouts. One time Duke guard Bucky Allen injured his foot two days before the Wake Forest game and military secrecy went into effect. But a by-passing Wake student who was dating a Duke co-ed passed by the gym, noted Allen limping and promptly notified his alma-mater. A defense was quickly rigged by the Deacs for Allen's replacement.

There was also the time when two Wake Forest coaches spent an entire evening watching Joe Belmont of Duke to determine whether he went to his left or his right more often and which hand he made his first dribble with more often.

Clemson Coach Press Maravich eats towels, according to Parkinson. "One time Mrs. Maravich made him stop and in a week he was suffering pains in his stomach, in ten days was taking tranquilizing pills and medicine for ulcers, and in two weeks was back on the towel again. Towels are cheaper."

Hooe You-All Is Satisfied Now

Parkinson avers that "since winning the National Title Frank McGuire has become the biggest thing in North Carolina since Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston (or Everett Case). Despite his New York accent he is in constant demand as a banquet speaker—"We don't know what in hay-ull he's talkin' about," a Tar Heel fan observed, "but hit's interestin' listnin' just the same."

As a parting shot, Parkinson asked President William Friday if the people of North Carolina don't disapprove of watching all this imported talent playing southern basketball. About that time Lonnie Rosenbluth left the game and received a tremendous ovation. "Does that," he answered in a choked-up voice, "answer your question, suh?"

Mr. Parkinson, suh, you-all know we ain't that bad. You has over-accentuated the accent, but yo' story is a right fair country piece of work. Save your Confederate Money!!

Moon

range from extreme cold to extreme heat, that meteors, which burst into flame and usually burn up as they enter atmosphere, pound the moon relentlessly.

Father Heydea pointed out that meteors would be no picnic. Even a tiny one, he said, could be lethal since it would move in faster than a slug from a .45 revolver.

Apparently the mooners will have to lug along a spun glass tent of some sort, to keep out excessive sunlight. Anyone who camps out this way undoubtedly could claim sovereignty to theat area, but it wouldn't amount to much.

You don't cover much moon real estate with a circus tent.

Possibly the Russians have the right idea. The program included a Russian film in which they showed how they had moon travel figured.

The rocket lands, and unfolds. Inside is a small tank. It runs up an antenna, and moves out on exploring trips, busily sending television pictures to earth as it prowls around. It would be unmanned and would work automatically.

Varsity Mermen Beat Duke

MAC MAHAFFY

The Carolina swimmers dunked Duke last night 62 to 24 to continue their unbeaten season. The mermen captured 9 out of the 10 events. Duke's only first was in the backstroke. This was the Tar Heels fourth win.

Bill Zickgraf and Tony Schiffman were high point getters for Carolina. Zickgraf won first in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle distant events, the 220 and 440 yards freestyle.

Sophomore star Paul Wachendorfer continued his outstanding performance in the 200 yard butterfly. Senior Bill Roth, and juniors Brent Nash and Bob Turner and Wilson Cooper all turned in good performances.

Coach Earey was pleased with the teams' improvement, and thought the boys looked especially good in the medley and freestyle relays, and in the sprint events.

The varsity's next meet will be on January 6, when the will meet the University of Virginia here.

Frosh Cagers Beat EMI 95-80

The Carolina freshman cagers had relatively little trouble in marching to their fourth win of the season with a 95-80 victory over Edwards Military Institute Monday night.

Paced by the scoring of Jim Donahue and Doug Moe, the Tar Babies ran up a 49-35 halftime lead and coasted to victory. Donahue hit 14 field goals and two free throws for 30 points. Moe had 26. The Tar Babies connected for a 55 per cent shooting accuracy.

The next game for the freshman is Jan. 4 here against Wake Forest.

THE SCORING

Carolina—Moe 26; Donahue 30; Hart 5; Shuford 13; Hollers 5; Beck 6; Longernecker 6; Dunlap 2.

EMI—Palkovics 16; Oxendine 8; Jones 9; Chason 11; Journigan 2; Newsome 19; Collins 16.

Last Day For Deacon Tickets For A-M

The reserved seat policy for four Carolina home basketball games will go into effect for the first time on January 4 when the Tar Heels play Wake Forest.

Ticket priority for this game will be given to persons whose last names start with the letter A-M. Distribution to this group began yesterday and will continue through Wednesday afternoon.

A similar procedure will be used for the N. C. State, Duke, and Maryland contests. Persons whose last names start with the letter N-Z will be given priority for the States and Maryland games.

Holiday Mass Exodus Begins Today As Classes Cease Until January 3

news brief

Agreement

PARIS, Dec. 18. (AP)—The NATO Summit Conference reached complete agreement today on a U. S. offer of medium-range missiles for western Europe and a new approach to Russia for disarmament negotiations.

The decisions were announced by Secretary General Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium as the Summit Conference neared its end.

The plan for new disarmament talks was put forward by Foreign Minister Christian Pineau of France. It calls for a direct approach to Russia by the United States, Britain, France and Canada.

Refuse To Attend

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 18. (AP)—About 50 white pupils refused to attend classes at Central High School today as a result of a dispute between two girls at the school, one white and the other Negro.

Some of the pupils walked out of the school and others refused to enter. They congregated across a street and jeered and called to the pupils inside.

Police dispersed the pupils, who had rejected appeals by Principal A. B. Jordan and other pupils to enter.

'Destruction'

LONDON, Dec. 18. (AP)—Nikita Khrushchev in a magazine article today raised the specter of nuclear destruction for any West European nation allowing American atomic bases on its territory.

At the same time he said he wants meetings of Soviet and American leaders to "discuss conditions of coexistence."

The Soviet Communist Party boss said countries which accept American atomic bases face "shattering retaliatory attacks" in the event of a war launched against Russia as a result of a misunderstood order or at the discretion of some American officer.

Denies Charges

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18. (AP)—America's atomic boss today personally denied unofficial British charges that the United States has barred Britain from announcing a big step toward harnessing the H-bomb for peace.

Adm. Lewis L. Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), also said the achievement of H-power "is still remote."

Strauss had his office here release a statement he drafted in Paris, where he is attending the NATO Summit parley. It began:

"A report to the effect that the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has suppressed an announcement of success in the control of the fusion reaction at my request is completely false."

N. C. Integration

RALEIGH, Dec. 18. (AP)—Attorneys for a Negro youth, seeking an injunction to allow integration at the all-white Broughton High School here, said today they will request a special hearing sometime in January.

Herman Taylor said he plans to contact Federal Judge Don Gilliam soon as to a convenient date for the hearing.

Disability

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18. (AP)—Sen. Ervin (D-NC) said today the problem of presidential disability will be studied seriously by Congress next year. Such study is urgent, he said, because of the illnesses of President Eisenhower.

Chemistry Frat Holds Initiation

The Rho chapter of Alpha Chi Sigma, national professional chemistry fraternity, held initiation ceremonies Friday night, Dec. 13, in Venable Hall.

The new brothers are: Donald E. Bolch, James W. Buchanan, William L. Caughman Jr., John C. Cochran, Murphy B. Conry, James S. Crowell.

Thomas B. Douglas Jr., John W. Dalton Jr., Takashi Fujii, Constantios D. Keritsis, Wilbur T. Layton, Robert G. Lewis, Andrew W. Loven

Donald W. Oliver, Leo H. Phelan III, Rovert M. Shellenberger, James R. Vance and Donald L. Wright.

Those taking part in the initiation were active and inactive brothers and Dr. H. D. Crockford and Dr. W. F. Little, faculty advisers.

A banquet was held Saturday night in Durham honoring brothers and their dates.

Alpha Chi Sigma, the oldest national professional chemistry fraternity, was organized at the University of Wisconsin in 1902. Rho chapter was formed in 1912 at UNC.

Students To Spread News Of No. 1 Team

From Maine to California, towns and cities all over these United States will soon be hearing first-hand news of the No. 1 team in college basketball.

Why? It's the holiday season, and who ever heard of students remaining in Chapel Hill while there are unconverted millions that need to be told of Tar Heel glories.

Too, there are classes to be free from for two weeks, parties to attend, presents to give and receive.

That's why the past few days has seen a noticeable lack to studious interest in classes, quizzes, reports, etc., on campus. In Y-court yesterday two students, one from New York and one from Florida, disturbed each other with their between-class whistling.

The boy from New York was whistling "White Christmas," and the one from Florida swung into "Moon Over Miami" with full vigor. Informers from Durham say music shops there have not been able to keep up with the demand for the latter (from Duke students, of course.)

Class Excuse Faculty Group Is Announced

J. C. Ingram has been named chairman of a faculty committee to investigate student government recommendations for new class excuse regulations.

Prof. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty announced the committee appointments after the faculty council meeting yesterday.

Other members of the committee will be Dean Neil Luxon, and Professors Carl Brown, J. R. Caldwell, Norman Eliason, A. E. Radford and D. W. Wall.

The committee will report its findings at the February meeting of the Faculty Council.

At the December meeting of the council Student Body President Sonny Evans outlined a suggestion that class excuses in the case of sickness be granted by the individual instructor rather than by the infirmary. Evans said the present regulations are unnecessary under the Honor System.

Eisenhower Meets With President Coty

PARIS, Dec. 18 (AP)-President Eisenhower tonight pushed hard at the job of bolstering the Atlantic Alliance in the closing sessions of the Nato Summit Conference.

The President sat in at a night meeting, the first to start in the evening since the conference opened Monday. He also arranged to start back to Washington early tomorow evening. His plane is scheduled to arrive in the U. S. capital about 6:30 a.m. EST Friday.

Eisenhower went to the conference table at the Palais de Chaillot a few minutes before 6 and stayed until the end of the session at 8:05 p.m.

He joined the other chiefs of government after the United States at a daytime meeting of the foreign ministers, had won agreement in principle on its plans for setting up missile bases and a stockpile of atomic warheads in Europe to deal with any Soviet aggression.

The President was smiling broadly as he arrived at the Palais from the nearby U. S. Embassy residence. He had rested at the embassy in the afternoon after being the luncheon guest of President Rene Coty of France at the Elysee Palace.

Informality was the keynote at the luncheon. Coty and Premier Felix Gaillard were waiting outside on the steps of the palace when Eisenhower's limousine pulled up.

The president was accompanied by his son, Maj. John Eisenhower, and Secretary of State Dulles.

The President who suffered a slight stroke Nov. 25, was in good humor. He has been recovering fast, but still has not been given a medical discharge by his doctors.

Solicitous about Eisenhower's Health, Coty tried to persuade the President not to shed his overcoat in the chilly entrance hall of the place.

For students flying home for the holidays the weatherman says rain will prevail both north and south of Chapel Hill for the next two days.

The U. S. Weather Bureau at Raleigh-Durham Airport said yesterday flights to the north will have low ceilings, with moderate rain for early flights and a slacking off later in the day. From Washington, D. C., and northerly points the rain may freeze and cause icing conditions.

Flights south of Chapel Hill will have ceiling of 2,500 to 5,000 feet with broken clouds and rain. There are no hazards, the weatherman said.

For North Carolina the next few days will be cloudy with occasional rain and a warming trend. But the weatherman said there is every indication the weather will clear by the weekend to provde good holiday weather in the state.

Classes were originally scheduled to resume on Thursday morning, Jan. 2, but an extension of one day has been made in the recess by University officials.

Chancellor William B. Aycock announced last week that the resumption of classes would be postponed until 8 a. m. on Friday, Jan. 3. The University's Calendar Committee had recommended the change primarily on the basis of the safety factor involved in avoiding travel on New Year's Day.

The Student Legislature had earlier passed a bill urging that classes not resume until Jan. 3, which was considered by the committee in its decision. Dean of the Faculty James L. Godfrey noted.

The Daily Tar Heel's ride service has provided many students with ways home, and private enterprise has taken care of the rest.

When the students return to campus they will face only two weeks of class before the end of the fall semester. Final exams are scheduled for Jan. 20-28, and the spring semester gets underway on Jan. 31.

'NO TIME FOR SERGEANTS'—Joe Latham and Charles Hohman are pictured in a scene from "No Time For Sergeants" which will be here for one performance only in Memorial Hall, Jan. 10, under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers. Tickets are available at 214 Abernathy Hall.

Carolina Playmakers Schedule 'No Time For Sergeants' Comedy

"No Time For Sergeants," the comedy success of the mid-century American theatre, will be presented for one performance only at Memorial Hall, Jan. 10, under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers. The New York company of the Maurice Evans-Emmett Rogers production comes here following its run of two years on Broadway.

The Ira Levin adaptation of Mac Hyman's popular novel about an ingenious Georgia farm-boy whose innocent good will disrupts the Standard Operating Procedure of both the United States Army and the United States Air Force, will be presented intact—just as it appeared on the stage of New York's Alvin Theatre.

Maurice Evans has in recent years been cited for such successes as "The Teahouse of the August Moon", "Man and Superman" and "The Devil's Disciple."

Carles Hohman heads the company as the cheerfully insouciant Private Will Stockdale, having played the role for over a year in New York.

Rex Everhart appears as the hapless Sergeant who meets his nemesis in the person of the good-natured inductee; Tucker Ashworth will portray Psychiatrist Lt. Benjamin Kaiser, the nervous and noble buddy. Ben Howard Freeman and Royal Beal play the roles they created on Broadway, the frantic generals whose commands are disrupted by a well-meaning private, and James Millholin plays the verbose Air Force psychiatrist who is upended when it comes to dealing with the happy Georgia plowboy.

Phi Defeats Measure Favoring Christmas Commercialization

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

A bill "favoring the commercialization of Christmas" was defeated by the Philanthropic Literary Society by a vote of 5-4 Tuesday night.

Conditional Representatives Bill Fackert, of University City, Mo., and Miss Judy Huntress of Suffern, N. Y., were initiated into the Phi in a special ceremony after the regular meeting.

Terming the purpose as "the abolishment of hypocrisy," Representative Jess Stribling claimed that everyone benefitted from the commercialization of Christmas.

"We should cast aside these material things and bring back the spirit of Jesus Christ," urged Representative Clarence Simpson.

Representative David Matthews asserted that the only people who really benefited from the commercialization were those who sold things. He called for "a return to the true ideals of Christmas."

Claiming that it is "a socially accepted thing" to buy gifts for Christmas, Conditional Representative Bill Fackert said that the buying caused competition and so the reduction of prices.

Representative Ron Pruett said it would be bad "to take gift giving and receiving away." He related a story of his giving gifts to a needy family and called the experience "something very emotional."

Naming some "of the old country traditions," Representative Don Jacobs said that the Germans put a "loving touch" into the gifts which they made with their own hands.

New Book By Former Student Reviews Court's Police Power

A new book has just been published that had its birth in the classrooms of the Department of Political Science of UNC.

It is "The Supreme Court and State Police Power, A Study in Federalism" by Dr. Ruth Locke Roettinger, who received her Ph.D. degree in political science at UNC.

The book is an outgrowth of her attending the classes of Prof. W. S. Jenkins in constitutional law, where dozens of the cases she writes about were reviewed.

A book had been written reviewing the U. S. Supreme Court's decisions affecting state police powers from 1910-30. This volume takes up cases that came before the court after 1930. This book was Dr. Roettinger's dissertation for her Ph.D. degree at UNC.

The preface of the book is written by Dr. W. W. Pierson, former dean of the UNC Graduate School, who says, "The author's observations and reflections may be considered represetative of the prevailing current opinion in the South. However, she is dealing with issues of such gravity, relative to both security and constitutionalism, that the book might well be of interest and importance to a wider reading public."

The final chapters of the book deal with the recent rulings by the court in regard to segregation in the southern states. In listing the sources of her material, Dr. Roettinger showed the "Records of the States of the United States of America." This material is the joint microfilm project carried out by UNC and the Library of Congress and directed by Prof. Jenkins.

In writing about the microfilm project done by UNC and the Library of Congress, the author pointed out that for the first time in history, in a recent school segregation case, it was possible to consult the entire public record of state consideration of the ratification of the Fourteenth Admendment.

Dr. Roettinger formerly taught here at UNC and is presently a member of the faculty of the Department of Government of Sweet Briar College.

SP To Elect After Holidays

Student Party members will fill three Student Legislature seats in meetings after the Christmas holidays, Pat Adams, SP chairman, said yesterday.

At the Jan. 6 meeting, Student Party will fill Paddy Wall's Dorm Women's seat in Legislature.

Two seats from Dorm Men's IV will be filled at the Jan. 13 meeting. These seats were formerly held by Bob Browning and Everett James.

Adams also announced that Student Party has chosen Leon Holt to fill the vacancy in Legislature of Al Alphin's seat in Dorm Men's IV.

No Wild Parties—The Press Just Broke Down

"The best laid plans of mice and men," etc., etc. . . .

So went the story early Wednesday morning when the press on which The Daily Tar Heel is printed ground to a clanking halt and called it quits.

Printers rushed around, aided by a specialist on such matters brought in from Charltote, and managed to correct the nervous breakdown.

Consequently, the Tar Heel became an evening paper instead of a morning paper yesterday.

Rumors that late delivery was caused by a new editorship recall or a wild staff party should be discontinued as untrue.

IN THE INFIRMARY

The following students were in the Infirmary yesterday:

Deed Of Good Wishes

DAILY TAR HEEL.
UNIV. OF NORTH CAROLINA

THIS WISH, made this 25th day of December, 1957, by The Daily Tar Heel and all its staff, of the University of North Carolina, parties of the first part, to their friends and associates of the same University, parties of the second part.

WITNESSETH

THAT said Daily Tar Heel and staff members in consideration of friendship and other tokens of esteem to them given by friends and associates, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do wish and extend, to the parties of the second part, one year of good wishes, more particularly described as follows:

Beginning on December 25, 1957, on a day marked by joyful festivities and the celebration of the birth of Christ; thence through the remaining days of 1957, 6 days to January 1, 1958, the dawn of a new year and the day of meaningful resolutions; thence, through the Winter and early days of spring, 96 days to Easter, the day celebrating the Resurrection and the day of the Parade of the Frocks; thence with Spring and Summer, 89 days to July 4, Independence Day; thence continuing with Summer and early Fall, 145 days to November 27, the day for giving thanks to God; thence with the waning days of 1956, 33 days to the day, a year from date of beginning, containing 361 days of hope and good cheer.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD one full year, 365 days, of health and happiness and blessings thereunto belonging, to the said friends and associates, parties of the second part.

And the said Daily Tar Heel and its staff members, have the right to wish to their friends and associates all the happiness and good cheer during this period of time; and that this period of time will begin with a VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS and a most JOYOUS NEW YEAR.

Is There A Santa Claus?

(The following editorial appeared in the New York Sun on September 21, 1897).

We take pleasure in answering at once and prominently the communication below, expressing at the same time our great gratification that its faithful author is numbered among the friends of The Sun:

Dear Editor: I am 8 years old. Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus. Papa says "If you see it in The Sun it's so." Please tell me the truth, is there a Santa Claus?

Virginia O'Hanlon

Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus! It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment, except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

You tear apart the baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is no veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus! Thank God! he lives, and he lives forever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.

Drive Carefully

In its last publication before the resumption of classes Friday, January 3, The Daily Tar Heel would remind students to drive cautiously and with consideration for others over the holidays.

There will be a heavy flow of traffic on the state's and nation's highways as you drive home today; probably the traffic will be even greater when you begin the trip back to Chapel Hill after New Year's.

In upholding student argument for a one-day extension of the Christmas holidays we owe it to ourselves and to the administration to drive carefully on the highways. The dangers of travel, after all, played a key role in the administration's decision.

Our next newspaper will be published Saturday, January 4, and we'd rather not have any stories about student tragedy occurring during the Yuletide season. Do your part to make the holidays safe ones.

'Ivy League,' 'Collegiate' Are Different

By WHIT WHITFIELD

Many people are under the false impression that the words Ivy and Collegiate are synonomous. Nothing could be further from the truth, and we would like to show why.

Pleatless slacks with a narrow cut and a buckle in back, particularly khakis, are Ivy for a while. After they have been a worn a dozen or so without being washed or pressed, and after the buckle is broken or allowed to remains unbuckled, they become collegiate.

Three-button-collared shirts, in stripes or prints, with a pleat in the back are Ivy. These usually sell for $7 and up. Three-button collared skirts with no pleats are pseudo-Ivy or collegiate. These start at $2.98 in most department stores.

Dirty bucks are collegiate; sneakers are Ivy.

Tasseled loafers in black or cordovan, plain-tipped, wing-tipped and cordovan loafers are Ivy. Black and brown loafers with stitches almost missing and almost sole-less are collegiate. Worn GI shoes are collegiate for veterans and ROTC students, back country for all others and in bad taste.

Woollen Gym socks and similar athletic socks are collegiate. Dark browns, blacks, and blues in cotton or wool are Ivy. Bright argyles and stripes (vertical or horizontal) are the birds.

Sweaters, both crew neck and the new three and four button cardigans, are Ivy. Crewnecks, size 36 on a forty inch chest, with sleeves rolled down, are collegiate.

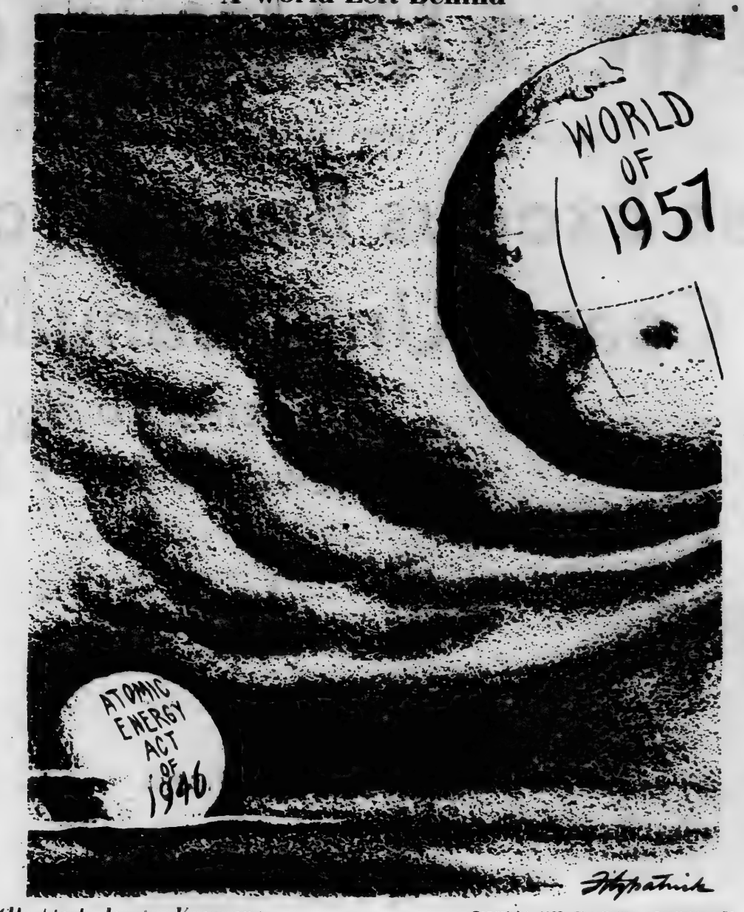
Sports coats with three buttons (1957 vintage) are Ivy; with three buttons (1952 vintage) are collegiate.

Hats are Ivy for those who can wear them, collegiate for those who cannot.

London Fog and Alligator raincoats are Ivy. Plastic raincoats and Daily Tar Heels are collegiate. No raincoat is idiotic.

Black umbrellas are Ivy. They have finally shedded the social stigma which has been attached these many years, thank goodness. An umbrella belonging to your wife or mother may as well be considered collegiate, for this is the first step one takes before buying for himself.

Topcoats and car coats are Ivy. Airforce, Army, and Navy jackets are collegiate.



Although we may be stretching the point, we consider eating three meals per as Ivy, and coffee for breakfast and a sandwich at Y-court as collegiate.

If we haven't proven our point, then it's just as well, becuase we didn't think it a very convincing argument to begin with.

'Good Will Toward Men' — Or Is It Just Toward Friends?

By HARRY KIRSCHNER

We have all been taught to have a warm place in our hearts for Christmas. Most of us struggle through each yuletide season yeár after year trying to maintain that glow. As children we not only maintained a warm spot, we kept a raging inferno in our hearts for Christmas, our love of the holiday having been what it was. When else but on Christmas did Santa drop down to earth and give us all presents and goodies? We did not argue the point; we knew which side our bread was buttered on.

But as we grew older we learned some of the hard facts of life. One of the most important being that however much we should enjoy toys, it was socially unacceptable to play with them after one passed his twenty-first birthday. When this fact finally overcame all the intellectual resistance that we could muster and was accepted as unchangeable law some of the joy of Christmas left us, and the image dimmed.

We tried to assuage this loss with the belief that Christmas is the time of good will toward men. If we had felt particularly optimistic we could also have believed it was the time of peace on earth. Our effort was successful for a time. We chanted annually, good will toward men, good will toward men, and harked back to the days when we sat on whomesoever's knee and listened to the telling of the poem, THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS. It is a charming poem about Santa Claus and all the toys that we used to love overtly.

This Christmas the chants seem to ring somewhat hollow. The TV announcer looks out at us seriously and says, "It is now the yuletide season, the time of good will toward men. Remember, there are only five shopping days left until Christmas." He then turns to the next page of his script and announces, "And now for the news. President Eisenhower met at Paris again today with other NATO members to discuss the problem of Russian arms superiority. It was stated at the meeting that if the west does not start a stepped-up rocket program Russia will be able to conquer us instead of us conquering them." And so on.

Our old concept of good will toward men has died. We have another one now which runs: good will toward men who live in countries we like, and a curse on those in countries we fear. And so, this Christmas Eve we will gather together, chant the new thought over a few times, and go home to bed with a new NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS poem turning over in our minds. It goes something like this:

Twas the night before Christmas
And heck and damnation.
Not a consumer was buying
In the whole goldurned nation.
Dulles was hung by the chimney with care,
In hopes that by morning he wouldn't be there.
The people were nestled all snug in their beds
While delusions of grandeur danced in their heads,
And Ike in his palace, and I in my shack,
Had just settled down for a long winter's nap.
When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from my bed to see what the matter.
Away to the window I flew like a flash,
Tripped over the night pot and fell with a crash.
The soot on the crest of the new fallen snow
Gave the dullness of coal fields to objects below.
When what to my wondering eyes should appear,
But a minature missile drawn by men in great fear
With a little old driver so neat and so quick,
I knew in a moment it must be a trick.
More rapid than light'ning to shelter I flew,
Yanked open the door and from sight I withdrew.
Now I say to you from inside my room bomb tight,
Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night.

SLIGHTLY OFF

The team had just lost an important game and the coach was explaining it to the sports reporters:

"I used an unbalanced line—and the backfield wasn't very smart, either."

Christmas Day Time For World To Unite

By DAVIS YOUNG

December 25, 1957. What will this day mean to you and yours? Will it be just another Xmas gathering at the house with the opening of presents and an exchange of gifts? Will it be a commercial and mercenary and selfish day?

These may seem to you unimportant questions that don't concern you directly. After all, you say, "isn't Christmas a day that we get away from it all and forget the problems of daily life in a complex civilization full of Sputniks and Eisenhowers and Arkansas?"

If you are unrealistic, then the answer is "yes" Maybe you want to get away from the immediate past. However, if you are realistic, then you realized you can't escape what has happened to the world recently and you are willing to face the difficult challenges and barriers of the near future.

For if you are really realistic and hopeful, you will see in Christmas Day something more than a cash register victory for the local merchants.

Possibly you will see in part an answer to some of the questions facing us today. Although we as a nation are involved in what is being termed a fatal arms race, and we as a nation are years behind our counterparts in missile production, and we as a nation condone actions such as have taken place recently in Arkansas, the answer in the immediate sense does not lie with us as a nation.

Instead, it lies with you the individual. Before we can get the country squared away, we have to get curselves as individuals squared away. This is where Christmas Day, 1957, really ties in.

On the 25th of this month, it is important to take stock of Your "state or union." It is important no matter who you are, be you pessimist, optimist, introvert, extrovert, boy, girl, man, woman, black, white, American or Russian.

Figure out where you are going and what you want to do. Then, when you have done this, do not deviate from the path you have selected. Figure out what kind of world you want to live in, and then do your best to make it this kind of place.

On the 25th of this month think of the true meaning of Christmas Day. Pray for your family and friends and your world. And pray for your Christian brothers, be they Negroes or whites; be they in Moscow or New York.

On this day, Christians the world over are united in some way. Too bad Christmas doesn't come every day for just this reason.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Excuses On Honor

I would like to comment on a recent letter in The Daily Tar Heel which pointed out that the loss of personal belongings shelved while eating in a local cafeteria may indicate a weakness in our Honor System which would contraindicate an extension of the Honor System to absence excuses. Any loss of property is regrettable and the situation should be remedied by the proper authority and the persons involved.

First, the doors of the local cafeteria are open to the general public; even though it may be primarily intended for students, it is used by faculty, students, University and cafeteria employees, visiting relatives of students, friends of the University, and, no doubt, to some extent by townspeople. Granted that the majority of the clientele is students, it does not follow that all thefts (or even any, some or most) are student thefts and therefore violations of the Honor System.

Second, trust of one's fellow men may be essential in a productive satisfying life, and necessary to orderly life in a complex society. In a more practical sense, we buy automobile insurance but we take the wheel trusting that the other drivers will stop at the signal lights and stop signs. This is not to disparage banks, laws, insurance, which are all necessary, but to question the choice, from all possible attitudes, of the callous attitude of distrust and suspicion.

I am reminded of the bartender who solved the proverbial problem of that kind of enterprise by painting on the wall in large gilt letters the motto which appears on all U. S. coin. At the side of the motto, in smaller, more business-like letters, he painted "—all others pay cash".

I would suggest that all students who trust themselves and their fellow students, and who believe in the University of North Carolina both as a University and as a training ground for our citizenry, endorse the extension of the Honor System to absence excuses.

DAVID S. BALL

'On Fanaticisim'

No one will deny that our generation is experiencing one of the most turbulent and crucial eras of all mankind. We may even ask each other at times if "fellow man" and "human value" are not things of the past, ideas which were pertinent to some long forgotten group in the far off days of old. We look around and so often see men demonstrating their inhumanity to other men; we see personal ambitions warping men's minds; we see so many human beings devoid of kindness, consideration and compassion for their fellow men—we see this and may ask "just what does the 20th century man live by?"

George Santayana, writing "On Fanaticism" in The New Republic in 1915, had some advice which we all may well heed:

"Nothing will repay a man for becoming inhuman. The aim of life is some way of living, as flexible and gentle as human nature; so that ambition may stoop to kindness, and philosophy to candor and humor. Neither prosperity nor empire nor heaven can be worth winning at the price of a virulent temper, bloody hands, an anguished spirit, and a vain hatred of the rest of the world."

The Ivy Stands Aside And Holly Has Its Day

By PETE IVEY

At Yuletide it is appropriate to point out that holly has temporarily eclipsed the ivy at UNC. It was planned that way.

The seven miles of "Holly Trail" in Chapel Hill represents a unique gardening accomplishment on this beautiful campus.

The ten years of careful attention to developing the wintertime potential of green plants that thrive in cold weather—especially holly—is now paying off.

The holly, all over North Carolina, is bigger, brighter crisper than at any time in the memory of gardeners. This is especially true at Chapel Hill where the landscaping experts who are in charge of keeping the campus beautiful display a quiet pride of accomplishment.

Now that the ivy has lost its leaves the holly is taking its place, and the red berries are clustered, big and ripe.

The wet weather coincided this past Fall with the pollenization time for the holly. This is holly's year.

The man in the forefront of the decade of holly planting here is Francis J. LeClair, who came to Chapel Hill after retirement as a horticulturalist and has worked as a landscape artist for the University. LeClair continues as a landscaping consultant.

The main idea behind the evergreen planting, including holly, is to keep the campus fresh and attractive the year-around, and not just in the spring and summer.

Visitors may see holly spotted here and there is bushes, hedges and trees. LeClair has planted them beside walkways, to enhance the beauty of buildings, old and ew. In some places holly has been planted to hide places that are not so attractive—such as the luxuriant growth of holly near Caldwell Hall, to make the outside fire escape stairs less conspicuous.

The holly here is in many varieties, chiefly as foundation plantings, as individual specimens and in barriers, screens and hedges.

Kappa Sig Pledges Beat Actives

Sunday afternoon history was made in Kenan Stadium. For the first time in the history of the chapter, the Kappa Sig pledges beat the actives in the annual pledge-active tag football game. As a penalty for losing, the actives treated the pledges to a party at the House Sunday night.

Lewis Dorm Party

Last night the boys in Lewis Dorm began the Christmas holidays by celebrating the season at the dorm's annual party. Festivities began with a supper at 5:30 p.m. in Lenior Hall. Later the group sponsored a caroling tour which spread the Christmas spirit throughout the campus and residential areas. The evening was topped off with a "closed" party in the home of Frank Carlisle on Pittsboro Road.

Alpha Gam News

On Monday the Alpha Gams held their annual Christmas banquet. Goat songs and skits given by the pledges livened the evening's entertainment. Later, gifts were exchanged.

The Alpha Gam pledges carried out the Christmas theme on Dec. 12 when they entertained other local sorority pledge classes at an open house.

Earlier in the season the Alpha Gams joined the SPEs in adopting two needy families and giving them a party, complete with Santa Claus and gifts.

Unsung Hero Bob Cunningham Is Team Man All The Way

By WAYNE THOMPSON

How does it feel to be an unsung hero? "When you're winning, individuality doesn't matter," says Bob Cunningham, unsung hero of the defending national champion Carolina Tar Heels.

The 6-4 Tar Heel co-captain should be an authority on unsung heroes. He's been one for three years and he's perfectly satisfied with the role. "I play that one style of basketball," Cunningham says, "the style that can help my team the most. We're winning and that style for me has been rebounding, defense and assist work."

Cunningham, a native of New York city, has an unusual philosophy about the game. "My high school coach at All Hallows in New York taught me something I've never forgotten. The other team is helpless when you have the ball. So when we're 15 or 20 points ahead, I like to hold on to the ball. I never shoot under those conditions unless it's a set-up."

Personal Satisfaction

The cool-thinking engineer of the Tar Heel backcourt was conspicuously ignored in the pre-season All-America polls and it was, obviously, for one reason—his low point per game average. Yet, there wasn't a more valuable man on the Carolina club last year than Cunningham.

Bob says he gets more personal satisfaction from playing defense than from any other phase of the game. "Some people get their kicks out of scoring, other from fancy plays.

Cunningham gets his biggest personal reward in keeping his opponent from scoring. "I guess holding South Carolina's great All-American Grady Wallace to 11 points last year was the biggest individual thrill of my career," Cunningam recalled.

Accordingly, Cunningham, though pleased with his team's defensive showing against South Carolina last Saturday, was displeased with his own performance. Ray Pericola scored 19 points against me Saturday and I only scored 14," Bob observed, "I feel as though I let the team down."

Aids the Scorers

Cunningham forgot to mention that it was Pericola's second lowest point total of the season and he was averaging well over 20 points per game in three previous starts. He also failed to point out that the Gamecock ace was held to only six points in the first half, helping the Tar Heels to take a commanding 36-23 lead, which was never threatened.

Asked why he didn't shoot more after demonstrating Saturday that he could score, from the outside consistently, Cunningham said, "Last year Leanie Rosenbluth was our big scorer and a crack shot. This year, when I bring the ball down the court, Pete (Brennan) is on my left and Tommy (Kearns) is on my right. Those guys are great scorers, but somebody's got to feed them. Personally, I like the job."

In four games to date, Cunningham is averaging 7.3 points per game foul circle. He proved Saturday that when the chips are down and his sharp shooting teammates aren't hitting, he can take up the slack. He proved the same thing last year in the semi-finals of the NCAA tournament when he scored 19 points to liberate the unbeaten Tar Heels against tough Michigan State.

Married Now

Cunningham, who became a bridegroom last fall, is in the best of spirits this year. He says he's not particularly bothered by the pressure of the winning streak. "I play every game as if it were the finals of the NCAA tournament, so how can I be bothered by the winning streak? I play to win all the way and no psychology in the world can change me," Cunningham stressed.

As for the current winning skein of 36 games, Bob said, "The Kentucky tournament is our big test. I think everyone on the squad realizes it and we should know our potentialities after it's over."

Cunningham has a good point . . . in fact he has quite a few good points which won't be overlooked this season. He still could make All-American you know.

'57-58 Tar Heels Are Holding Own With Miracle Team

By BOB MYERS

Are Carolina's unbeaten Tar Heels better than last year?

The soothsayers are still gazing in their crystal balls for an answer that time will tell ultimately.

Logically, the answer is no, taking into account the departure of an All-American and the loss of two key men by injuries from a team that didn't lose in 32.

But compare the first four games of last season with the first four this season and, statistically, the Tar Heels are holding their own.

In extending their win skein to 36, Carolina shot less from the floor and free throw line, but hit with a couple percentage point better accuracy against the same 1956 opponents. However, the team scoring average is 8.5 points shy of the 1956 four-game average.

What To Expect?

And an anxious Frank McGuire, who didn't know what to expect from his new Tar Heel edition, has been pleased with the defensive prowess, despite the incapacitation of Joe Quigg and Danny Lotz, 6-9 and 6-7 respectively.

In four games Carolina scored on 123 of 257 field goal attempts, made good on 80 of 111 free throws, grabbed 158 rebounds and scored 326 points. That's 47.8 per cent from the floor and 72 per cent on the line.

The four opponents, Clemson, George Washington, Furman and South Carolina hit on 95 of 247 field goal tries (38.4 percent) 56 of 87 free tosses (64.3 percent), recovered 124 rebounds, scored 246 points for a 61.5 average.

Against the same teams, the fabulous 1956 McGuire machine scored 136 of 298 field goal attempts (45.8 percent), connected on 88 of 129 free throws (68.2 percent), collected 198 rebounds, racked up 360 points for an average of 90 per game.

Floor Percentage

In the first four games of 1956, Carolina foes hit 91 of 275 field goals (33.1 percent), sank 100 of 142 free throws (70 percent), got 132 rebounds, scored 282 points for a 70.5 average.

Individually, at this time last year Lennie Rosenbluth had counted 118 points on 47 of 96 field goals, 24 of 34 free tosses for an average of 29.5 per game.

To take up some of the scoring slack, each of the three returning Tar Heel starters, Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns have a higher scoring average to date, and the two sophomore starters, Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley have surprised even McGuire.

Brennan Leads

Brennan, the lanky senior forward and last year's number two fireman and top rebounder, confiscated the scoring lead from Tommy Kearns by dropping in 17 points in the Tar Heels' 36th victory, 70-38 over South Carolina. Pete has tallied 82 points to average 20.5. Kearns is second with 77 points and a 19.2 mark.

In 1956 after four games, Brennan had 44 points (18.5), Kearns 31 points (12.7) and Cunningham 20 (5.0). Brennan was leading the team in rebounds with 48 and is six shy of that number this season. The now injured Joe Quigg had thrown in 53 points (13.2) and gotten 39 rebounds to indicate the seriousness of his loss to the team this year.

Rosy Was Big Loss

The shoes vacated by Rosenbluth and Quigg were oversized, but Carolina's young sophomores have tried them on effectively. Shaffer, the blonde Pittsburgh giant, is averaging 15.5 per game and Kepley, the tallest man on the team (6-9), has pulled down 39 rebounds and is averaging 6.7 in point production.

Harvey Salz, the frisky playmaking backcourter, came into his own with 11 markers against Furman and a dozen against the Gamecocks to move his average to 7.2 and become the number six man.

Whether the Tar Heels are as good or better, Frank McGuire knows statistics have a way of telling whoppers and that Minnesota in the Kentucky Invitational Tournament at Lexington, Friday (Dec. 20), won't be convinced by cold figures.

Don Buckley, Jim Long Named '58 Grid Mgrs.

Don Buckley and Jim Long have been named co-managers of the 1958 Carolina football team, it was announced yesterday. Both were assistant managers this season.

Buckley is a personnel major from Lincolnton and a member of Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity. He participated in the East-West football game in his senior year in high school.

Long is a Morehead Scholar from Yanceyville. He is a pre-medical student and a member of Chi Psi social fraternity.

news in brief

Defection

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Rogers today announced the defection to the West of Dr. Jerzy Leon Nowinski, internationally known Polish scientist.

The Attorney General said in an address at a National Press Club luncheon that Dr. Nowinski, a specialist in thermoelasticity, was granted asylum in the United States yesterday.

Similar asylum will be granted to his wife, Maria Francizka, and their daughter, Kristina, 7, both of whom are now in England, Rogers said.

Rogers inserted into an extemporaneous speech a prepared text on the Nowinski case.

Breaks Off

ROME, Jan. 3 (AP)—An outraged Italian music world today showered criticism on fiery soprano Maria Meneghini Callas for abruptly breaking off her opening night performance at the Rome opera.

"Via la Callas da Roma" (Callas, get out of Rome) shouted opera lovers crowding the street in front of her hotel.

Inside, the American-born soprano kept to her bed with ailments diagnosed by her doctor as bronchitis and laryngitis.

Miss Callas said her illness forced her to quit after the first act of Bellini's opera "Norma" last night.

Italian newspaper critics took the view that she had lost her temper, not her voice.

Reaches Pole

AUCKLAND, Jan. 3 (AP)—Sir Edmund Hillary, conqueror of Mt. Everest, reached the South Pole today with gasoline to spare for only 20 more miles. He camped near the polar station of 17 Americans.

The rangy 38-year-old New Zealander, knighted for climbing to the top of the world's tallest peak in 1953, announced he had reached the bottom of the earth in a radio message to Scott Base in Antarctica.

His 1,200-mile trek across glaciers and crevasse-riddled snow fields with tractors was the third in history and the first in 46 years to reach the pole by land. With him were four other New Zealanders.

Dr. Vivian Fuchs of Britain, heading a party from the opposite or South American, side of the pole, was believed still to be 200 miles away.

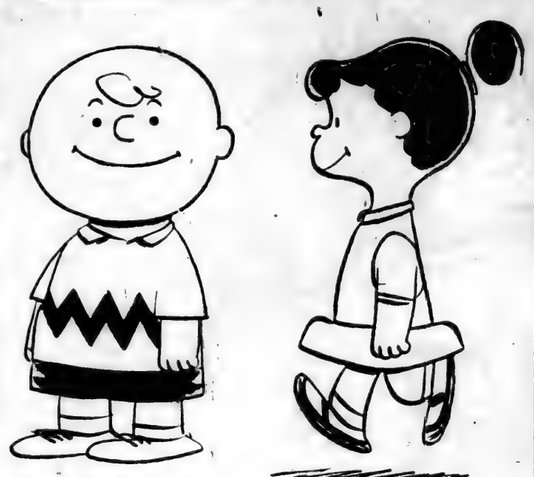
Kills Mother

BAYONNE, N. J., Jan. 3 (AP) — Police said today a 15-year-old schoolboy has confessed to slashing his mother"s throat with a pocket knife and leaving her to die on a bulkhead during a family argument.

Robert Gaydos, 15, was charged with juvenile delinquency in the slaying of his mother, Mrs. Mary Gaydos, 36, of E. 19th St.

Det. Lawrence Farrell said police had talked to Robert and then questioned him further "because we didn't like his answers."

Farrell said that Mrs. Gaydos had driven with her son to the bulkhead at the foot of 25th St. along Newark Bay. They were arguing and the boy finally stabbed his mother, Farrell said.



UNC Botanist Greulach Attends NSF Conference

The University was represented at a recent National Science Foundation conference in Washington, D. C., by Dr. Victor A. Greulach, professor of botany and co-director of UNC's Summer Institute for High School Teachers of Science and Mathematics.

Dr. Greulach joined some 100 other directors in a planning session for the 1958 institutes, to be held throughout the United States during the summer.

The UNC Institute, set for June 9 through July 18, will include at least 55 high school teachers, each receiving stipends and allowances of $450 to $600 under a grant of $61,300 from the NSF.

Prof. E. A. Cameron of the UNC Department of Mathematics is serving as co-director with Professor Greulach. This is the second year that an NSF Summer Institute has been held on the UNC campus.

Oh, Good Grief! Almost Forgot: 'Peanuts' Has Come To UNC

By ANN FRYE

"Oh, good grief!"

Good Ol' Charlie Brown, the lovable misfit, and the other "Peanuts" characters make their debut in today's Daily Tar Heel.

For those of you who aren't yet acquainted with Good Ol' Charlie Brown and the rest, here is some essential information about them.

The hero, of course, is Charlie Brown, who says, "I've never done anything right in my life, and I'm not going to start now!"

Poor Charlie Brown is disliked by every one, because, as he put it, "I'm not popular."

Lucy, who has won fussbudget trophies for years, is the girl who constantly antagonizes poor Charlie Brown, Schroeder and her brother Linus. Lucy is extremely proud of her accomplishments in the world of fussbudgeting. She once had an article published called, "I was a fussbudget for the FBI."

And she likes to quote the newspaperman who said, "That girl was born to fuss."

Little Linus with his security blanket carries said blanket throughout the comic strips. Readers suffered with Little Linus through the two agonizing weeks Lucy locked the blanket in a closet. Linus was a nervous wreck by the time he finally got his blanket back.

Snoopy, the dog, is the world's best imitator. His recent episode involved imitating a penguin, much to the usual disgust of Charlie Brown.

Snoopy probably likes to annoy Charlie Brown because of a recent conversation between Charlie Brown and Schroeder. Charlie Brown was commenting on the high prices paid for French poodles. When Schroeder asked him how much a dog like Snoopy would cost, Charlie Brown said, "Oh, his kind are a dime a dozen."

Schroeder, who attributes everything to Beethoven (even the Davy Crockett achievements), did the unforgiveable recently: he 'orgot Beethoven's birthday. Lucy had her fun laughing about this because she recalled the many times Schroeder turned down her proposals for marriage just because of the German composer.

These are the main characters in Charles M. Schulz's "Peanuts." Some of the other common ones are Pig Pen, who has been called the "human soil bank," and the two goonies, Violet and Patty.

Ex-Student Involved

Men's Honor Council Continues Its Investigation Of 'Rubber Stamp' Case

Will Not Divulge Suspect's Identity

The Men's Honor Council today continued a sweeping investigation into fraudulent and forged excuses allegedly purchased by numerous Carolina students from an ex-student at the University.

George Ragsdale, Men's Honor Council chairman, said more students probably are involved in the investigation "than have ever been involved in any case of which student government was cognizant."

Meanwhile, officials here refused to identify the "ex-student" who allegedly produced and sold authentic-looking class excuses for two dollars each. It was learned, however, that he had dropped out of school before the Honor Council investigation began.

All Ragsdale would say about the "ex-student" was:

"An ex-student of the University, whose name is not and will not be disclosed by the Men's Council, has admitted that he manufactured and sold false excuses to members of the student body.

"He immediately told the truth when confronted and is cooperating with the Men's Council at the present time.

Rubber Stamp

Ragsdale said the "ex-student" had secured hundreds of blank excuses similar to those used by the University, and employed a rubber stamp identical to that used in Hanes Hall to mark on the blanks the time for which a student was to be excused.

The system involved not only the fraudulent excuses themselves, he said, but also the forging of names in Hanes Hall and the infirmary as sources by which the excuses allegedly were granted.

Broad Effects

The investigation and disclosure of persons involved was expected to have broad effects at the University. Sam Magill, director of student activities, said some persons may lose credit in courses where the falsified excuses were used.

"I would think that such a person (a General College student already with three cuts before using one of the excuses) would be in danger of being dropped with an 'F'," he said.

Magill said that action against students in the upper college by the faculty "would depend upon the school involved." Upper college schools have varying regulations about class attendance.

No Legal Action Yet

The director of student activities also said that no legal action against the "ex-student"

Teenage Vandals & Havoc In Cobb

Local police continued an investigation today into a quiet New Year's Eve party for Chapel Hill teenagers that turned into a havoc-wrecking affair in the basement of Cobb Dormitory.

Chapel Hill police said Friday that investigation was drawing to a close in the destruction of a juke box, theft of records and other vandalism in Cobb Tuesday night.

Sam Magill, director of student activities, said the UNC dormitory had been loaned to the local "Y-Teens" Club for its New Year's Eve party, which was chaperoned by an adult couple.

As the party was over, and the last couple was leaving, "several boys" went into the dormitory basement "and started throwing bottles, sliding chairs—just generally wreaking havoc," Magill said.

He said that one boy fell into the juke box, destroying the machine, and that all the records were missing when officials surveyed the damage.

Magill said one Carolina student is believed to have been involved in the fracas, and that his participation probably will result in Student Council action.

No formal charges had been lodged Friday.

Coast Guard Plans Classes For Eligible College Students

The United States Coast Guard will convene two Reserve Officer Candidate classes for college men during the coming months. The first will begin in March, while the second class starts next July.

To be eligible, a non-veteran must be a graduate of an accredited four-year college. A veteran must have completed two years of college and two years' active duty in the Coast Guard or Navy. Persons with three years of college must have completed one year of active duty.

Age restrictions are 21 to 26 for non-veterans and 21 to 31 for veterans. Height restrictions are 5'6" to 6'4". Prior to acceptance into the Coast Guard as Officer Candidates, applicants must pass a physical examination and obtain a passing score on an Officer Qualification Test.

Selection is then based on the results of an interview and study of the Candidate's background.

Selected candidates will receive 17 weeks of training at the Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn. At the Academy candidates have the rank of Seaman Apprentice (Officer Candidate) and study subjects like navigation, seamanship, gunnery, law enforcement and many others.

After graduation, candidates must serve three years active duty. Assignments will include such fields as Law Enforcement, Aids to Navigation, Engineering, Port Security, or Search and Rescue. After approximately 1½ years active duty, the graduates will be eligible for promotion to Lieutenant (junior grade).

Men who are interested in the program should write for particulars to the Coast Guard Reserve Office, U. S. Post Office Building, Room 3373, Norfolk, Va.

Wolfe Letters Contributed To Wilson Library

Three letters from Thomas Wolfe written in 1929 to Benjamin Cone of Greensboro just before and just after publication of Wolfe"s first novel, "Look Homeward, Angel," have been given to the library here by Cone.

The letters contain the same powerful and emotional writing of Wolfe at his strongest.

The first and longest letter has been published in the 1956 volume "Letters of Thomas Wolfe" edited by Elizabeth Nowell and published by Scribners.

The second and third letters have never before been published.

Wolfe recalls to Cone their excursions around Paris in 1925 in the company of Frank Graham and Mark Noble. He also expressed his worry over the possible reception of his book.

hTe letters contributed by Cone will be added to the Thomas Wolfe Collection in the Louis R. Wilson Library here.

Five UNC Zoologists Receive Appointments

Five zoologists in Chapel Hill have been honored by being chosen to represent their respective societies to the national "Roster" of Scientific and Technical Personnel.

The Roster was recently moved from Washington, D. C., to Raleigh.

Although the scientists designated by 11 professional societies came from various parts of North Carolina andd beyond, five of the eleven came from the Department of Zoology on the Chapel Hill campus.

The zoologists chosen were Dr. C. E. Jenner, chairman of the Department, Dr. C. D. Beers, Dr. D. P. Costello, Dr. H. E. Lehman and Dr. M. Whittinghill. Still another representative from Chapel Hill was Dr. John Larsh of the Department of Parasitology.

Choral Unit To Present 'King David'

The UNC Music Department will present the fall semester's final event in the Tuesday Evening Series on Jan. 14 when the University Chorus will appear in concert.

Honegger's symphonic psalm "King David" will be the work performed at the Tuesday night program, which is set for 8 o'clock in Hill Hall, and is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor of music, will be musical director for the performance by the University Chorus, soloists and the University Symphony Orchestra.

The Honegger work, to be given for the first time in Chapel Hill, was first performed in 1921 in a small Swiss village, and brought immediate recognition to its then unknown composer. It has become a standard part of choral repertoire, one of the few 20th century works so honored.

The 27 musical numbers are connected by a narration of the background events from the life of the psalmist. This narration will be performed by Earl Wynn and Jo Jurgensen. Vocal soloists include Martha Fouse, soprano; Marilyn Zschau, contralto; and Gene Strassler, tenor. The musical portions of the work alternate between solos, choruses, and orchestral interludes, all combining to produce a rich and barbaric musical spectacle.

UNC Grant Will Boost Teaching

The University of North Carolina was among some 135 colleges and universities sharing a $1,150,000 grant made Thursday by the Du Pont Company, it was learned yesterday.

The University will receive a grant of $2,500 for education of a scientist or engineer plus an award of $300 to the University and payment of tuition and fees for a post-graduate teaching assistantship in chemistry.

Also, two fellowships of $3,000 for future teachers of science or mathematics in high school and a summer research grant of $1,500 for fundamental research in chemistry.

In addition to supporting the teaching of science and mathematics, officials said, the funds will continue to support fundamental research and fellowships.

Open Hearing On Tar Heel Slated Jan. 13

An open hearing for suggestions pertaining to the operation of The Daily Tar Heel will be held Tuesday afternoon from 4 to 7 o'clock in Roland Parker II.

A second public hearing has been set for Monday, Jan. 13, beginning at 2 p.m. in Roland Parker II.

Both meetings were being sponsored by the Newspaper Research Committee, a special committee set up by the Student Legislature. The committee's purpose is to study the operations of various newspapers and make any recommendations to Student Legislature for the improvement of The Daily Tar Heel.

All interested persons are invited to participate in either of the two public hearings.

Wake Forest Tickets

The ticket office in Woollen Gym announced yesterday that there are some 1,000 student and faculty tickets still available for the Wake Forest game tonight at 8 o'clock. Anyone wishing to see the contest who doesn't already have a ticket is urged to bring his passbook to the ticket window before noon today. All seats are reserved.

IN THE INFIRMARY

The following students were reported in the University Infirmary yesterday.

Misses Hilda Holt and Lala Ballantine and Raymond Smith, William Savage, Gordon Street, Joe Eller, Walter Slater, Milburn Gibbs, William Brigman and Julian Smith.

'NO TIME FOR SERGEANTS'—Charles Hohman and Mary Dell Roberts portray a scene from the comedy stage hit, "No Time For Sergeants," which is coming to Memorial Hall Friday, Jan. 10 at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are available at 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved at $2.20, $3.30 and $4.40.

The False Excuse Fraud

The Men's Honor Council has shown once again the mighty arm of student government in upholding the ideals of the honor system at the University of North Carolina.

This time, it has initiated and is currently conducting a broad investigation into alleged use of fraudulent and forged excuses purchased by Carolina students from an ex-student here.

The ugly part of the entire investigation is that it points to a violation of the honor system at the University, not only by a single person who no longer is a student, but also by numerous individuals who paid to be fraudulently excused from class.

Obviously, effects of the "rubber stamp" case will not immediately be seen in policies at the University. But it's safe to think the false excuses will ultimately have some bearing on decisions forthcoming by the administration.

Specifically, we refer to current efforts of student government to put class excuses in all areas of the college program on an honor system basis. We wonder, in the wake of the discovery of the false excuse scandal, if students would uphold an honor excuse system.

Perhaps they would; perhaps they would not. Again we say they should be given a chance to do so, even if they fail in the attempt. Disclosure of violations of the excuse system by the Men's Honor Council, we feel, points out the fact that student government would do its part to uphold and strengthen the proposed system.

A second effect of the council's investigation is the fact that it will uncover, during the next several weeks, wholesale overcutting of classes by students in upper and lower college alike. Indeed, it already has done so.

Conceivably, students who have overcut some of their courses by virtue of using the falsified excuses will be subject to failure of their courses. It is the instructor's right to drop a student from his class when overcutting has occurred. That right prevails under current circumstances.

Whatever is the policy of the University in that respect, we feel, should be expressed similarly in all schools and classes of the college. If a freshman or sophomore is dropped from a course because he overcut, then so should be the junior or senior who has cut under the same circumstances.

It would not be fair, we feel, to give one student an "F" in a course because he was party to the fraud, and to let another remain in class because he happened to be a junior of a senior. Cheating is cheating, and punishment for it should be equal and the same for all the guilty parties.

After all, that is what Men's Honor Council action will boil down to. It will be the punishment of a student for participation in the false excuse system, with judgment of the council not to be influenced by whether the false excuse constituted an overcut.

Would it be right for a freshman or sophomore to be dropped from a course because his use of a false excuse constituted an overcut, while a junior or senior who did likewise should be allowed to remain in class and get credit for 14 weeks' work?

We don't think so. The crime committed here is cheating, using a fraudulent excuse to get out of class. That it might have constituted an overcut is incidental. And consequently, the punishment of all should be the same and equal. That punishment, again, could conceivably be the dropping of participants from a course.

Thus far we have assumed that the Men's Honor Council will look with leniency upon first offenders of the Honor Code who turn themselves in for violation of that code. However, the Council does have the authority to suspend or expel from the University any student who has participated in the false excuse fraud.

Honor Council Chairman George Ragsdale already has called on offenders to turn themselves over to the Honor Council, noting that "the policy towards students who report themselves has always been to grant leniency."

There is much in what Ragsdale says. It is noteworthy to point out here that during Ragsdale's period on the Council, only one student has been permanently suspended from the University. Obviously, the fact that some persons have turned themselves in to the council has had some influence on the council's judgment.

Consequently, we would call on those involved to turn themselves over to the council. In the final analysis, all offenders will be cited to court anyway, after a thorough investigation into Hanes Hall records by the council. That investigation will continue until all guilty parties have been revealed.

GUEST EDITORIAL

First In U. S.

We don't intend to dwell on the subject (prolonged tendency is dangerous) nor to draw a deep conclusion (it's intoxicating), but we are struck somehow by a classic irony:

In its bid for industrial primacy, North Carolina has placed proper emphasis on diversification —on the type of enterprise that won't fold its tents if depression threatens or collapse entirely if depressional pockets occur. Yet, North Carolina has one industry that meets the optimum specifications.

The Internal Revenue Service announced the other day that Tarheelia still leads the nation in the manufacture of illicit whiskey.

The booze is made—and a lot of it is sold—in the so-called "dry" counties. But the state realizes practically nothing, beyond possible notoriety, from the whole endeavor.

It makes us wonder a little.

Number One in the Nation is almost always a prideful title. In the current instance, it is North Carolina's shame.

—The Charlotte Observer

Egg Laying

The Census Bureau reported that American chickens last year laid 61,000,000,000 eggs. We wonder if they would make an egg — if they could be gathered into one —as large as the one the United States laid at Cape Canaveral last year.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Russian Press Twisting News About America

By WHIT WHITFIELD

According to the Associated Press, the Soviet Literary Gazette recently printed a Washington expose in which the characters of many important figures in Congress were defamed. One such gentleman was Senator Carter Glass of Virginia. The Gazette said that he had not been to a Senate session in over two years, and that his administrative assistant had been acting in his capacity for that length of time. The interesting thing is that Sen. Glass died in 1946.

Far be it from us to call the Russians liars, but it's a cinch that they never tell the truth.

This is a good example of the reportorial and journalistic work being done in the Soviet Union. They somehow never print anything which does not further the aims of the Party. We wouldn't be surprised if the average person in Russia does not know whether World War II is over.

A New Hampshire couple came back from their honeymoon to find that they had not been married at all, at least according to their marriage certificate. Instead of their names on the certificate were those of the attendants at the wedding. It was all quite official, even signed by witnesses. Now they have a problem.

Speaking of marriages, or lack of them a young girl in Lima, Peru had a baby recently. This was not too unusual, but the fact that the mother was just eight years old is. The father, aged 21, was put in jail upon requesting to marry the girl. It seems that she is too young to get married.

INS carried a rather unusual story recently.

A 70 year old woman was seriously injured in Los Angeles. She was walking along the sidewalk, minding her own business, when a three year old boy rode up behind her on a tricycle and shouted, "Get out of the way or I'll run over you!"

The old lady replied, "Now you wouldn't do anything like that."

He did.

Police are human too, or so it is said. Proof? A Washington cop was arrested while on duty at a ballgame. It seems that he was driving a car that did not belong to him. His reason was that he needed transportation while his car was being repaired.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Education V: New System Needed

According to a recent article in the U. S. News and World Report, Admiral Rickover intimated that the educational system of the United States was as many as four years behind schools in Europe.

Unless the U. S. claims or is willing to admit that its youth is intellectually retarded in ability, the U. S. can correct the educational dilemma that has set the U. S. so far behind Russia and the countries of Europe.

There needs to be a wholesale revamping of certain current concepts in education circles, and there especially need be a raising of standards so that the youth of the U. S. is challenged, stimulated, and able to compete in the all too real race against annihilation.

Perhaps the fundamental concept to be destroyed is the conception of the great importance of social compatibility in schools. Hence, at the present time children five years of age who are capable of doing second grade work, are not allowed to go to school, and children of seven who cannot keep up to first grade work, are in school holding down the aspirations of the other children.

Moreover, the old practice of skipping grades has been all but abandoned due to the feeling current among educators that a student in an environment of his social and chronological peers will feel most comfortable to pursue his studies. However, what is neglected is the fact that these social and chronological equals are intellectually inferior causing more discomfort and a great deal of enforced retardation.

Under such a system, students qualified to start school could do so, at that age that they were qualified. They would be grouped according to intellectual ability, with means provided for advancement to a higher group if they find work too slow, or dropping to a lower group in order that they might not be befuddled by the speed that the class is going.

The students would be so divided also when time for specialization in the various subjects, and graduation would be conditional on meeting requirements rather than passing through so many years of school.

Second in the steps of revamping the educational set-up would be to raise the requirements for graduation. Students in France, for instance, have mathematics as a high school graduation requirement that isn't taught in the U. S. until the third year of college. This must be changed, and the U. S. should have as high or higher standards as any other country in the world.

Thirdly, the primary emphasis of schools should be shifted from the knowing-how-to-do to the knowing that and why. Hence, many courses will be dropped from the current grammar school and high school curriculum, to make way for a more comprehensive study of the essentials of education.

The fourth change must be in the realm of individual attention which must be increased, and every avenue which might lead to the stimulation of individual thought must be opened and pursued.

There is as a fifth need, a necessity to bring to the child the feeling that he is indeed a part of a society, and that he must get along in the world in which he lives. This can be effected in two ways. The first way is the obvious means of activities within the class, which as it is made up of his peers, intellectually, will be indeed more stimulating than other group make-up. The other way is through the avenue of physical education, which both strengthens or should strengthen the child's physical processes and should teach him the group co-operation that is so necessary. Again here the division should be made according to ability in order that all can get equal benefit from the activity.

If these changes are made, perhaps then the U. S. can start the slow ascent toward a strong solid democracy. The emphasis must be switched from the social to the intellectual.

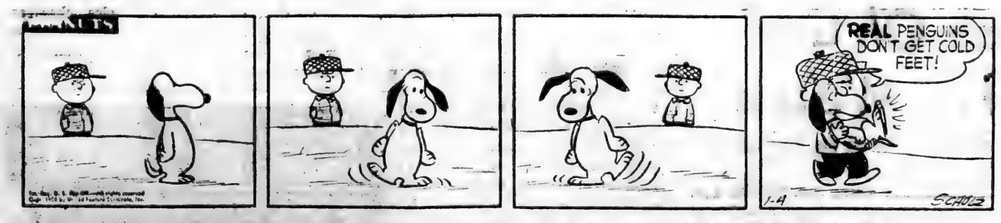
TV: A Blessing? Too Maligned

Barry Winston

Nowadays, everybody's knocking television. It's the thing to do. According to a recent poll, the number of people who hate TV is exactly equal to the number of people who own TV sets. I just can't understand it. What's wrong with these people? What do they have against this noble medium of entertainment and communication?

Certainly they don't think it's a time waster. Sure, folks spend a little more time in front of the old 21 inches than they did before TV. But there weren't any sets then. And the little woman really doesn't waste very much time during the day, with her eye-balls glued to Bride and Groom, Matinee Theater, Queen for a Day, Modern Romances, Strike It Rich, Peggy Mann, American Bandstand, Do You Trust Your Wife, What's Cookin', Garry Moore, A. Godfrey, Love of Life, Search for Happiness, Guiding Light, AV Matinee, The World Turns, Beat the Clock, Houseparty, Susie, Brighter Day, The Secret Storm, The Edge of Night, or Mary Backstage, Noble Wife. Sure, she watches all of them, but she's not wasting time. She's doing the ironing and getting an education at the same time. You don't think so? Just stay home some day and watch. Of course, there may be a burned shirt or two, and double creases in the slacks, but what's that compared to watching Jack Bailey chuck little old ladies under the chin while he cries out the story of their sad, miserable lives?

And it has been said that college students waste too much time watching TV programs at night in the dorm social rooms or fraternity houses, when they should be studying. It's just not so. Go into a dorm social room or fraternity house any night of the week. The place will be empty, I guarantee you. They're not sitting around, watching Gunsmoke at Drygulch Pass and wasting time. Where are they? Down at the Rat, watching Gunsmoke at Drygulch Pass and drinking beer, of course. Why waste time just watching TV?



Some people object to TV on the grounds that it stifles conversation, and that talking is becoming a lost art. Nothing could be sillier. TV actually stimulates conversation. Just holler across the room at a friend while everybody is absorbed in watching Clark Gable make love to Theda Bara. See the warm response you get from everyone in the room. Or the next time you're watching TV at your date's house, just as Matt Dillon is about to go for his six-shooter, ask her old man what he thinks of this cold snap we're having. Well, maybe he won't actually say anything, but then one look is worth ten thousand words, or something like that.

If you have access to a TV set in a home, you can dispell for yourself the ugly rumor that watching television has disrupted the eating habits of the viewing public. Their eating habits couldn't be more regular. Just watch. Every fifteen minutes, when that suave looking man pops onto the screen and begins, "And now, a word from . . ." observe closely the actions of your hostess. With befitting grace, she bolts for the kitchen to stir the TV dinner, and is back in plenty of time for, ". . . and now, back to our program." And supper is served promptly at six (or) seven, when John Cameron Cameron comes on with the West Texas weather forecast, which doesn't particularly interest the lady of the house. As for the actual eating of the meal, everything goes like clock-work. The supper hours programs are thoughtfully timed so that you may chew and swallow exactly a mouthful between each stabbing. What could be better for the digestion?

If you can stay on, into the later hours of the evening, you will have the opportunity to see another gross falsehood vanish in a puff of Arid. TV has been unjustly accused of breaking down family unity and strength, by setting the members one against the other over whether they will watch Groucho, Richard Diamond, or Zorro. See for yourself the absurdity of such claims. Observe the finesse and democracy with which the head of the house settles the problem. "ZORRO!" in a stern, respect-commanding voice is all that is required, and peace reigns supreme once again. And if someone should be fool enough to try to tell you that TV breaks down the warmth and closeness of a family, you will be able to scoff and tell them how you saw, first-hand, a typical family spend a typical evening in front of their set, never once moving from their seats. Through the night, they sat there, side by side, drawn together by a common bond strong beyond imagination. Side by side they sat, a close-knit group, unified by a singular, burning goal: the late-late show!

Finally, there are the never-ending, insidious innuendos against the quality of the programs themselves, and their brethren art-form, the commercial. These are almost more than my soul can bear! My heart is literally torn from its moorings when I hear these scoundrels casting aspersions against some of our finest original American folkways. Who could possibly question the educational values of such shows as $64,000 Question, 21, Tic-Tac-Dough, or Strike It Rich? Where else but on one of these shows could you learn the 1903 population of Pago-Pago, or the annual timber exports of the Archipelagoes? Where else could you learn the M.O. of a 3792 carrying a 45 but on Badge 741? Where else but on the Oral Roberts show could you learn do-it-yourself appendectomy? And the commercials! How could anyone possibly fail to see the intrinsic, inherent, esthetic beauty of a giant size, living-color, box of Tide? With stereophonic sound! Or is that movies? Oh, well, I'll defend them next time.

Noted Cambridge Scientist To Speak At Session Monday

A leading world statistician, Sir Ronald Fisher of Cambridge University, will visit the UNC campus on Monday when he will address an afternoon colloquium session.

Sir Ronald will speak on "The Meaning of Probability" at 4 o'clock. Dr. Harold Hotelling, associate director of the Institute of Statistics, said that the Statistics Colloquium meeting has been set tentatively for 206 Phillips Hall.

Fisher, who is Balfour professor of genetics at Cambridge, spoke last week at the Indianapolis meeting of the American Assn. for the Advancement of Science. In his AAAS address he challenged the validity of statistical methods used in studying smoking's relationship to cancer.

In his talk here Monday Sir Ronald will discuss controversial material which he presented in his latest book, "Statistical Methods and Scientific Inference," published in 1956.

All persons with a scientific interest have been invited to hear Sir Ronald's talk. He will address classes on the UNC campus Monday and be honored at a luncheon by UNC statisticians.

Before joining the Cambridge faculty in 1943, Fisher taught for 10 years at the University of London. From 1919 to 1933 he was associated with the Rothamsted Experimental Station in England, where he won recognition for his research into the effect of rainfall on wheat yields.

While at Rothamsted he worked out many basic statistical techniques including "analysis of variance," now applied to experimentation in agriculture, medicine and other biological sciences, industry and astronomy.

Fisher, who is a Fellow of the Royal Society in London, was created a Knight in 1952. He has been honored by membership in top scientific academies of many nations, including Denmark, India and the United States.

In 1952 Sir Ronald participated in a summer conference held at Blue Ridge by the Institute of Statistics of the Consolidated University. He has taught at various U. S. Colleges and universities during the summer months.

Fisher completed his bachelor's degree in astronomy and his doctorate in science, both at Cambridge. His honorary degrees include the D. Sc. from American University, Harvard, University of London, and University of Chicago; and the LL.D from Calcutta and Glasgow.

Big Stories Of Year On UNC Campus Include Basketball & Beating Dook

By PETE IVEY

The "Biggest News Stories of the Year" in education at UNC featured inaugural and installation ceremonies of a president and a chancellor; important scientific and humanities developments; an improved status in connection with faculty salaries; recognition for special programs for academic excellence; and numerous curriculum innovations, training programs, research projects of special note, and a string of visiting lecturers that would make the old Chatauqua circuit officials applaud discreetly.

In addition to the egghead events, the UNC basketball team was "No. 1 in the Nation." In football we beat Duke.

William C. Friday became President of the Consolidated University and William B. Aycock became Chancellor.

The Humanities Institute was established in March, and a bequest to support studies in the classics bolstered that area in September through the will of George L. Paddison.

The National Science Foundation gave over a quarter of a million for a science and mathematics teachers training program, and repeated the grant for a second year's program.

A year-long survey to find out desirable relationships between the School of Business Administration and the economic community of the state was begun, financed by the Committee for Economic Development.

An experiment in in-school TV teaching in a large number of North Carolina school systems was begun, with the cooperation of the University's educational television station, WUNC-TV on Channel 4.

The UNC Press continued its practice of publishing outstanding books. "Bridge to the Sun" became a best-seller, with movie and foreign publication rights assured.

The University undertook a broad range of research projects in medicine, physics, chemistry, education, statistics, business, humanities, and in the social sciences, much of it through the Institute for Research in Social Science.

The new Knapp Building of the Institute of Government was put into use, in a broad new program of usefulness by that organization.

For the second successive year, UNC was the top choice of the majority of southern scholars in their selection of an institution to attend for graduate studies through the Southern Fellowships Fund.

An international conference on gravitation was held in January.

Among new appointments were James L. Godfrey as dean of the faculty and Alexander Heard as dean of graduate studies. Jerrold Orne was named Librarian, Daniel Price director of the Institute for Research in Social Science, and Arthur Branch business manager.

Among faculty honors: Dr. Warner Wells won the O. Max Gardner Award. Opportunities for study and lectures abroad and in other institutions in this country went to Kenan Professor W. L. Wiley, Arthur Whitehill, Werner Friederich, Walter Spearman, Dr. B. L. Ullman, Alexander Heard, Arnold Nash, Robert A. Hall and Franklin Williams.

Dr. Louis Round Wilson's book on the 30 year's history of the University from 1900 to 1930 was published.

Among the visiting lecturers on the campus were Edith Sitwell, Robert Frost, Henry Steele Commager, Robert Kennedy, Adlai Stevenson. These were top stars among hundreds of speakers.

UNC took its place as one acute angle of the North Carolina Research Triangle, and a member of the University's faculty, Professor George L. Simpson Jr., become director.

Besides these special events which are listed mainly for their news aspects, it must be emphasized that UNC, its students, its faculty and its administrators continued activities that are not sensational and outwardly exciting, but nevertheless necessary and essential.

The 100 or more schools, departments, institutes, bureaus and offices maintained a daily schedule of teaching research, adult as well as undergraduate and graduation education, and academic dedication characteristic of this oldest of state universities.

Lecture Series Set By League

A challenging series of lectures will be presented by the Women's International League of Peace and Freedom and the Community Church during January, February and March.

Concerning the status of the Negro in the United States from past to present, they are designed to inform in an historical sense entirely. They will not touch on current race problems.

Each lecturer will be a person expert in his field, and the talks are expected to provide information lacking in the average knowledge of the sociological position of the Negro.

The first lecture will be presented next Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock in the Assembly Room of the Library by Prof. Edgar Thompson of Duke University. His topic will be "The Negro as Slave and Freeman in the Culture of the U. S."

Other lectures to be given are:

Jan. 22—"Negro Leaders and Their Influence," by Prof. Neal Hughley, North Carolina College.

Feb. 12—"The Impact of the Negro's Emergence from Agriculture and Domestic Labor into Other Occupations, Upon Urban Life in U. S.," by Dr. Guy Johnson, UNC.

Feb. 26—"The Legal Status of the Negro," by Prof. Turner, Dean of the Law School, North Carolina College.

March 12—"The Negro in Politics," by Dr. Helen Edmonds, North Carolina College.

March 26 — "Segregation and the Press," by Dr. Roy Carter, UNC.

STAR OF BETHLEHEM

Final performances of "Star of Bethlehem" will be given this weekend and on Monday night at the Morehead Planetarium. None of these performances have been filled as yet, Manager A. F. Jenzano has announced.

Jenzano said the run of the ninth annual tribute to Christmas will not be extended, "but there are sufficient seats available at the last nine performances Saturday, Sunday and Monday to accomodate almost everyone who wishes to see it."

The Planetarium is committed to Boy, Girl and Cub Scout organizations to begin presenting "Star Scouting" on Tuesday.

APHA President To Address Public Health Seminar Monday

A native North Carolinian who now holds the highest office in the American Public Health Association will be guest speaker at the School of Public Health student-faculty seminar Monday it was announced today by Dr. E. G. McGavran, dean of the school.

His topic will be "Preparation for Public Health Responsibility in Radiation Protection."

Dr. McGavran revealed that Roy J. Morton of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, currently president of the American Public Health Association will speak at 2:30 p.m. Monday in the Assembly Room of the Wilson library.

Morton was born in Jacksonville and received an A.B. degree at Elon College and a B.S. and M.S. in civil engineering from UNC. He is former director of the sanitary engineering program of the Tennessee Department of Public Health and associate professor of public health at Vanderbilt University.

For the past nine years he has been at the Oak Ridge National Laboratories in Tennessee where he is leader of the Radioactive Waste Research and Development Section of the Health Physics Division.

involved has thus far been contemplated, "but that's not to say that there won't be."

Conceivably, he could be charged with fraud and forgery.

Ragsdale, commenting on a report in some North Carolina newspapers that about 50 persons would be involved, asserted that "at this time, I can only say that this estimate is incorrect." He indicated the number would be greater than 50.

He said that to date, 15 students have turned themselves into the council and have admitted using false excuses.

15 Commended

"These students are to be commended," Ragsdale said. "The policy of the council towards students who report themselves has always been to grant leniency. There is no reason to believe that there will be any change in that general policy."

According to Ragsdale, "many phases of student life" have been included in the investigation. Among them are fraternity and non-fraternity men and athletes at the University.

"The council is continuing its investigation of the cases," he said. "That is, we are checking the official excuse records of a very large number of students, which examination, to date, has yielded a great volume of information."

Ragsdale said the Men's Honor Council hopes to conclude the investigation "within a few weeks." He said information helpful to the investigation "will be appreciated" by the council.

Speech, Drama Books Being Collected Here

UNC is participating in a nation-wide project to distribute surplus American books on speech and dramatic art to students of foreign nations, with an ultimate aim of teaching the ways of democracy.

Prof. Sam Selden, chairman of UNC's Department of Dramatic Art, is heading up the drive in the Chapel Hill area. Speech and drama publications contributed will be turned over to the Speech Association of America, which is hoping to collect 50,000 volumes.

The University is among 80 colleges and universities in 26 states and Hawaii which have volunteered to donate a total of 10,000 volumes.

STUDENT WIVES CLUB

Dr. Sidney S. Chipman, Professor of Maternal and Child Health and Clinical Professor of Pediatrics, will speak to the Student Wives Club Tuesday night in the Victory Village Nursery. All students wives have been urged to attend.

FACULTY CLUB

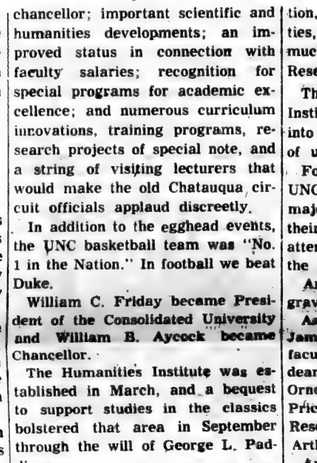
Chancellor W. B. Aycock will speak at the Faculty Club luncheon, Tuesday, at 1 o'clock. The luncheon will be held at the Carolina Inn.

FREE FILM SERIES

"East of Eden," starring James Dean, Julie Harris and Academy Award winner Jo Van Fleet will be the Free Film Series presentation tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

CAROLINA PLAYMAKERS

The Carolina Playmakers have announced tryouts for three original one-act plays will be held today at 2 o'clock in the Playmakers Theater.



The plays, products of the graduate playwriting course, will be directed by candidates for the masters degree in dramatic art. All interested students have been invited to the tryouts.

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

Professor B. L. Ullman of the Department of Classics will present a paper entitled "Why You Can Buy A Copy Of Catullus Today," at the meeting of the Philological Club Tuesday, at 7:30 p.m.

The meeting will be held in the Library Assembly Room. All faculty members, graduate students, and members of their families have been invited. Refreshments will be served.

Dixie Classic Champs Host Wake Forest Here Tonight

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Prior to the Christmas holidays it was conjectured here that by the resumption of classes a relatively solid appraisal of the Carolina basketball team could be made. The first half of the vacation was nothing for the McGuiremen to write home about—it was downright miserable in fact.

Through the West Virginia game in the Kentucky Invitational finals where their 37 game winning streak was snapped, the Tar Heels had nto played a real good game all season. Consequently many Carolina followers were beginning to think this might turn out to be a disastrous year.

But along came the Dixie Classic and along came the Tar Heels looking like national champs again as they breezed through to their second straight Classic title. Now the consensus of opinion is that THE TAR HEELS WILL BE ALL RIGHT.

These students who watched Frank McGuire's machine wrap St. Louis, Duke and N. C. State on the way to the title saw a greatly improved ball club—one which is capable of winning national honors again in '57-58.

The going, naturally, will be tougher than it was last season. The Tar Heels are more inexperienced than a year ago. Also, they have been hit hard by injuries and sickness. Few teams could lose such valuable men as Joe Quigg, York Larese, Danny Lotz and Ray Stanley without feeling it tremendously.

But if the Dixie Classic is any indication of the rate of improvement which the Tar Heels will show this season, then it should turn out to be a very good year.

For one thing, the boys are learning to "think" together and consequently are improving greatly in the vital offensive rebounds department. We're speaking primarily of three sophomores, Lee Shaffer, Dick Kepley and Harvey Salz. Thus far, these have been the key men in the success or failure of the club. All have improved tremendously since the season began.

In the Classic, we were particularly impressed with the performances of Shaffer. He did a beautiful job in all departments and his efforts were almost good enough to put him on the second all-tournament team.

But what impressed us most about big Lee was his poise and conduct. As a freshman last season, he was a bit cocky and the fans often gave him a rough time. This season, however, he has mellowed considerably and could easily become one of Carolina's all-time greats. The N. C. State game was a good example of Shaffer's attitude.

Against the Wolfpack, he was shoved around quite a bit, especially by State center John Richter. This was an attempt to rattle Shaffer. But he never once lost his temper. Lee simply overlooked this and went ahead and played a fine ball game.

Kepley is looking much better now and appears to have won himself a starting post. His rebounding is much better and he is rapidly shaking the "sophomore jitters" that plagued him during the opening games.

Salz is perhaps one of the steadiest replacements that any team could have. He is a fine defensive player and can shoot with the best of them.

The work of the veteran trio, Tommy Kearns, Pete Brennan and Bob Cunningham in the Classic was tremendous. Brennan was the outstanding player in the tourney and Kearns made the first all-tournament team. Cunningham was his usual brilliant self on defense especially in the opening round against St. Louis' Jack Mimlitz. He made the all-tourney second team.

This Carolina club is quickly assimilating into another power. The talent, of course, has always been there. All that was needed was a little experience for the younger fellows and certainly they're coming along beyond expectations.

McGuire also has some mighty good material on the bench. Fellows like Danny Lotz, Ray Stanley, John Crotty, Roy Searcy and Grey Poole will help considerably before the season is over.

Tonight in Woollen Gym the Tar Heels will meet the only Big Four rival they haven't faced yet, Wake Forest. The young Deacs won the hearts of the fans in the Raleigh tourney as they beat Duquesne in the opener and fought to the wire with N. C. State and Duke.

Bones McKinney is putting together a fine ball club up at Baptist Hollow. The sophomore-laden Deacons exceeded anything anybody thought they could do in the tourney.

This Wake Forest club cannot be counted "out" as was predicted earlier in the season. Spirit and hustle has always been an earmark of the Deacons and this squad exemplifies this to the utmost.

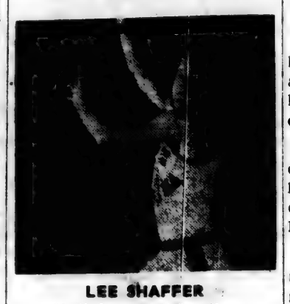
Sports briefs:

Pete Brennan was the unanimous choice for the Dixie Classic's outstanding player award and there was a record field of sportswriters participating in the selection. Many have now decided that Brennan is quickly becoming a sure thing for All-American honors. Pete was also selected on the all-tourney team in the Kentucky Invitational.

Sophomore forward Lee Shaffer is hitting for an amazing 53.9 accuracy from the floor and has an 86.2 mark from the free throw line. Brennan's 80 rebounds leads the team in that department but there's a close race for second place. Shaffer has 61 and Bob Cunningham and Dick Kepley each have 60.

One of the most vastly improved basketballers in the ACC will perform in Woollen tonight. He is Wake Forest forward Olin Broadway. . . . Three Deac sophomores to watch are guards George Ritchie and Charlie Forte and center Dave Budd.



First Meeting Between Old Conference Rivals

By BILL KING

Carolina's Tar Heels, their great winning streak snapped and another one started since the beginning of the holidays, will be gunning for victory number nine and their fourth straight since West Virginia Woollen Gym tonight against a surprising young Wake Forest club.

The eight o'clock tipoff will throw the Dixie Classic Champs into competition with the only Big Four team it hasn't encountered yet, and the 09,200 fans who saw the Dixie Classic will vouch for the danger of Bones McKinney's assemblage at Baptist Hollow. Carolina beat Duke and N. C. State in the Classic.

The Deacons won the respect and admiration of fans and coaches

LEE SHAFFER
He'll Start For Carolina

around the country with their tremendous efforts in the Classic. Described as the ACC's "weak sister" in pre-season speculation, Wake Forest came into the Classic and whipped through Duquesne, then dropped a couple of real close ones to N. C. State and Duke, the latter going an overtime.

Sophomores Click

But what impressed Classic-goers most was the work of the outstanding group of sophomores at Deacontown. They failed to choke in the clutches and that's saying a lot for a team of second year men. McKinney also proved that he had the depth, even if it is of the youthful vintage, by substituting frequently with equal efficiency.

The soothsayers figure the pressure is off the Tar Heels now since that loss to West Va. in the finals of the Kentucky Invitational, but the Chapel Hillians aren't buying any of that. The pressure now, they feel, is to prove to the world that they can get off the floor and roar back in defense of their national crown.

Chance To Develop

The pressure is reduced in one respect. Now that their fabulous winning streak no longer protrudes before the public eye, there won't be as much attention focused on the Chapel Hill contingents and that could be the greatest thing to happen to this ball club. Now the important sophomores will be able to develop without having the entire nation watching their every move.

This game tonight could turn into a real rock and roller as the inspired Deacs attempt to do something that they, or anybody else failed to do last year. The Tar Heels know they'll have their hands full against their hustling cousins from Winston-Salem.

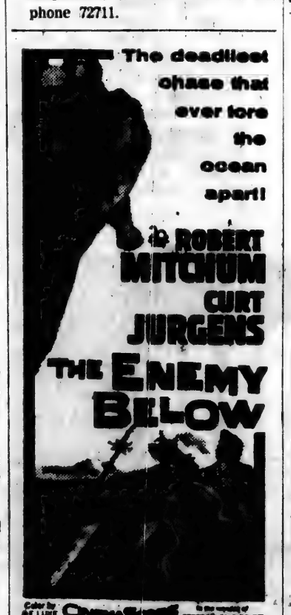
Probable Starters

The Deac's starting lineup is as hard to predict as Jack Benny's age since McKinney usually decides his starters according to the type of game he'll play.

A probable starting five would consist of, George Ritchie and Charlie Forte at guards, David Budd at center and Wendall Carr and Olin Broadway at forwards.

For the Tar Heels, it will be Tommy Kearns and Bob Cunningham at guards, Lee Shaffer and Pete Brennan at forwards and Dick Kepley at center. There is a chance that Cunningham will go at forward, Shaffer will be at center and Harvey Salz will run at guard.

A preliminary contest between the freshmen of the two schools will begin at 6:00.



Broadvision Tonight

The varsity basketball game between the Carolina and Wake Forest tonight will be televised, starting at 7:55 p.m. on WUNC-TV, Channel 4, using the "broadvision" system.

Viewers may tune to their favorite radio station to get the play-by-play commentary to accompany the game picture telecast from Woollen Gymnasium by the University's educational station.

Buck Freeman's Been Scouting

If you're one of the many Tar Heel basketball fans who have been wondering about the absence of assistant coach Buck Freeman during the early part of the season, rest assured that Frank McGuire's valuable aid is right in there with the national champs.

Freeman has been on the road for the past few weeks scouting Tar Heel opponents. Freshman coach Ken Rosemond has been McGuire's game assistant during his absence. Now Rosemond is out looking around at opponents and Freeman is back at his usual post.

Frosh Play Baby Deacs In Prelim

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina Tar Babies seek to improve a 4-1 season record tonight against the Wake Forest Baby Deacons in a contest getting underway at 6:00 in Woollen Gym.

The yearlings have swept their last three in a row, including a 101-61 romp over Pfeiffer. Their last encounter, just before the holidays, was with EMI and they won it going away 95-80. The frosh have an 88.6 point average per game against their opponents 73.6, which exemplifies their strong offense and stingy defense.

Moe Top Scorer

Doug Moe continues to be the top scoring threat, with a 24.1 average over the first five games. His biggest night was against High Point when he hit for 32. Jim Donahue, close on his heels with a 20.8 average, pumped in 30 against EMI.

In addition to these, footballers Lenny Beck and Russ Hollers have come on strong at the guard slots. The squad is still awaiting the return of Lou Brown, now on the injured list with a broken hand.

news in brief

Space Traffic

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4 —(AP)— Space traffic out of the Cape Canaveral, Fla., missiles test center may become heavy with Vanguard rockets by the end of March.

This prospect was raised in a statement today by Dr. John P. Hagen, director of the U. S. Scientific satellite project Vanguard, who said the launching of a 21½-pound baby moon is still planned for March.

A spokesman at Vanguard headquarters here said about four preliminary test firings of the three-stage rocket are scheduled before the major launching in March.

Present indications are that it will be the end of the second week in January at least before Vanguard scientists try again to launch a complete test rocket carrying a 3 ¼-pound sphere in its nose. They have been getting ready for a second attempt since their first rocket blew up Dec. 6.

East-West Pact

LONDON, Jan. 4 —(AP)— Prime Minister MacMillan proposed tonight an East-West non-aggression pact and perhaps a summit meeting late. Both have been urged repeatedly by the Soviet Union.

MacMillan declared in a nationwide broadcast that Britain is ready to negotiate either within or outside the United Nations to test the sincerity of Russia's current peace offensive.

"We could start by a solemn pact of non-aggression," the Prime Minister declared. "This has been done before. It would do no harm. It might do good."

'Security Mania'

WASHINGTON, JAN. 4 —(AP)— The Democratic Digest said today the 1954 "security mania" of Vice President Nixon, the late Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis) and others helped to destory the morale of the nation's scientists and retarded many scientific programs.

The Democratic National Committee's publication, in an article, "Nixon and Pals vs. the Scientists," said:

"There is little doubt that one of the reasons many of our scientific programs have been retarded is the fact that the handling of such men as Dr. Oppenheimer and Dr. Condon, and the attacks on such government research centers as Fort Monmouth (N.J.) caused a demoralization of the scientific community which in turn had a disastrous effect on our whole scientific research and development program."

Carolina Stops Wake Forest, 71-45, To Continue New Winning Streak

Brennan Hits 32 To Pace Tar Heel Win

By BILL KING

Senior forward Pete Brennan dropped in 32 points and hauled down 22 rebounds to chip in about the only excitement of the evening last night as his Tar Heel mates downed a hapless Wake Forest team to the tune of 71-45.

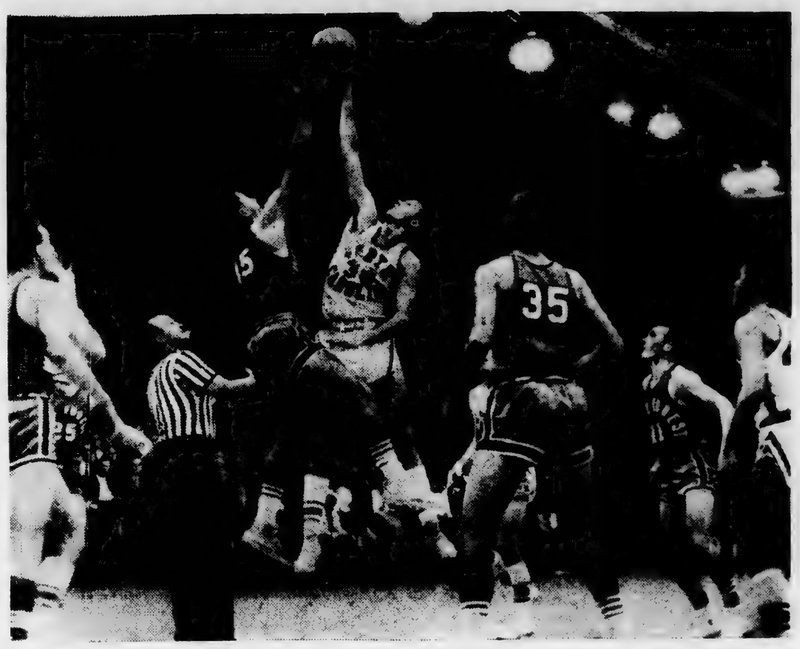
Brennan's point total was his all-time high, topping the 27 he scored against Duke in the Dixie Classic, and his rebound production was only three off the school record held by Lennie Rosenbluth at 25.

It was strictly no contest from the very beginning as the Tar Heels ran up a quick 14-7 lead after four minutes, led at the half, 37-24 and continued to add insult to injury in the final twenty minutes.

There was a sharp contrast between the Deacon team last night and the one which put on a terrific three-day performance in the Dixie Classic last week. The Tar Heels' effort, in fact, was slightly tarnished by the sluggish play of the Deacons.

In short, Wake Forest couldn't buy a basket and had little more success grabbing rebounds against the tall, talented Tar Heels who threw up an impregnable defense that had the visitors as jittery as Nervous Norkus by the time the second half began.

Hits From Everywhere



Brennan was hitting from all corners on his deadly jump shot. He took only 16 shots from the floor and hit 12. He was good for eight of nine from the charity line. Lee Shaffer and Tommy Kearns followed Brennan with 13 and 10 points respectively. Olen Broadway and George Richie had nine each for Wake Forest.

From the floor, the Tar Heels were good for a 56 percentage while the Deacs could muster but

Banquet, Reception Set After Abba Eban Talk

A banquet at Carolina Inn and a reception at Graham Memorial have been planned in connection with the visit of Israeli Ambassador Abba Eban Wednesday.

Eban will deliver a speech in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. Wednesday. The banquet for the Ambassador will be held at 6:30 at Carolina Inn. After his speech, a reception in Graham Memorial has been scheduled.

The Carolina Forum is sponsoring his speech.

Eban became ambassador to the United States in September, 1950, while at the same time retaining his function as chief Israel delegate to the United Nations.

His political work in Israel began 12 years ago when he went to Jerusalem as liaison officer of Allied Headquarters with the Jewish population. Eban's task was to enlist participation of Jewish volunteers in special missions on behalf of the Allied forces in the Near East and Europe.

Later, he became chief instructor at the Middle East Arab Center in Jerusalem. During this period, Eban traveled widely in the countries of the Near East, frequently lecturing in Hebrew and Arabic to Jewish and Arab audiences and contributing to journals written in those languages.

After World War II, Eban served with the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem. In 1947 he participated on the staff of the Jewish Agency which secured the vote of the General Assembly of the United Nations to set up the state of Israel.

He appeared before a UN committee in 1949 to plead the case for Israel's admission to the United Nations.

Ambassador Eban has achieved prominence in the United States as a diplomat, an orator and a scholar of Middle Eastern affairs. He has been awarded honorary degrees by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Boston University and the University of Maryland.

UNC Freshman Being Charged In Cobb Case

Philip M. Ordway, a UNC freshman from Chapel Hill, has been charged with malicious mischief in connection with vandalism in Cobb Dormitory, according to local police.

The alleged incident occurred New Year's Eve when a party for Chapel Hill teenagers turned into a fracas. A juke box was destroyed, several records were stolen and other acts of vandalism were reported.

Ordway will be given a hearing on the charge in Recorder's Court Tuesday morning.

Newspaper Hearing Set

To receive constructive criticisms for the improvement of any phase of The Daily Tar Heel is the purpose of two hearings set by the Newspaper Research Committee. The first hearing will be held Tuesday from 4 to 7 p.m. in Roland Parker II. A second public hearing has been scheduled for Jan. 13, at 2 p.m., in Roland Parker II.

Public Health Seminar Set

A seminar on radiation and public health will be held at the UNC School of Public Health Jan. 27-29.

This is the fourth annual meeting of this kind and is being conducted by the UNC School of Public Health and the N. C. State Board of Health.

The State Board of Health has recently put into effect a radiological program under the direction of Dr. William Jeck.

Also, it was recently announced that the UNC School of Public Health was establishing a program to train North Carolina health workers to meet the health problems of living in the atomic age.

This program, which will get underway this month, was made possible by a grant from the Atomic Energy Commission.

Taking part in the seminar will be J. S. Ameen, N. C. State Board of Health; Dr. Donald R. Chadwick, Public Helath Service, Washington, D. C.; Emil T. Chanlett, UNC School of Public Health;

Dr. George O. Doak, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. Leon D. Freedman, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. Marvin L. Granstrom, UNC School of Public Health; John C. Lumsden, N. C. State Board of Health;

Dr. Daniel A. Okun, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. William, N. C. State Board of Health; Aaron P. Sanders, Duke University;

Dr. Paul E. Shearin, UNC Department of Physics; E. Jack Story, N. C. State College and Richard L. Witcofski, Baptist Hospital, Winston-Salem.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's Visit Here Now In Final Stages Of Planning

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's visit here Jan. 12 is in the final stages of planning, according to an announcement yesterday by Bill Sugg, chairman of the UNC Collegiate Council for the United Nations Committee.

The CCUN and the Orange County chapter of the American Association for the United Nations are jointly sponsoring Mrs. Roosevelt's visit.

Mrs. Roosevelt's public address on Jan. 12 is the highlight of a conference being sponsored by the local CCUN. The conference is being held for representatives from 37 colleges and universities in the state in a move to organize CCUN organizations on other North Carolina campuses.

In a letter to the 37 colleges and universities, Sugg explained that the local CCUN Committee was interested in seeing other CCUN organizations formed in North Carolina because the United Nations is the only organization at this time that could achieve world peace.

The CCUN was set up as an educational organization to promote an understanding of the United Nations and the relationship of the United States to the UN.

The traveling secretary for the CCUN, Miss Connie Currie, will meet tonight with members of local CCUN committee to map out details for the conference.

In a letter from Mrs. Roosevelt's secretary recently, the tentative schedule for her schedule here was confirmed. The public address, which will be carried by WUNC radio and WUNC-TV, has been set for Sunday, Jan. 12, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

In addition, Mrs. Roosevelt will held a press conference at 2 p.m. Jan. 12 and will meet with CCUN delegates at 2:45 p.m. the same day.

Symphony Orchestra Of UNC Conducts Poll

By BILL FREE

We live in the era of the public opinion poll. We Americans are vitally interested in the tastes and opinions of our neighbors and fellow citizens. In almost every newspaper and magazine we find the results of surveys indicating America's favorite tooth paste, movie star, political candidate, or television show. Statistics tell us our habits in every phase of life.

In keeping with this spirit of inquiry about ourselves, the North Carolina Symphony has made a poll of its own: to determine North Carolina's favorite symphonic music.

Ballots were sent to members of the North Carolina Symphony in various parts of the State, asking them to vote for their favorite composition.

The primary reason for the poll is to provide information to guide Dr. Benjamin Swalin, Symphony director, in the selection of future programs, but the survey is also interesting from another standpoint.

Thirty-five composers and 69 compositions are represented in results. From the point of time these range from old masters such as Handel, who was born in 1685, to contemporaries like Leroy Anderson, who is still producing his most popular music.

The music is equally varied in tone and type. From the symphonic works of Beethoven and Brahms to the musical comedy of Sigmund Romberg, all types are present: the piano works of Chopin, waltzes of Strauss, the modern symphonies of Sibelius, jazz rhythms of Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, exotic melodies of Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade, folk tunes of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies, and the spiritual reverence of Schubert's Ave Maria.

This variety does not signify a few isolated quirks. Of the 59 ballots designated, 56 received a number of votes so similar as to prove their widespread popularity. When one Symphony or composer does stand out from the rest, it is usually in terms of concentrated popularity, not isolated support.

The outstanding choice is the perennial favorite, Beethoven. Six of the nine Beethoven Symphonies were named, as was his Concerto No. 5 in Eb major. The Fifth Symphony received the largest number of votes of any composition designated.

In addition to Beethoven, Tschaikovsky and Brahms received a large number of votes. Tschaikovsky's Fifth and Sixth Symphonies were cited as this most popular composition and Brahms' First Symphony received many votes.

Second most popular composition was Dvorak's New World Symphony. Other works receiving numerous votes are Franck's D minor Symphony, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Sibelius' Finlandia, the Strauss Waltzes, and Rossini's William Tell Overture.

The position of Sibelius, the great Finnish master who died in 1957, is unique. He is the only contemporary composer who is represented by four or more compositions in the poll. North Carolina seems to add her second to the world-wide nomination of Sibelius as the most significant modern master.

The only other composers listing four or more compositions are Beethoven, Brahms, Tschaikovsky and Liszt.

The results of this poll are a compliment to the diversity of taste and the knowledge of the literature of music demonstrated by the people of North Carolina. It is reassuring proof that the people of the State are equipped to enjoy and appreciate a wide range of Symphonic music and some of the greatest music ever written.

Peanuts Is Entertaining Even At The South Pole

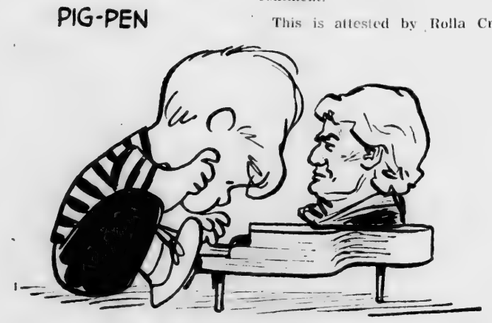
Readers of "Peanuts," the popular comic strip that appears in The Daily Tar Heel, will be glad to know that Charlie Brown, Lucy, Schroeder, Linus, Snoopy the dog, and all the other little people in Charles M. Schulz's pen-and-ink world are doing their bit with the U. S. Navy's farthest-south station in the icy wastes of the Antarctic continent.

This is attested by Rolla Crick, reporter on the Oregon Journal, who recently returned from a Navy-sponsored visit to Antarctica.

On what was intended to be an "overnight" flight to the Amundsen-Scott Station, within a few hundred yards of what the scientists have determined to be the South Pole, the plane broke down and couldn't be repaired in the -60 degree temperatures, so "Bud" Crick found himself marooned for 21 days with the 18 men of this most remote colony.

In the huts, on bulletins boards or anywhere within shelter where a thumbtack or nail would hold, Crick found clippings of "Peanuts" comic strips tacked up. One of the men had brought a considerable number of them in with them, and "rationed" them out, one each day, for the others to enjoy.

Of all the reading matter—pictures, books and magazines—that these men have for entertainment, "Peanuts" was the favorite, and the subject matter of the strips was an unfailing topic of talk.



A few days after his return to the main base, Crick was told that the supply of "Peanuts" strips at the polar colony was running out, and he reported this to the Oregon Journal.

Fred McNeil, executive news editor, wrote to United Feature Syndicate, which distributes the comic strip, pointing out that the 18-man colony will be on duty in the toughest weather spot on the globe until December, 1958, carrying on observations of great importance to the International Geophysical Year.

New, weekly proof-sheets of the "Peanuts" strips are being airmailed to San Francisco, thence flown to Antarctica and then to the South Pole station, to be posted on the bulletin-boards at the rate of one a day by the "Officer-in-Charge of Peanuts," for the duration of the colony's existence.

Selection Of DTH Editor

The Newspaper Research Committee of the Student Legislature will get down to business next week in its comparative study of The Daily Tar Heel, official student publication of the University of North Carolina.

It is timely to point out here that the study is just what it proclaims to be: a study. It is not an "investigation" seeking to uncover hidden closets in the Tar Heel office, but rather a comparative appraisal with other college newspapers in the United States.

High on the list of areas of the paper to be studied by the committee is selection of editor, an area which probably will develop into the most controversial of the entire study. It is an area demanding study, an done for which conclusions will be hard to draw.

Following the Kraar-Yoder recall election of two years ago, a bi-partisan selections board was established, and candidates for Daily Tar Heel editor ever since have been required to appear before that board for examination—that is, except for the current editor. Purpose of that board was to establish a person's qualifications, with consequent endorsement of the candidate.

If a person were not endorsed by the board—all candidates thus far have gained the endorsement—he still would have been allowed to continue in the race for the editorship. Lack of endorsement would not have disqualified an individual from an election, although it conceivably could have cost him some votes.

It thus appears that there never has been, short of personal opinions and records of experience produced by Tar Heel editor candidates, any sure way of determining a person's qualifications for editorship, one of the most important posts on the University campus.

Rather, it has boiled down to a personality race coupled with evidence of candidates to the electorate that they would make a good editor for the paper. A math major could win; a pre-law student could win; or a student in the history department could win. Anybody has been eligible to run for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

This is not to say that, over the years, the student newspaper has failed to have good editors. Indeed it has. Many of North Carolina's leading journalists formerly sat in the big chair in Daily Tar Heel offices, and many more of similar fame are now working out of state in responsible positions. The record, if anything, has been a complementary one.

Nor do we mean to imply that only journalism students should be allowed to run in the race for editorship. Certainly every student at the University who is qualified for the job should have the right if he so desires, to enter any race for any student position on the campus. And editorship of the Daily Tar Heel is one of these positions.

However, there should be some sure method of determining, before an election and not after one, the qualifications of an individual for the editorship. Because that method was not provided for in the student constitution at its conception, it was agreed that the recall should exist to remove persons whom the student body felt were failing in the job.

That method of removal has been employed twice. Once it has failed; once it has succeeded. And we hope that never again will circumstances prevail which will demand a third recall movement. If anything, recent history of the Tar Heel has lived up to the fears of designers of the student constitution, when they realized that under prescribed law students could continually remove and replace editors for good reasons or for bad ones.

The trouble with the constitution—we're not even certain it's a correctable one—is that the test of editor, in the final analysis, comes after his election and not before it. In effect, there is a tryout period after an individual's selection, and if he doesn't live up to expectations of the student body it takes only a recall election to remove him.

Certain grave problems would assert themselves, however, if the current method of selection were altered. For instance, a person whose past journalistic experience were meager could conceivably make an excellent editor. And too, it is difficult to draw arbitrary requirements of would-be candidates which might exclude an individual from the editorship race. It becomes rather selective under a system which is intended to be democratic.

The problem surrounding the committee's study, then, is in determining the best, fairest selection of candidates for the top newspaper post, while retaining somewhat broad boundaries to include any individual who is qualified for the job.

Perhaps that cannot be done. Perhaps, under our democratic system of running for office, every student at the University shall retain his right to seek the office of editorship. It would indeed be a wiser choice to profit by broadness than to suffer from restriction, in light of past history of the Daily Tar Heel.

At some universities staff members of the paper are entrusted with selection of editor. In at least one case this resulted in a continued dominance of the publication by left wing forces, since a select group picked the editor and he in turn selected his staff. We do not feel that is a good method for the University of North Carolina.

Other universities surely have varying methods of selection. These will be made clear in the forthcoming weeks, as the committee receives reports from other colleges and universities across the nation.

Perhaps in these reports will lie the key to what has become a problem—either soluble or insoluble—at UNC.

J. Y.'S JAZZ

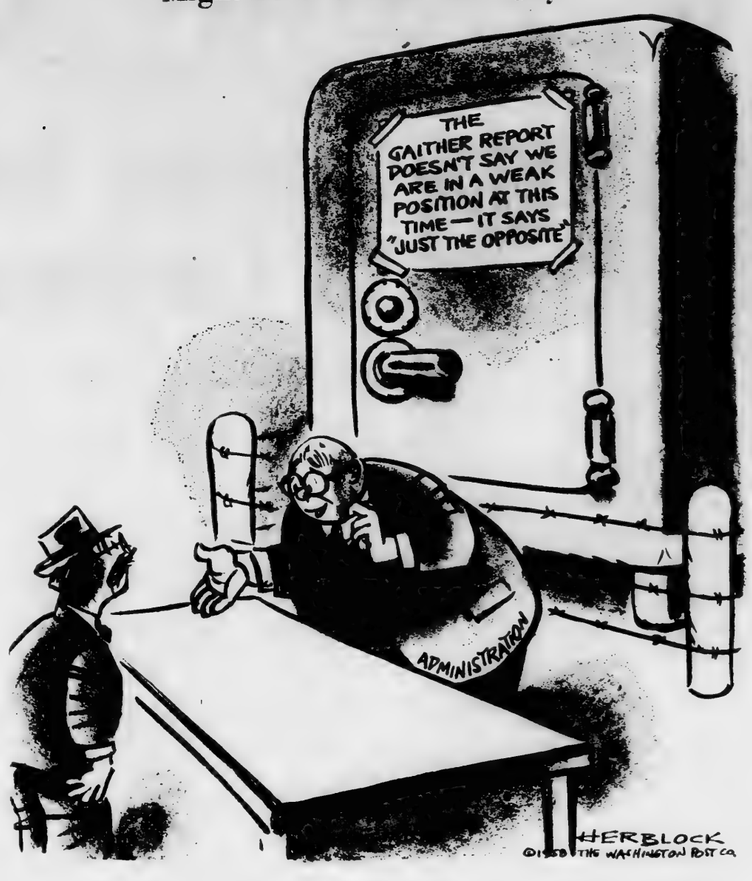
Stars Of Jazz A Video Treat On TV Network

The National Broadcasting Company"s December 30 presentation "Stars Of Jazz" was one of the most memorable events of the past television year. Well programmed and intelligently presented, it was a perfect demonstration of the thesis that good live music, well handled, can make first-rate television entertainment.

From the opening seconds, as the headmasters of the Krupa-Cole Drum School rolled and slammed their way into American homes, the show was a winner. Woody Herman's band opened with a routine flag waver, then Herman introduced Steve Allen, citing his status as the "best friend of Jazz." Allen introduced Louis Armstrong, who produced the most exciting, musical set I've ever heard from him. Even the cameraman was swinging as he wailed through a traoitional number I didn't recognize and growled through the old standard "Blueberry Hill."

Armstrong was followed by a swinging Brubeck who drove through "St. Louis Blues," a standard that goes well with the Brubeck quartet. Paul Desmond and Joe Morello shone particularly.

The scene then switched for a remote from Chicago's Blue Note where the Duke and Carmen Macrae were holding the fort. It was Clark Terry night in Ellingtonville as the band did a couple of Duke's newer compositions, "Ballet of the Flying Saucers" and "Such Sweet Thunder," with their usual verve. Then Miss Macrae came on to gas everybody with "A Foggy Day" and "They All Laughed." She has wonderful presence and ought to get her own show.



Back to the NBC studio for Krupa and Charlie Ventura in a re-exploration of their old hit "Dark Eyes." They were obviously having a ball together again and the results were fun if not very musical.

An all-star group led by Jack Teagarden and featuring Bobby Hackett gave "Struttin' With Some Barbecue" a raucous two beat treatment that was a real joy. Armstrong came back to join Jack and sing "Rockin' Chair." By far the high point of the show, this hilarious, always musical bit completely sent the audience. If anyone wants to hear the way this sounds they might try the RCA lp "Town Hall Concert" featuring the best all-stars Louie ever assembled.

June Christy came on for a sadly brief set and gave "I Want To Be Happy" a real ride. Time forced the producers to switch to Allen and Armstrong for a pleasant "Lazy River." The show ended with everybody and his brother joining in on the "Saints." I hope someday they'll find a different closer.

In general, the show was too good. Thanks to the Timex people for having the guts to try something new.

Babes Grow Up

Over the past few years, planning of all sorts has taken for granted an annual expansion in the size of the American economy. In the field of manpower, concern has concentrated on provision of an adequate increase in the number of places in schools, and particularly in colleges and centers of advanced study, to allow a growing generation to be educated to the limit of its ability. Full employment and the resulting tight labor market have made it relatively unnecessary to wonder how the school-leaving young people who do not go to higher training will find jobs.

The amount of concern now visible may be adequate to take account of increases in the number of 18-year-olds such as are forseen for the years until the end of 1960—an addition of some 100,000 a year is the standard pattern. But come 1961, a sudden peak looms up—the children of the early marriages at the outbreak of World War II. That year, the increase of 18-year-olds will treble—to an addition of 350,000 and a total of 2,924,000 youngsters turning 18. Whether at work or at study, places will suddenly become much harder to find.

Yet the year 1961 will be only a practice run on the handling of the problem that will be before the country when the first wave of postwar babies reaches 18 in 1965. Then, the number of 18-year-olds will skyrocket by more than a million in 12 months—altogether, 3,822,000 of them. And at the same time, the wave of 1961 will have moved on: the number of 22-year-olds will total 2,939,000. Among these will be the close onto half a million who will have just finished college and be entering the labor market for their first jobs. That autumn, the impact on the country's educational institutions and on the labor market will be of a size not previously experienced and not currently planned for. —The New Republic

What Is A Teacher?

This is a question that we must ask ourselves, not only because some of us will become teachers in high schools and colleges in the future, but also in order to understand the kind of relationship that exists or should exist between teacher and student. What must a teacher be before his students—what should his attitude towards them be? We can only look at the problem from our own point of view as students trying to acquire maturity and perhaps a little wisdom with which to approach God and man.

Because a teacher is an artist with a very special material to work with he must have a special attitude towards the integrity of this material, the human personalities under his care, as well as something to express in it. What distinguishes a really great teacher from the plentiful scholars who have a large store of knowledge and perhaps even the ability to express it intelligetnly? I think the first and rarest attribute is love for his students; not only willingness and respect, but love. Students can get their facts and theories, their culture, from many teachers; indeed, if they have the will they can get culture from books without the help or interference of other agents. But only teaching with love can make them wise, and if they can glean a measure of wisdom from the other, loveless offerings then it is only through their own unguided efforts.

The question should be asked, of course—what is a student? This has been discussed quite often and the answer should be well known. But it is doubtful whether any teacher can love students who are not really students — who, instead of enthusiasm for learning, have only the desire to learn as little as possible while fulfilling the requirements for a degree. There must be love on both sides: on the part of the student, not only love and respect for the teacher, but, more basically, love of wisdom. That this is not always present in the modern students is, perhaps, not entirely his fault. Where education is merely "a wan attempt to prolong adolescence" directed not towards wisdom but towards the acquirement of the paper symbols of intellectual accomplishment, grades and degrees, then there is not much stimulus for real enthusiasm. Perhaps mistrust and dislike of it is a more natural response in such a situation. It may be that the same loveless scholars are to blame. It seems that they created grades and degrees in large part to insure the preservation of their positions among the elite of intellectual society, and now the degrees are necessary to any man before he can teach in college or even in most high schools. Unfortunately the receipt of a BA or an MA or a PhD is not a guarantee of wisdom and certainly not of love. What would education be like if grades and degrees were abolished? Entirely undisciplined? Not necessarily, for all the students who come to college, and it is a very large number, only to acquire the symbols that society demands of them would not come if there weren't any. The only means of judging a man's wisdom would be the only valid means, his words and actions, and it would make no difference whether he acquired it from a great teacher or from his own experience.

The ideal situation might have been possible once: the combination of love and wisdom in a man makes him inevitably a teacher — his wisdom attracts learners around him and by love he calls forth their enthusiasm and puts them in a state of mind to become wise because he is wise. Plato tells us that Socrates did so, and perhaps the great universities of the Middle Ages were built around such men. Even now there are some, but they are hampered by the system forced upon them, and we cannot now come to them as children eager to become men.

I had one such teacher in high school — everybody seems to have one or a few great teachers to whom they have responded sometime during their education. He was a very strange looking man, hardly five feet tall, but with a bulldog expression that made him big, and he loved us in his own fierce way. Some of the ideas and opinions thaa he tried to communicate to us I have since found to be wrong or inapplicable, but I am sure that we were all a little wiser for the time that we spent under him.

The scholarly writer should be a teacher too, but this rarely happens today. The writer of history and criticism is remote from his reader — he is concerned with scholarship and fact and demonstrative clarity. But what value does precision have by itself without love or beauty? The great Victorian Thomas Carlyle wrote a long history of the French Revolution through which he loves and respects his reader, and in the end when he says his farewell you are sorry to put the book down because in the reading it has become a wise old friend. If is true that a few of his facts or emphases may be imprecise or out of favor, but it is also probably true that an equally long work by many a modern historian would be totally devoid of beauty and unendurable to all but the professional.

Teaching is creation and an art — perhaps the greatest, most awful, most often profaned of the arts — because the artist's material is not canvas and paint or words, but it is his own human kind that he shapes and determines, not characters in a novel but real lives. It must be that those who pretend to teach, who dare to teach, without love for their students or awe for their own art, do not realize the full responsibility or consequence of their position. Scholars who can make their living in no other way than by teaching in a university and do so only for that reason are not really teachers. They have no wise song to sing except to themselves. —The Notre Dame Scholastic

'Symphony Of Snow' Theme Used At KD's Pledge Formal

In a "Symphony of Snow" the 1957 Kappa Delta pledge class was presented Friday night.

Held in the Carolina Inn Ballroom, the annual affair led off a weekend of celebration in honor of the pledge class.

Snowflakes, snowball and white-covered trees set the scene for dancing to the music of Jim Crisp's band. Featured vocalist with the band was Miss Pee Wee Batten.

The highlight of the evening came at 10 p.m. with the presentation of the traditional figure.

KD Vice President Jane Patten opened the introduction with a few words concerning the music that has become a by-word with Americans. She continued by contrasting the 1957 pledge class with a symphony orchestra.

"Alone each instrument is an individual with special talent, special beauty. But combined, these instruments become a part of something bigger, somthing of greater beauty; of oneness and harmony."

In conculsion, she introduced Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, who acted as master of ceremonies.

Dressed symbolically in white flowing gowns, the pledges were presented as a symphony of snow.

Each girl was met at the stairs by her escort as her name was called. The couples descended the stairs between white columns covered with green pine boughs.

As each girl came out on the dance floor she was presented with a single white rose by KD President Edith MacKinnon.

Pledge Class President Toy Johnson of Chapel Hill, escorted by Roy Short of Gastonia, was the first to be presented.

She was followed by Vice-President Lynn Armstrong of Ridgewood, N. J. with Peter Reynolds of Westfield, N. J.; Secretary Mailly Davis of Odessa, Md. with Ed Carroll of Cambridge, Mass.; Treasurer Merf Connell of Raleigh with John Connell of Raleigh; Social Chairman Lynne Courtney of Asheville with Harry Torpence of New Bern, and the remainder of the class.

The couples then formed the KD diamond and were serenaded by the actives singing "Deep Down in My Heart," a traditional KD song.

A no-break dance was then held for the pledges and their escorts, after which each pledge was given a KD charm necklace by her big sister.

KD alumna Mrs. Kay Kyser and Mrs. E. H. Graham, KD house mother served fruit punch from a garlanded refreshment table.

Carrying out the decoration theme, white snowflakes with the pledges names in gold and green glitter banked the wall behind the orchestra.

POINDEXTER, National Educational Television's lovable hound dog, will tell many favorite children's stories on "Tales of Poindexter" beginning Tuesday at 5:45 p.m. on WUNC-TV, Channel 4.

Alpha Delta Pi Pledge Class Presented At Annual Dance

By MARY ALYS VOORHEES

Silver bells rang in the '58 winter social season Friday night at the Chapel Hill Country Club when the Alpha Delta Pi Sorority started the new year by presenting their fall pledge class.

Amid silver bells and other winter decor, pledges, activities and their dates danced to the music of The Embers from Durham and songs by Miss Kay Anthony, vocalist.

Midway through the evening came the presentation of the fall pledge class. As each pledge was introduced by master of ceremonies Bob Carter, treasurer of the student body, she stepped through a white arch decorated with silver bells and silvered magnolia leaves.

After the introduction, the pledges —dressed in white gowns and carying bouquets of silvered roses and blue cornflowers, tied with blue satin ribbons—and their dates formed a diamond, the shape of the ADPi pin.

First to be introduced was Pledge Class President Marion Hays of Durham, escorted by Sumpter Brawley of Durham. Then came the other officers—Barbara Scott Thomas of Asheboro with Page Bernstein of Raleigh, Social Chairman Edna Faye Pugh of Asheboro with Lee Kenan of Asheboro—and the remainder of the pledge class.

Another highlight of the evening took place shortly after the pledge figure when the master of ceremonies named Miss Hays as recipient of the Outstanding Pledge Award. Later in the evening pledges were presented with ADPi necklace charms from their big sisters.

Following the pledge presentation, refreshments were served. Centering the refreshment table—which was covered with a white cloth—was an arrangement of white and silver gilded roses and fern tied with blue satin ribbons.

Tall red tapers placed among arrangements of silvered leaves flanked the centerpiece. At either end of the table, punch was poured by ADPi social chairmen Mary Moore Mason and Joan Schiltz.

A massive cascade of silver and red bells was suspended from the center ceiling of the ballroom by red satin ribbon. Smaller cascades of silver and red bells hung at intervals across the ceiling.

Tall red candles arranged in silvered leaves centered each of the individual tables, and places were marked by red and silver bell-shaped pledge programs which listed the pledge officers and the names of the 26 pledges.

ADPis and their dates brought the weekend to a close last night with a steak dinner at the Ranch House, followed by a champagne party in the Chrystal Room of the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham.

ed a worsening of Vatican-Venezuela relations in the wake of this week's revolt against President Marcos Perez Jimenez.

The source, a South American envoy to the Vatican, said these relations already are "very, very bad."

Other sources, both inside the Vatican and in the Vatican diplomatic corps, agreed that the Catholic Church is displeased with the course of events in Venezuela.

But, they said, the initiative for any Catholic action against the Perez Jimenez regime could be expected to come from Venezuelan prelates, not from the Vatican itself.

Wake Frosh Rally Late But Tar Babies Conquer, 76-72

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Holidays are over and intersectional competition will be at a minimum for the next couple of months as Atlantic Coast Conference teams settle down for an extensive and rugged battle among themselves for basketball honors.

There's good basketball in prospect for fans in the ACC, one of the toughest conferences in the country. The eight teams will be battling tooth and nail right up until tournament time (March 6-8).

Most coaches and experts agree that nobody is going to run away with top honors during the regular season and that the tournament, which decides the NCAA representative, won't be a pushover for any of the clubs.

Carolina still rules as favorites but there are few if any who think the Tar Heels can beat every team in the conference everytime this season. Actually, this will make for some interesting basketball as the schools engage in a dog eat dog fiasco.

Despite the fact that Carolina's wining streak has been broken, the other seven schools will not relinquish their desire to conquer the McGuiremen. After all, nobody in the ACC has beaten them since the 1955-56 season.

Most people feel that the Tar Heel's game at College Park, Md. next Saturday night will establish a criterion of just how good this Carolina team is. (This column was written prior to last night's game and if we lost, just finess the rest of the column). Maryland has justified pre-season prediction that it will be hard to handle this season. The Terps have lost only one game (Memphis State in three overtimes) and that's not to be taken lightly.

But the other teams cannot be overlooked. There's some teriffic talent in the ACC and everybody's attention will be centered on beating the Tar Heels. Yes, it's going to be an interesting race the rest of the way.

Hope you weren't as disgusted with the results of the bowl games as we were. We didn't have any favorites (except Duke) understand, it is just that three of the four big ones were runaways.

We are strongly opposed to this relatively new conference-bowl tieup policy and Wednesday's bowl games strengthened our dislike for it. We still feel that bowls should invite the teams which have proved to be the best during the regular season. Hypothetically, if Oklahoma and Tennessee are the best in the country, put them in the Rose Bowl togther.

As we have said before, this view is a bit idealistic. But when fans have to suffer through the type of games they saw Jan. 1, post season football interest, in our opinion, will decline. In some cases even the top team in a conference can't go to a bowl because it went the year before. The second place team is sent instead. This is ridiculous.

It is our belief that the ACC has made the right move in dissolving its pact with the Orange Bowl. Every NCAA eligible team should be open to accept bowl bids. Financially, it's better for a conference to be tied to a bowl, but football would be much more interesting if this could be eliminated.

Somebody oughta write a book entitled, "The Tar Heels and Kids." As the theme, he could use the Carolina basketball team during the Dixie Classic. The Tar Heels captured the hearts of the kids by going out of their way to be nice about signing autographs, etc.

If a poll were conducted right now to determine the "greatest bunch of guys" in college basketball, Frank McGuire and team would probably win the award. Every man on the Carolina club has become used to the problem of autograph seekers, and they've taken it like real champs. In fact, they seem to like it.

During the Classic, several of the players brought youngsters down to the dressing room after the game and took time out to make sure they met every one of the Tar Heels. There wasn't a night during the tourney that Pete Brennan didn't have at last a couple of his "little friends" down meeting the boys.

This type of thing does a lot to create good feeling in sport. The Tar Heels are to be commended on their ability as public relations experts as well as tremendous basketball players.

Pete Thrilled Fans With Fine Game

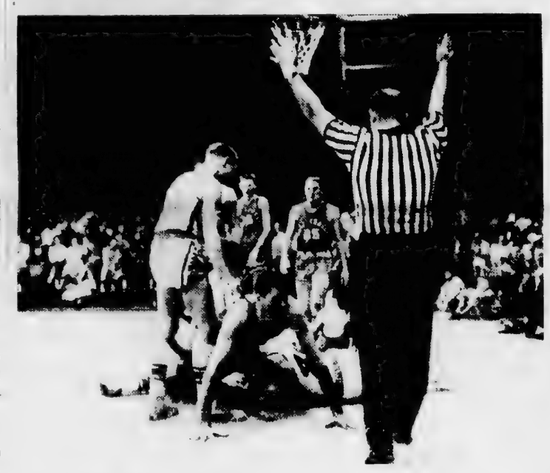
By DAVE WIBLE

Last night was "Pete Brennan" night in Woollen Gym as the Tar He els great 6-6 senior forward had one of the greatest performances in his career almost overpowering the entire Wake Forest team on his lonesome.

Brennan hit the highest total in his Carolina career (32) and his defence and rebounding were out of this world. He had 22 rebounds almost equaling Wake Forest's entire total of 25.

Highest compliments came from Tar Heel Coach Frank McGuire. When asked how he liked Brennans performance, he signned and said, "when I see him play like that, I think of Joe Quigg. Oh! What a combination that was."

Many Combinations



Commenting on the game, McGuire said, "We used a lot of combinations tonight, we are still looking for three front men. We couldn't use Lotz too extensively though, because his heel is still a little sore."

McGuire said that he thought his strongest combination now was Shafter, Brennan, Kearns, Cuningham, and Saltz. "That combination has a terrific scoring power and speed. Saltz is a real smart ballplayer."

Bones Disappointed

Over on the other side of the fence was a very sad man, Wake Forest's Coach, Bones McKinney. The Baptist preacher said he was very up-set over the Deacons showing especially after their fine finish in the Dixie Classics.

"I don't think we can use lack of experience as an excuse anymore, eleven games is enough. They simply didn't do what they were told to do." The Deacon mentor said to the floor. "How do I compare the Tar Heels to last year? Much, Much Smarter. I think that is the difference in the two teams."

OOOOH ME! — Everyone tries to get their hands on the ball, but it was all in vain-the Refferee called a jump. John Crotty is the Tar Heel helping to untangle the mess. (Photo by Spoon)

UNC's 1917 Cage Team Will Hold Big Reunion

By PETE IVEY

After 40 years, all of the surviving members of the 1917 basketball team of Carolina will hold a reunion at Chapel Hill and at Raleigh, Wednesday and Thursday, January 8 and 9, being honored in Raleigh by a member of the team, Governor Luther H. Hodges. They will attend several events in Chapel Hill, including the Carolina-Virginia basketball game in Woollen Gymnasium January 9.

Governor Hodges, who will not be able to be with the 1917 team at Chapel Hill, will entertain the group at the Governor's mansion Wednesday evening.

Comes From Everywhere

The group comes from all parts of the nation.

Included in the gathering will be the 1958 President of Rotary International, a Governor of a state, a bank president, a general, a corporation president, a physician, two research chemists, a distinguished attorney, other university faculty members and business men.

General F. Carlyle Shepard, Associate Dean of the General College here, called the reunion. It all started with a conversation last year when it was suggested all the living members of the 1917 team get together in Chapel Hill. Letters were sent out. The upshot is that all of them will come back for festivities in Chapel Hill.

They are coming from all over North Carolina, from Philadelphia and from Dallas, Texas; from Georgia and from Seattle, Washington.

Of the 14 members of the team, eleven are living, and all of them will attend events beginning next Wednesday and concluding with a bull session at the Carolina Inn at 10 p.m. Thursday after the basketball game. Wives of members of the team also are invited for parties, luncheons and other planned events.

Peacock Was Coach

The team's coach, Howell B. Peacock, now a physician at the Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia, will also attend.

The eleven squad members are Charles G. Tennant of Asheville, President of Rotary International this year; Elliott Culver Grandin of Titusville, Pa., President of the Grason Corporation; William R. Cuthberson of Charlotte, President of the City Savings Bank; John Minor Gwynn of Chapel Hill, Professor of Education at UNC; Bryce Little, of Seattle, Wash., one of the nation's outstanding trial lawyers.

George Raby Tennent of Hopewell, Va., a retired research chemist; Lewis R. McDuffie of Columbus, Ga., who is retired from the Todd Company; Frank Erwin Kendrick, of Dallas, Texas, research chemist for the Lone Star Gas Company; Sidney C. Perry of Durham, N. C., general manager of Durham Sports Enterprises, General Shepard and Governor Hodges.

Tar Heels Control Game

33.3. Carolina had 67.6 from the foul line against 51.6 for the Deacs.

Only An Indication

The first half was only an indication of what the Deacs were in for. Brennan collected 18 points and hauled in 13 rebounds which matched the entire rebound production of the Deacs before intermission.

The twenty point margin avoided the Tar Heels until 6:32 left in the contest. Logically, it was Brennan who dropped in two free throws to put Carolina ahead 60-40 at that point. From there out, it was a matter of the Deacs scrapping hopelessly to cut the margin and this they were not able to do as indicated by their final 21 point defecit.

Indians Next

Carolina now has a 3-0 record in Atlantic Coast Conference competition and the Deacs are 0-4.

One of the attributal facts to the Tar Heels' unexpected breezer was their ability to get the ball off the boards, a department in which they had been lacking until they began to sharpen up in the Dixie Classic. Carolina outrebounded Wake Forest 53-34.

The Tar Heels' next game will be against William and Mary here Tuesday night.

State Tickets

Beginning Monday (Jan. 6) and extending through Wednesday, students, faculty members and University employes with names beginning with the letters N through Z will be given priority for tickets to the Carolina-State basketball game here Jan. 15.

Vernon Crook, business manager of athletics, emphasized that passbooks must be exchanged during this three day period to receive this priority.

On Thursday morning, Jan. 9, any tickets remaining will go on a first come first served basis.

Doug Moe, Lou Brown Pace Fifth Frosh Win

By ERWIN FULLER

Carolina's Tar Babies withstood a strong closing rally by the Wake Forest Baby Deacs to hand the Winston Salem visitors a 76-72 loss in their first post-holiday encounter last night.

Doug Moe and Lou Brown paced the second half Tar Baby surge that put the game beyond the reach of the scrappy Deacs. Moe popped in 27 points to lead the Tar Baby scoring, while Brown hit for 26.

The Tar Babies started slowly and trailed the Deacs most of the first half. John Hickey's layup with 4 minutes left gave the UNC frosh their first lead since the opening moments. By intermission Coach Ken Rosemond's contingents were on the long end of a 31-27 count.

The Tar Babies looked considerably sharper in the second half, capitalizing on their superior rebounding strength and eliminating many of the mistakes which had stalled their offensive attack in the game's opening 20 minutes of play. With six minutes gone in the second half, Carolina owned a 48-39 lead, and four minutes later the scoreboard showed a 56-47 count favoring the Tar Babies.

Find The Range

Led by Moe, Brown and Donahue, the Tar Baby gunners began to find the range, and they held their biggest margin of the night, 67-54, with five minutes remaining. However, the scrappy Deaclets weren't through yet. With Alley Hart, a 5-10 guard leading the way, the Deacs trimmed the once healthy lead to a scant three points, 75-72 with 0:10 left. Brown's free toss with 3 seconds remaining produced the final count.

THE SCORING

Cardinals Not Ready To Junk Karl Spooner

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 3 —(AP)— Karl Spooner has been largely ineffective as a pitcher since suffering an arm injury in 1955, but the St. Louis Cardinals aren't convinced that he is through.

The 25-year-old lefthander, a sensation in his major league debut with Brooklyn in 1954, reported from his Hornell, N. Y., home for a checkup today by Cardinal trainer Bob Bauman.

Spooner, now on the roster of the Cardinals' Texas League farm club at Houston, was drafted by the Cardinal organization at the recent baseball meetings from Macon, Ga., of the Sally League. He won only two and lost four with Macon last season.

In 1954 Spooner won 21 games for Fort Worth before he was called up by Brooklyn at the season's end. He pitched two games for Brooklyn that year, both shutouts, and struck out a total of 27 in the two games.

SP Hears About Car Situation

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies and Ralph Cummings, chairman of the student traffic Advisory commission, discussed last night before the Student Party problems concerning the parking situation.

The SP passed a resolution by Cummings that a meeting of members of student government, the University administration, and town officials be held to discuss problems concerning the parking situation.

Assistant Dean Jefferies said that the students now have 2,844 cars registered with his office and that were 1,078 unrestricted parking spaces on campus for the students.

The faculty has registered 1,800 cars and have 1,006 parking spaces reserved for them. When the $40,000 Bell Tower Parking is open for parking students will have 300 additional spaces.

The money paid for fines for violating parking regulations on the campus amounts to around $9,000 a year and is collected and kept by the town of Chapel Hill he stated.

He said he plans to re-open the problem concerning these fines. The matter will be discussed with the Town Manager of Chapel Hill.

He said at the present time the Student Affairs Office gives reports to the Student Traffic Council.

The council calls before them any student who has five violations and has the right to take away the privilege of a student to have a car at the University.

Assistant Dean Jefferies recommended that a special office be set up to take of keeping account of the traffic violations.

Cummings said there was a "small number" of requests from those who wanted to park at the new Bell Tower Parking Lot. Cummings' council has recommended that General College students be the first group required to park there.

"They would be issued special Bell Tower parking stickers and would be treated as an illegal parker if found parking in any student or faculty parking space" (from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.), he said.

Ken Friedman was appointed publicity director of the party.

New Show, Narrator Added At Planetarium

"Star Scouting," the new program opening at the Morehead Planetarium here today, has been especially tailored for Boy, Girl and Cub Scouts' preparation for merit badge requirements in astronomy, according to Manager A. F. Jenzano.

Jenzano also announced that James E. Wadsworth of Chapel Hill, leadership training chairman of the Orange District, Occoneechee Council of the Boy Scouts of America, had joined the permanent narrating staff of the Planetarium.

Wadsworth, who is UNC housing officer here, will narrate the initial program tonight at 8:30 as well as others during the run hrough Feb. 3.

The Occoneechee Council arranged and worked with the Morehead Planetarium in presenting "Star Scouting". The program points out what distinguishes stars and planets, their brightness and apparent motion, and even dramatizes Indian legends of the constellations.

Devices for study and memory aids which Boy, Girl and Cub Scouts can make from everyday articles found about the home will also be demonstrated.

Because "Star Scouting" will appeal to Boy, Girl and Cub Scouts who will be in school on weekdays, seven weekend matinee performances have been scheduled. They will be given on Saturdays at 10 and 11 a.m. and 3 and 4 p.m., and on Sundays at 2, 3, and 4 p.m.

The program will also be presented at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays.

SUSPECT HUNTED FOR ROBBERY OVER HOLIDAYS

Chapel Hill Police reported yesterday that they had identified and were trying to locate a suspect for a $250 robbery which occurred at the Delta Kappa Epsilon House.

The theft occurred during the Christmas holidays. There was no sign of forceful entry, so the charge in the case will probably just be larceny, police said.

One 35 millimeter camera, a clock radio, two summer suits and a sheep skin coat were the articles taken from the house.

Of the 24 chimneys on the Carolina Inn at Chapel Hill, only eight are used. The other 16 are for looks, built that way by John Sprunt Hill who gave the Inn to the University of North Carolina.

Installation Is Planned Next Fall

By ANN FRYE

A national sorority Kappa Kappa Gamma will start colonizing a chapter here beginning the spring semester this year, according to an announcement yesterday by Miss Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, dean of women.

The addition of this new sorority will bring Carolina's total of national affiliated chapters to seven.

After Jan. 30, members of Kappa Kappa Gamma from other campuses will probably come to Carolina to work on the colonization of a chapter here. In addition, outside members will be helped by at least three Carolina coeds who are currently members of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Dean Carmichael said the new sorority would probably try to pledge new girls shortly after the colonization gets underway.

The period of colonization will continue through the summer until the actual installation of the chapter next fall.

The move to bring a new sorority to UNC was begun shortly after the 1957 fall formal rush. According to figures released by the dean of women's office, around 60 girls who went through the fall rush were denied bids primarily because there was not enough room for them in the currently existing six national sororities here.

Dean Carmichael said, "Student opinion on the campus was unified in asserting the necessity for another sorority."

Finally, on Dec. 2, 1957, the necessary student, faculty and administration groups had approved the selected of Kappa Kappa Gamma as the new sorority. At this time a bid was extended to the sorority to establish a chapter here.

In a letter received yesterday from Mrs. Clara O. Pierce, executive secretary-treasurer of Kappa Kappa Gamma, the national soror-

ROCKET MAN RECOVERED

MOSCOW, Jan. 6—(AP)—Soviet Russia has shot a man-carrying rocket 186 miles into the air and the man parachuted back to earth, reliable sources said tonight.

If true, it may be an even more dramatic scientific achievement than the launchings of Sputnik I and the dog-carrying Sputnik II last fall.

But there was no official announcement whatever concerning this venture. It was reported to have taken place a day or two after New Year's.

The informants' story was that the Russians fired the manned rocket up 300 kilometers (186.41 (cq) miles) from wintry soviet soil through the 70-below-zero cold of the stratosphere and well into the blistering heat of the ionosphere, a vast ocean of electricity whose reflecting layers bounce radio waves back to earth.

They did not specify whether the parachutist went all the way up and it was not made clear how he succeeded in getting down.

Months ago, however, Russian scientists sent up dogs to a lesser height. The dogs were released and parachuted to safety, apparently unharmed. It was a dog from this experimental kennel, a female named Laika, that was sent to her ultimate death in Sputnik II.

Observers speculated that the rocket man was released from the rocket in a pressurized container equipped so he could survive at great altitudes and break free of it to jump with his 'chute at the right stage.

A nongovernmental observer of missiles developments said today that if the Russians actually launched a human into lower space they did it with a German-designed craft.

Eric Bergaust, editor of Missiles and Rockets Magazine, said it has been known in missles circles for several years that the Russians have been working since 1945 on such a craft.

A rocket plane known as the T-4A, it was designed to have a range of 12,000 miles and a speed of about 5,000 miles an hour.

The accounts of the manned rocket, if confirmed, would give the Soviet Union a claim to a fourth coup in space experimentation in little more than four months.

The Russians announced last Aug. 26 they had successfully tested an intercontinental rocket missile, meaning a weapon with a range of 5,000 miles or more, that han "hit any spot on the globe."

Then came the launching of the two earth satellites.

Now the manned rocket story, which may or may not be true.

The informants said the Russian who rode the rocket parachuted successfully to earth. They did not say this mystery man was alive when he landed. But the implication was that he was safe.

There were no hints of his identity.

Dozens of Russians have volunteered as human guinea pigs for pioneering flights in space, with the moon and Mars among ultimate goals.

Two Grants Will Cover 3 Years

The University of North Carolina School of Medicine has received two March of Dimes grants totaling $237,403. Each grant covers a three-and-one-half year period.

The grants were recently announced jointly by UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock and Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. Effective Jan. 1, the grants will help the University play an increasingly important role in the teaching of skills that help bring handicapped patients back to more nearly normal lives, it was stated today.

A grant of $131,836 will continue the support of a program for teaching the concepts and basic techniques of modern rehabilitation to undergraduates and graduate medical students.

The other grant, which is for $105,576, will assist in the establishment of a baccalaureate curriculum in physical theapy.

The program for the teaching of rehabilitation techniques and concepts is one of 15 supported by the National Foundation in medical schools across the country. The means used today to help severely handicapped patients return to productive lives are far different from those available a decade ago. The 15 teaching programs will help enable doctors to use new techniques, and will serve as pilot studies from which should come standards and ideas that will influence medical education everywhere.

Physical therapists are important to the team approach that is now used in aiding handicapped patients. There are only two physical therapy curricula giving undergraduate degrees in southeastern and south midwestern areas of the United States.

The need for a physical therapy course in a state university which attracts students primarily from this region will be filled by this new program at UNC, a spokesman for UNC said.

BROUGHT BY SYMPOSIUM

Abba Eban, Israeli Ambassador To Speak Here Tomorrow At 8 P.M.

Dr. Abba Eban, Israeli ambassador to the United States since 1950, will be in Chapel Hill tomorrow. Dr. Eban, who will speak in Hill Hall at 8 p.m., is being brought here as the second presentation of the Carolina Forum.

A banquet in honor of the ambassador will be held at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Carolina Inn. After his address, a reception in Graham Memorial has been scheduled.

Dr. Eban, a prominent scholar of Middle Eastern Affairs, was born in South Africa. Raised in England, he attended Cambridge University and later became a member of the Cambridge faculty as an authority on Hebrew, Arabic and Persian literature.

POLITICAL WORK

His political work in Israel began in 1946 when he went to Jerusalem to act as liaison officer of Allied Headquarters with the Jewish population. It was Eban's job at that time to enlist the participation of Jewish volunteers in special missions on behalf of the Allied forces in the Near East and Europe.

Later, he became chief instructor at the Middle East Arab Center in Jerusalem. During this period, Eban traveled widely in the countries of the Near East, frequently lecturing in Hebrew and Arabic to Jewish and Arab audiences and contributing to journals written in these languages.

AFTER WORLD WAR II

After World War II, Eban served with the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem. In 1947 he was a member of the staff of the Jewish Agency which secured the vote of the General Assembly of the United Nations to set up the state of Israel.

An active member of the Zionist movement, Dr. Eban appeared before the Political Committee of the United Nations in 1949 to plead the case for Israel's admission to the United Nations.

AMBASSADOR

Eban became Ambassador to the United States in September of taining his function as chief Is 1950, while at the same time reraeli delegate to the United Natoins. When appointed Ambassador to the United States, Eban was the youngest official to hold a position of such rank and importance in Washington.

Ambassador Eban has achieved prominence in the United States as a diplomat, an orator and a scholar of Middle Eastern Affairs. He has been awarded honorary degrees by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Boston University and the University of Maryland.

The Carolina Forum has invited all students and other interested persons to attend Dr. Eban's address and the reception in Graham Memorial immediately following the speech.

National Student Assn. Plans Regional Seminar

The Third Regional International Student Relations Seminar of the Carolinas-Virginia Region of the United States National Student Assn. will be held Feb. 14, 15 and 16 at WCUNC.

Whit Whitfield, UNC's NSA coordinator, has announced that UNC may send one or more delegates to this seminar depending upon the qualifications of those applying.

Those who are accepted as delegates by the Regional Recommendations Committee will receive grants from the USNSA International Commission to help defray the expenses incurred.

The purposes of the seminar are three-fold:

1. To inform member campuses about international student relations and the importance of NSA's overseas relation with other student unions.

2. To encourage and to stimulate more effective campus foreign student programming through exchange of ideas among the various schools.

3. To create in students an awareness of the personal part they may play in NSA's foreign relation program.

Prospective participants need not be NSA members or student government leaders, Whitfield said. Students who have an interest in or knowledge of international student relations will be valuable, he said.

Applications to attend the seminar may be secured from Whitfield or the Student Government Office. They must be filled out and returned to Whitfield immediately for processing. The deadline for applications will be Friday, Jan. 10.

The last regional seminar was held at UNC last February in conjunction with the Regional Assembly, and was termed very successful by both officials and participants.

Forgery Case Investigation Is Continuing

The Men's Honor Council is still investigating a case concerning excuses allegedly purchased by numerous Carolina students from a former UNC student.

George Ragsdale, chairman of the council, said the he was not yet ready to divulge numbers of students who are involved in this case.

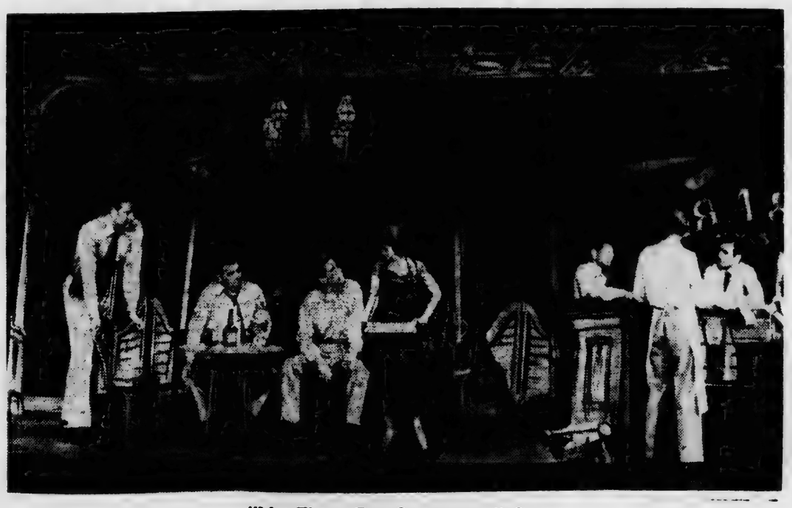
'NO TIME FOR SERGEANTS'

Popular Play To Be Presented Here Followed 'Teahouse Of August Moon'

Mac Hyman's popular novel, "No Time For Sergeants," arrives here as a stage play in Memorial Hall at 8:30 Friday evening. The book came into being as a play when Emmett Rogers, associate of producer-actor Maurice Evans, read the the book and passed it along to Evans. Evans had been looking for a second play about the peace-time Army with which to follow up his production of "The Teahouse of the August Moon." "No Time For Sergents" is an account of a Georgia plowboy who, through sheer innocent good will, disrupts the operation of the Army and the Air Force.

An intensive search was conducted by Evans and Rogers to find an adapter for "Sergeants' and eventually they came up with Ira Levin, an army private still in uniform, who had won the Edgar Allen Poe Award for this novel, "A Kiss Before Dying. Levin first wrote an abbreviated television script of the play, which was presented by U.S. Steel.



While Levin worked on the manuscript Evans and Rogers secured the services of director Morton Da Costa, who had just finished staging the musical comedy, "Plain and Fancy," and has since added "Auntie Mame" to his list of directorial achievements.

Peter Larking was engaged to design the sets which include an airplane in flight, a parachute jump, a variety of rooms in army barracks, an induction center and the heart of a deep forest.

The show had its world premiere at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven, Conn., in September, 1955, and opened on Broadway in October. Since its opening the play has filled theatres in New York, London, Honolulu, Sweden, Germany and Austria.

The cast is the company which has played the show for two years in New York. The company features Charles Hohman, Rex Everhart, Tucker Ashworth, Howard Freeman, Royal Beal, James Millhollin and Christian Flanders.

Tickets for the production are available at the business office of the Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall. Il seats are reserved at $2.20, $3.30, and $4.40

"No Time For Sergeants" Set

The stage setting of "No Time For Sergeants" was designed by Peter Larking, and includes in addition to the barroom shown above, an airplane in flight, a parachute jump, rooms in an Army barracks, an induction center and the heart of a forest. The show, which will appear here Friday at 8:30 p.m., was premiered at New Haven, Conn. in September, 1955.

Wetzel

ROCKINGHAM, N. C. Jan. 7 (AP)-Frank Edward Wetzel, 37, today was indicted for murder in the gunshot slaying of a North Carolina highway patrolman.

Sheriff Raymond Goodman of Richmond County said Wetzel would be brought here from Central Prison in Raleigh, and under present plans would be kept in the county jail here during the trial.

Interviews Set By Researchers This Afternoon

Today from 4 to 7 p.m. in Roland Parker II, interviews with interested persons concerning the policies and organization of the Daily Tar Heel will be conducted by the Newspaper Research Committee.

The five-member committee will hold the interviews with one student at a time.

The committee was set up by Student Legislature to study policies of the Daily Tar Heel and similar college newspapers. The committee will make a report of its findings and any recommendations for the improvement of the Daily Tar Heel to the Legislature in February.

Interviews will also be held Monday, Jan. 13, starting at 2 p.m., in Roland Parker II.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Eleanor Hemstredt, Lula Sue Ballentine and Jane Mulsey and Raymond Smith, Joe Eller, Doug McCallister, Charles Moss, Milburn Gibbs, Walter Slater, Amos Ballard, William Brigman, Charles Campbell, Franklin Clents, Norman Kanter, Boyce Cole, Jerry Oppenheimer, William Sermons, Donald Tribus and Julian Smith.

The 'Plan For Competence'

Yesterday we commented at length on selection of editor of The Daily Tar Heel, only to be reminded of an editorial, "Plan For Competence," which relatively recently appeared in a major North Carolina Newspaper.

Asserting that Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the UNC Journalism School would like to take over The Daily Tar Heel as a "practice sheet" for his students, the editorial claimed that students here "have pretty nearly decided that they are not competent to pick editors in the first place and won't keep them if their views are unpopular after they get them."

Well, it's true that Dean Luxon would like to have, as the editorial said, a "practice sheet" for his students a laboratory in which, just as in botany or zoology courses, his students could work.

However, after talking at length with the Dean, we do not feel that he is attempting to "take over" the Daily Tar Heel as a publication on which journalism students could sharpen their teeth.

The newspaper has been in the past and still is open to those taking courses in Bynum Hall. In fact, we'd rather have a journalism student working on The Daily Tar Heel than a history major or a psychology major. And we feel that a working arrangemen can be realized with Dean Luxon's students without losing student control and operation of the Daily Tar Heel.

It is only natural to us that Dean Luxon would desire a "practice sheet" for his students, be it controlled by the Journalism School or by elected representatives of the student body. There are laboratories for the physical and natural sciences, and, similarly, there should exist some working ground for journalism students.

Consequently, the Daily Tar Heel should make room for Dean Luxon's students with an eye to giving the journalism major practical experience while using his services to produce a daily newspaper for the University community. It should not, however, give way to control or influence by the Journalism School.

As for the inference in the "Plan For Competence" editorial that students here aren't capable of electing editors, we would point out that even on a national level there exist means by which officials failing in their jobs can be removed from office.

We do not think it is a sign of incompetence when responsible people stand up to their mistakes and attempt to correct them. And we do not concur with the editorial's opinion that students here have come to recall editors when "(editors) views are unpopular after they get them."

Such editorial opinion fails to recognize the broad differences between a privately-owned press and one for which officials are popularly elected. On a privately-owned paper, the owner or publisher can hire, or fire, an editor. But does that denote incompetence on the part of the owner or publisher?

We don't think so. The chief executive should have that power, and his decision surely is made for good reason. At the University of North Carolina, the students are the owners and publishers of the newspaper, and similarly they posses the right to select or remove an editor from office.

If that is incompetence, then surely incompetence reigns throughout the North Carolina press. We're glad that such is not the rule in Tar Heelia.

Lights For Library

Someone should see to it soon that lights are focused on the front steps of Louis Round Wilson Library.

For a student entering the library, his eyes adjusted to darkness, the steps are not hazardous. But they become extremely dangerous for the student who descends after being used to the light.

Shadows produced by light shining outward through the Library doors make the steps look like one black mass. Conceivably, someone could fall and break a leg.

To focus lights on the steps would be a meager expenditure. But in the long run a little expense could avert a major tragedy.

THE DURHAM SUN

Need Scholarship

Educators and others are taking a cautious view of President Eisenhower's new program of federal aid to education designed to speed up the nation's output of scientists.

The program, among other things, calls for the granting of 10,000 federal scholarships a year for four years to provide college education for talented youths who could not get a college education otherwise.

Among the things that bother some people is a fear that federal aid might mean federal "domination" of the schools and attempts to establish and dictate American education policy.

There are some other possible problems which have caused many to adopt a wait-and-see attitude before committing themselves for or against the plan. And nobody has come up yet with the answer to the question of how these additional thousands of students are to be absorbed each year on college campuses already badly overcrowded, and lacking in sufficient classrooms and other facilities.

No one, we think, denies the nation's need to accelerate its program of scientific research and development. More scientists are needed, but they cannot be turned out overnight. And the answer is not just numerical—quality is even more important than quantity.

This is a "crash program," we know, but if we are going to develop more and better scientists on a long-range program, we are going to have to start way back in the public schools. One of the weaknesses of our education system today, we think, lies in the fact that it is designed to accommodate the "average" child, and the gifted or exceptional student is neglected, if not actually held back.

Somehow we are going to have to restore a desire on the part of members of upcoming generations to delve into the more difficult basic science subjects, rather than be content to go along with the herd and take only the subjects which are required to "just get by." And restoration opportunities facilities and instruction for directed study.

Too long has there been too little premium on scholarship.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

New Book May Disturb Some, Awaken Others

By GAIL GODWIN

There is a new book out that is going to be mighty disturbing to some people and like a light in the dark to others. It is rapidly climbing on the best seller list, in spite of its gigantic length (1168 pp.), and has already been proclaimed a literary giant by such book reviewers as Richard McLaughlin.

The giant is ATLAS SHRUGGED by Ayn Rand. Miss Rand's story is about a man who decided to stop the motor of the world—by taking from it all the individuals who had minds and used them. One by one, he urges the "minds" to go on strike against the "looters," (those who live off of the efforts of their superiors).

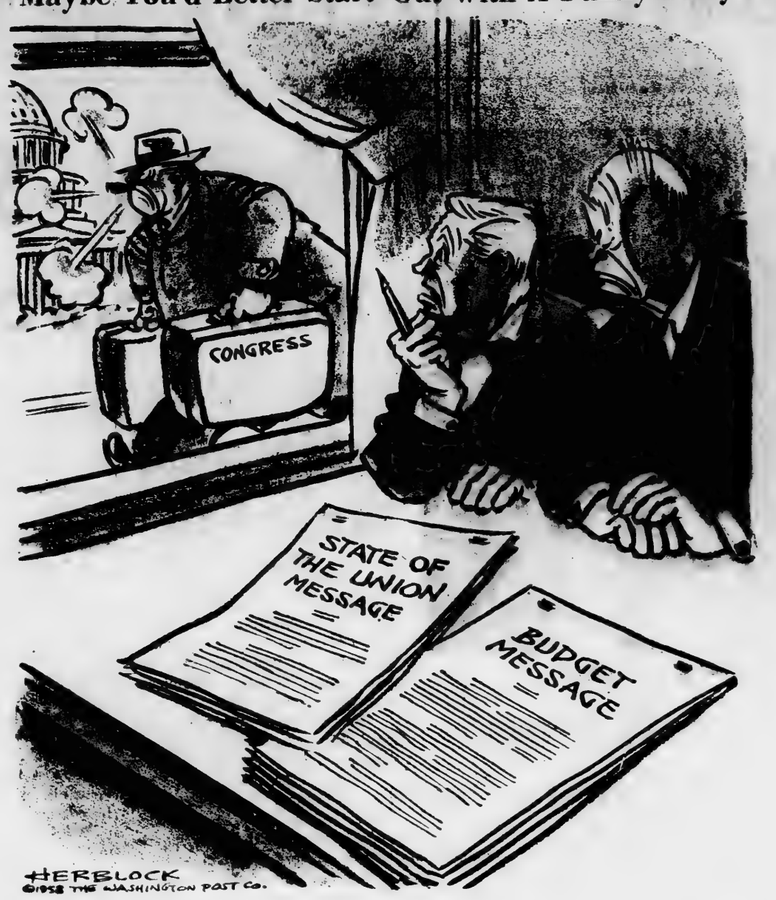
Among the strikers are: a woman who runs a transcontinental railroad, a concert pianist who disappears on his greatest night, a playboy who owns most of the world's supply of copper, a philosopher who got tired of teaching that reason and logic still rule to blank faces and deaf ears, and a steel industrialist who has invented a new alloy tougher than steel.

After the strike of the "minds," the "looters" are left free to make a mess of their government and industry in no time short. They soon go begging for the "minds" to return and clean up their mess.

The book is a definite protest against today's increasing bureaucracy, dwindling personal liberty, declining capitalism, and the ever-praised welfare state. Miss Rand shows what could happen.



ATLAS SHRUGGED has a very important message for college students. In a time of increasing emphasis on the importance of emotions and "subconscious desires" and "conditioning," Miss Rand's philosophy demands the return of reason and self-discipline and achievement. The softies who cry, "I can't help it!" and "You owe me something because I need it!" As Phillip Rearden did, are not tolerated one minute by the men with minds, such as Hank Rearden, steel magnate.

A book like this was needed to answer those who are multiplying their non-absolute ideas on college campuses: the ideas that nothing makes sense, that we must feel, not think, that we must accept and exist.

Many days after reading ATLAS SHRUGGED, the reader will find himself looking for, and wishing for perhaps, a John Galt. To these readers the author addresses the following postscript at the end of her novel:

"I trust that no one will tell me that men such as I write about don't exist. That this book has been written - and published - is my proof that they do."

"Maybe You'd Better Start Out With A Funny Story"

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Man Recovered; Democracy Lost

By CURTIS GANS

Russia, according to Moscow reports, launched a human 186 miles into space and recovered him successfully. The height of Sputnik I was between 100 and 500 miles in space. The chances for the Russians to have a man in a satellite before the year's end appear excellent. The chances for the annihilation or surrender of the U. S. within two years are quite good.

If there is at this time any hope for peace in the world and hope for freedom from any tyranny of the individuals, it rests on the assumption that the countries espousing democracy can keep the U.S.S.R. from being able to attack without fear of retaliation.

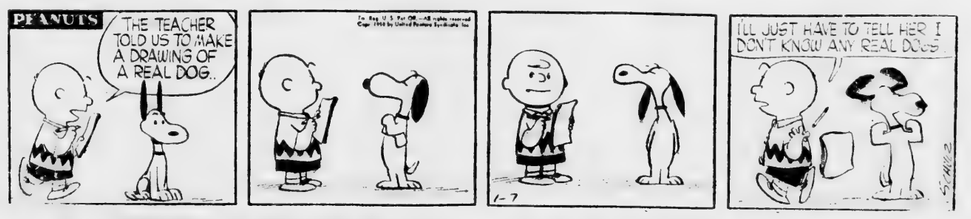
The day is rapidly approaching when the Russians can be sure that they can devastate the U. S. before U. S. has a chance to retaliate. At the present time a missile with atomic warhead can negotiate the distance between the U. S. and Russia in less than twenty minutes. This missile guided from a satellite in orbit could achieve deadly accuracy, for errors due to the curvature of the earth would be all but eliminated.

This must be contrasted with the U. S. failure to put up even a six inch satellite, and what is more important the U. S. failure to make a satisfactory satellite vehicle. It must also be contrasted against the fact that the one successful U. S. attempt to fire an Intercontinental Ballistics Missile was done only at laboratory range of 500 miles.

The net impression is quite grim, and a grimmer since President Eisenhower saw fit to add only one or two billion dollars to the defense budget of 1958, and proudly proclaimed that his budget would be balanced with maybe a surplus and with no increase in taxation.

If there was ever a time for urgency the time is now, before the Russians are able to overrun the world. Even Great Britain prior to World War II drew the line when Hitler attacked Poland.

The recent Afro-Asian conference's criticism of the U. S. and British Prime Minister Harold MacMillan's cries for a neutrality and disarmament treaty with the Soviet Union is no small indication of the waning influence of the U. S. in the world.



The latest Russian success will do little to enhance the U. S. reputation with the world-at-large. It might draw certain nations on the U. S. side in the battle for a free world to neutrality or the Russian side for fear of the retaliatory power of the Soviet Union.

The doors to freedom are rapidly being drawn shut, they being drawn shut by a people willing to sacrifice some of their standard of living for their national integrity and for a high place in the world. Surely, the U. S. in order to preserve democracy must be willing to give equally or more to this cause.

The time for sacrifice is now, Jan. 7, 1958. The time for a crash program in science, technology, wise foreign policy, and overall education is the present. No amount of soothsaying will destroy Russian dominance of the world. The need is for dollars and action.

Democracy is fighting for its life. If policy does not change radically and soon, it is going to lose, and the freedom of any individual in the world will be another myth of the past.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Reader Looking For New Editor

To The Editor:

I agree with the editorial in the December 15th issue of The Daily Tar Heel . . . the comic strips should stay on the Editorial page. That page is a farce. However, you should include pictures of your cohorts Lowenstein and Crowther. That would make the comic section complete.

I am aware of the fact that you are not going to take a definite stand on controversial matters because you may jeopardize your job, but must we contend with the gibbering on page two?

You have discussed Fraternities, of which, only about 15% of the Student Body belong, you overworked "Judith", (You wasted time and space. Only two hundred people, a capacity crowd in Roland Parker Lounge, could have seen the play.) you gallantly defended a "poor, humilated Negro schoolgirl" in Charlotte, while on page one you ran the head "NEGRO Rapes Coaches' Wife." Come now, Mr. Eisele, are you torn between two loyailties?

You have elaborated on foreign affairs. You seem to be well versed in the problems of our Nation and its diplomacy. We have State papers to keep us informed on World events. What we need is a campus newspaper.

You give up editorial after editorial on the discussion of a comic-strip character, "Peanuts", and on occasion he's front page news. I find the strip amusing but Charley Brown requires no hero worship . . . . And you, and those backing you, labeled Neil Bass "immature" and "incompetent"!

If it were incompetence, it was a grievous fault, and grievously has Bass answered it.

The Daily Tar Heel has lost its color . . . its punch. There is nothing to cause disagreement. A former student, in a Greensboro news article, called the DTH a "paper doily". These doilies litter the floors of the dormitories. These "daily doilies" are collected each day by the janitors and destroyed. They should be saved. There may be a stortage of paper someday.

While stacks of DTH's lie on the floor unnoticed, and while you are busy "revamping", others, like myself, are searching for a capable editor . . . . Pass the petition, I'll sign.

Disrespectfully yours,
CHUCK CHAMBERS

Ask Me No Questions

Paris, Dec. 18, 1957—The Atlantic alliance reached limited accord in principle tonight on the arming of West Europe with nuclear missiles . . .
—The New York Times

Question: Is it your position, sir, that there should be an agreement in principle on missile bases at the NATO meeting? Dulles: No. I would not think so. I don't favor a great deal of these so-called "agreements in principle." I remember that my first important diplomatic experience was at the Paris peace conference of 1919. We largely used the French language and at that time whenever I was told that a proposition was accepted en principe I always felt discouraged because I knew it would probably never get anywhere.

Tea And Symptomy

By FRANK CROWTHER

I think that the time has come for me to pay a visit to Dr. Rhyne and his menagerie of mystics. My jungle has been sending out strange messages concerning things to come.

Last Saturday, for some ridiculous reason, I began thinking about the origin and meaning of several almost proverbial or cliched phrases. One that remained with me throughout the entire day was "dead as a door-nail." Now why being dead as a door-nail happens to have been so enticing, I don't know; in fact, it seemed that the more I thought of the phrase, the more absurd it appeared to be.

Saturday evening, I was in bed reading Cozzens' By Love Possessed (yes, there are those who sometimes stay in and read Saturday nights . . .O.K., so I was sick!) when out of nowhere came a thought about Albert Camus. I also had a dream that night that I was sitting in the warm summer sun reading a new book of criticism concerning Camus.

Sunday afternoon, after having a pleasantly late breakfast at Danziger's restaurant, I went back to the room to ramble through the Sunday New York Times. Two things in the book review section rather astonished me.

J. Donald Adams, who writes the very competent "Speaking of Books" column, led off with a lengthy discussion of the origin of the old saying "dead as a door-nail." This precipitated a bit of head-scratching, but page 13 of the same section stopped me quite cold. There, taking up the whole page, was an advertizement of a new book of criticism on the works of Albert Camus by the French critic, Albert Maquet. The title of the book was Albert Camus: The Invincible Summer.

Now my brother doesn't talk to horses and I'm sure there is no gypsy blood in my immediate family but if that happens again, I think I'll head for Las Vegas and wait for the spirits to move me . . .non-liquid spirits, that is.

TO COORDINATE NC CCUN

United Nations Collegiate Council Sets Conference Here This Weekend

In an attempt to maintain any state-wide organization of Collegiate Councils for the United Nations on other campuses in North Carolina, the local CCUN will urge delegates to a CCUN conference here this weekend to set up a continuation committee.

This central group will coordinate any activity and project of the CCUN in North Carolina, in addition to supplying information about the national and state CCUN organizations.

The local CCUN Committee met this weekend with the traveling secretary of the national Collegiate Council for the United Nations, Miss Connie Currie. At this particular meeting, it was decided that a continuation committee elected by the conference delegates would be the logical follow-up to the conference itself.

Carolina CCUN members agreed that the main purpose of the conference is to arouse interest in CCUN and perhaps by a continuation committee (which would mean state officers) maintain this interest when the delegates returned to their colleges.

Members of the CCUN Committee at Carolina are sponsoring the conference for North Carolina college students. The highlight of the conference is the appearance of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, prominent in United Nations Work. Mrs. Roosevelt will speak informally to the conference delegates Sunday afternoon. A public address for the public has been scheduled for Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Of 37 colleges in North Carolina invited to send delegates, around 11 had replied Sunday. The UNC chapter of CCUN is the only one in the state at the present time.

License Tags Now On Sale Here At Stancell Motor Co.

North Carolina license tags for 1958 for Chapel Hill and the surrounding area went on sale at Stancell Motor Co. Thursdya. Deadline for the purchase of tags is midnight, Feb. 15.

UNC students regardless of where their car is registered in North Carolina may purchase these tags with presentation of their FS-1 insurance form, registration, or title, at Stancell Motor Company, 112 West Franklin Street. The licensing department will be open 9 a.m. weekdays, and 9 a.m. to 12 on Saturdays.

New in the purchase of license this year is the requirement of the FS-1 form, signifying the bearer is to be covered by liability insurance. Under a law passed by the 1957 General Assembly no one will be permitted to purchase a license for a car or truck in North Carolina without liability insurance, unless $11,000 cash, or $15,000 bond has been deposited with the Dept. of Motor Vehicles.

Price of North Carolina tags went up from $10 to $11 this year with the added dollar to go toward paying the expense of the driver education program in North Carolina.

Under North Carolina law no out-of-state student will be required to buy North Carolina tags, unless he expresly desires to do so, as long as he remains a student.

Exhibit Here Honors Poet Carl Sandburg

The eightieth birthday anniversary of Carl Sandburg yesterday, noted poet-biographer and historian, is currently being honored by an exhibit in Louis Rounds Wilson library.

"The poet of the prairie," as he has been called, is represented by his outstanding books, as well as clippings and photographs.

The exhibit, prepared by Mrs. Myra R. Lauterer of the Library's Graphic Arts Department, features the newly-published "The Sandburg Range," and newspaper comment on it and other Sandburg works.

Photographs, taken by Robert H. Bartholomew of Chapel Hill, show Sandburg at his "Connemara" estate near Flat Rock, N. C., and at the 1955 commencement of the University, when Sandburg delivered the graduation address and received an honorary degree of doctor of letters.

Sandburg's historical writings are represented in the display by "Abraham Lincoln, the Prairie Years and the War Years," "Mary Lincoln, Wife and Widow," "Lincoln Collector" and "Prairie-Town Boy."

Comments On Russia

The following are excerpted from the AP wire on the Russian recovery of a man from 186 miles in space:

Sen. Kefauver (D-Tenn) told reporters the reported Russian feat should answer any doubts as to where this country stands in the race with the Soviets for space flight supremacy.

Sen. Flanders (R-Vt), like Kefauver, a member of the Senate sub-committee investigating the U. S. Missile-Satellite program, said of the report:

"That is a little different from putting a man into orbit, but this is on the way."

Chairman Durham (D-NC) of the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee, commented, "If they have really accomplished this, there is no doubt they have taken another long step forward."

Dr. J. Allen Hynek, Assistant Director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, was asked if he cared to comment on the rocket report and replied:

"If so, it's a remarkable achievement and a very brave man who has done it. Beyond that there is nothing to be said."

White House Press Secretary James C. Haggerty declined comment on reports of a manned rocket.

Slash

LONDON, Jan. 6 (AP)-The Soviet Union today announced a slash of 300,000 men in its armed forces.

Moscow radio in an English language broadcast said military units totaling more than 41,000 men were being withdrawn from Communist East Germany to Soviet territory and were being disbanded.

The Tass news report also said more than 17,000 men will be withdrawn from Hungarian units. They will be brought back to Soviet territory and disbanded, the broadcast said.

Nothing Doing

WASHINGTON Jan. 7 (AP)-Angelo La Marca, condemned kidnap slayer of baby Peter Weinberger of Westbury, N. Y., today failed to win a Supreme Court review of his conviction.

La Marca, 32-year-old mechanic and cab driver, was sentenced to die last Nov. 7 in Sing Sing Prison's electric chair. But Justice Harlan granted a stay pending final Supreme Court action on a petition for review of the case.

Today's denial means a new death date will be set.

No Surprise

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7-(AP)- Dr. Fred Whipple, head of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, expressed no surprise today when told of reports that Russia had launched a missile with a man aboard.

But Whipple declined to make any off-the-cuff comment on the reported ascent of a Russian to about 186 ½ miles by rocket and return to earth by parachute.

"I would rather have a little time to study the reports and consider the matter," he said.

Whipple was asked whether he thought the Russians were capable of achieving such a thing.

He replied:

"Well, they've been talking about doing this for some time. And they've already sent up a space object with a dog inside."

SORORITY

ity agreed to colonize a chapter here.

"Fortunately, colonization on this campus was approved by our 1946 Convention which meant that at this time it was only necesary to gain the unanimous approval of our national officers,' Mrs. Pierce said. "Otherwise, we would not have been able to move so quickly."

The director of Kappa Kappa Gamma chapters in this area is Mrs. Frank H. Alexander of Charlotte, who will supervise the colonization here.

According to Dean Carmichael, of the 1,320 coeds enrolled, 35 per cent are affiliated with sororities.

The approval of extending an invitation to Kappa Kappa Gamma came from the Advisory Committee on Special Sorority Problems at a meeting Oct. 25. Further approval came from the following student, faculty and administration groups: the Panhellenic Council on Nov. 20, the Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities on Nov. 25 and the Chancellor's Cabinet on Dec. 2.

FORGERY

Each day he said some are added and some are dropped from the list of those suspected of using these excuses. More are being added, however, than dropped.

The Honor Council is checking with over 400 professors and the files in Central Records office. The only students the council has talked to so far are those who have voluntarily turned themselves in.

Ragsdale said those who were suspected and had not turned themselves in would confronted in a number of days "with the information we have."

Last week Ragsdale revealed that an 'ex-student" had secured hundreds of blank excuses similar to those used by the University and employed a rubber stamp identical to that used in Hanes Hall to mark on the blanks the time for which a student was to be excused.

Names also had to be forged in Hanes Hall and the infirmary in order to complete the system.

Hospital Administrators To Meet Here Jan. 13-17

A national seminar of the fellows of the American College of Hospital Administrators will be held at UNC Jan. 13-17.

This is the 12th annual meeting of the fellows and the first time such a meeting has been held in the southeastern United States. To be a fellow in the national organization a person must have not less than 10 years' experience as a hospital administrator.

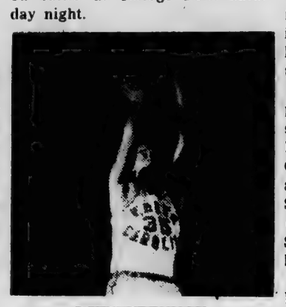
Tar Heel Cagers Tackle William & Mary Here Tonight

By BILL KING

William and Mary's Indians, their knives glittering and hungry, will try to capture the biggest scalp imaginable tonight as they invade Woollen Gym for a little get together with the defending national cage champs at 8 o'clock.



The Injuns' pouch has seen better days as the Southern Conference contingents come into the battle with Carolina bearing three wins and six losses. But it must be remembered that William and Mary suffered a tragic ordeal some weeks back when several of their key players were seriously hurt in an auto accident.

Shoot For Tenth

For Frank McGuire's five, it will be encounter number 11 and they will be seeking their tenth win and their fifth in a row since losing to West Virginia in the finals of the Kentucky Invitational. They have lost only once in their last 42 outings.

The Tar Heels had surprisingly little trouble in overwhelming Wake Forest, 71-45 here Saturday night in a game which saw senior forward Pete Brennan turn in the greatest performance of his career as he continues to make the hardwood experts sit up and take notice of his basketball talents. The quiet, unassuming Brooklyn native collected 32 points and 22 rebounds to lead the McGuiremen over the sluggish Deacs.

This is only the first duty of a busy week for the Carolina club. Virginia will be here Thursday night and Maryland will entertain the Tar Heels in an eagerly-awaited battle at College Park Saturday night.

. . . PETE BRENNAN . . .

Frosh Play Elon

A capacity crowd of 5,500 is expected to watch the Tar Heels in the fourth of eight games slated for Woollen Gym this season. This is only the second home game that hasn't been piped out to a regional television audience.

The Carolina starting five will probably include Brennan and sophomore Lee Shaffer at forward, Dick Kepley at center and Bob Cunningham and Tommy Kearns at guard. Sophomore guard Harvey Salz is also destined to see plenty of action as are forwards Roy Searcy, Danny Lotz and Ray Stanley and guard John Crotty.

In preliminary action, the Carolina freshmen will take on the Elon College JV's at 6 o'clock.

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

This will be a mighty busy week for the Carolina basketball team as the Tar Heels try to do some cage cramming before they get down to scholastic cramming.

It's William and Mary here tonight, Virginia here Thursday night and an engagement with Maryland at College Park on Saturday night. After that is N. C. State (Jan. 15) and Clemson on TV (Jan. 18). Then the Tar Heels will sit down and sweat through exams with the rest of us and won't return to the hardwood until next semester. That'll be against South Carolina the first day of February.

You can can expect some mighty hot debate up Philadelphia way this week as delegates to the NCAA get together to look over the national athletic situation and see what improvements can be made.

One of the outstanding items on the agenda and one that is certain to touch off a few tempers is the "red shirting" issue. Red shirting, also calld bohunking, is the practice of college teams of holding out boys for an extra season while letting them continue to practice, thus giving them valuable experience. The pros and cons of this issue will be interesting to watch.

A recent news item from the Associated Press gives an indication of the mounting upward trend of basketball in North Carolina. According to the story, the cage game has replaced football as the top source of revenue for the North Carolina High School Athletic Assn.

Basketball in North Carolina has improved greatly over the past few years as evidenced in the consistently increasing gates at tournaments and regular season game. To Everett Case of N. C. State and our own Frank McGuire should go a lion's share of the credit for this. They brought basketball to the State.

From now out, the Daily Tar Heel sports will run a schedule of the week's events each Tuesday. The calendar (see elsewhere on page) will include the complete slate of all Carolina athletic events for the remainder of that week.

Only games away from Chapel Hill will be designated. Thus any game that does not read for example, varsity basketball at Maryland, will be a home game.

Tatum Reiterates: Not Interested In New Job

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 6 —(AP)— Bud Wilkinson, Oklahoma football coach, said today he has not been approached by the Philadelphia Eagles to take the job as head coach of the National Football League team.

Mentioned as a possible successor to Huge Devore who will be "kicked upstairs" as soon as the Eagles sign a new head man, Wilkinson said, "pro football? I don't know anything about it. I haven't been approached by the Eagles or any other pro team."

Wilkinson was in town for the 52nd annual National Collegiate Athletic Assn. convention.

Others who also denied interest in the Eagles' job were Jim Tatum, North Carolina coach; Don Faurot, Missouri athletic driector, and Duffy Daugherty, Michigan State coach.

Wilkinson appeared pleased that he even was considered for the Philadelphia post. He said:

"I don't know what to say. You know pro football, as little as I have seen, differs from the college brand.

"In pro football you have an element of skill in throwing and catching that doesn't exist in the college brand.

"Pro football as far as I can learn is a very different game. In the pro league, almost every team makes the same attack and has the same defense. In college it's different. What I could do as a pro coach has to be proved.

"All I know is that to play fast, you have to play from a tight formation. I like the possibilities of a varied game. You can in college football but I don"t think you can in the pro league."

Tatum said he never has "given the job a thought."

UNC Rates Third In Cage Poll

Carolina's Tar Heels received a third place rating in the weekly Associated Press basketball poll released yesterday.

The West Virginia Mountaineers, undefeated in ten starts, still occupy first place, followed by Kansas, whose record is 9-1. Kansas State is fourth and Mississippi State holds fifth. Others in the top ten are San Francisco, Cincinnati, Oklahoma State, Kentucky and Bradley.

Nothing Doing Says NCAA To NCS Plea

PHILADELPHIA Jan 7. (AP)-The National Collegiate Athletic Assn. Council today rejected appeals from the University of Washington and from North Carolina State for lightening penalties previously imposed on them.

Washington is on probation until Aug. 21, 1958, and North Carolina State until Nov. 13, 1960, and the athletes of both institutions are ineligible to compete in NCAA championships or any event cooperating with the NCAA.

Washington asked that all sports except football be exempted from such ineligibility for the balance of the period and North Carolina State asked to have all sports except basketball taken off the list. North Carolina State, which was joined by the Atlantic Coast Conference in its appeal, did not offer any fresh evidence.

This Week's Calendar

Tuesday: Varsity basketball vs. William & Mary; frosh basketball vs. Elon JV's; frosh wrestling at Pfeiffer.

Wednesday: Varsity and frosh wrestling vs. N. C. State.

Thursday: Varsity basketball vs. Virginia; Frosh basketball vs. Davidson JV's.

Swimmers Dunk Va., 57-17

By MAC MAHAFFY

The Carolina swimmers soundly whipped the University of Virginia yesterday by a score of 57 to 17. The Tar Heels took all the first place events and most of the seconds to win their sixth straight meet.

High scorer of the meet was sophomore Nash McIntosh. McIntosh captured first in the 220 yard freestyle and was a member of the winning freestyle relay. Bill Roth, senior sprinter turned in the best performance of the day with a good time in the 50 yard freestyle of 23.4.

Juniors Dominate

Carolina juniors dominated the meet with Jeff Zwicker, Kit Mercer, Brent Nash and Tony Schiffman all capturing first places. Dick Cashwell looked much improved in the diving, giving teammate Pete Renolds a close race.

The swim team lacked the valuable services of seniors Walt Rose, Bill Zickgraf, and Ned Meekins. These boys will return to action Saturday.

This was the swimmers first meet since the holidays. Saturday they travel to College Park where they will meet a very highly confident and expectant Maryland team.

Frosh Seek Sixth Win Against Elon Jayvees

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Tar Babies of Carolina, fresh from a thrilling 76-72 victory over the Wake Forest Baby Deacs which upped their season slate to 5-1, take on the Elon JVs tonight at 6:00 in the preliminary before the varsity battles William & Mary.

The frosh led the Baptist yearlings 67-54 late in the final half, only to find their lead being methodically whittled away to 75-72 with only 10 seconds remaining.

. . . COACH KEN ROSEMOND . . .

BROWN STARS

One of the most noticeable things in the contest was the excellent performance of Lou Brown, playing his first game of the season after being out with a broken hand. Brown dumped in 26 and was only one short of high scorer Doug Moe who contributed 27. Center Hugh Donahue followed with 10.

The Tar Babies trailed much of the first half but led at the intermission by 31-27. They returned to the floor a much improved team, working the ball well and hitting on more shots.

Coach Kenny Rosemond will probably lead off with Moe nad Brown at forward, Donahue at center, and Tam Shuford and Bill Hart at guard.

N-Z Has Ducat Priority For State Game

N. C. State on Jan. 15 will be the University's second reserved seat game of the year. Students, faculty members and employees of the University with athletic passbooks must exchange them for specific seating. A priority in seating will be given to people whose names start with the letters N through Z for three days—January 6-7-8.

Any tickets remaining Thursday morning, January 9, will go on a first come first served basis to anyone who applies. January 9 will be the first day that tickets will be available to those who had first chance at tickets to the Wake Forest game.

There will be two other games this year—those with Duke and Maryland—for which all seats will be reserved. Watch your paper for distribution announcements.

In order to avoid disappointment, take advantage of your priority at the earliest possible time.

Snow Won't Halt Classes

By RUTH WHITLEY

Gaily colored mushrooms, better known as umbrellas, were topped with lightly falling snow. Feet skidded dangerously across campus and a morning class was quite unable to convince the professor that the afternoon lab should be turned into an educational snowball fight.

Over a thin layer of ice, Chapel Hill's first snowfall of the year, a very moderate one, had students anxiously wondering yesterday whether classes would be called off because of the weather. In the event that something drastic occurs, the Chancellor said that students would be notified.

The weather bureau yesterday predicted "clearing and colder" for today, but mentioned nothing more about snow.

"It now appears that little further accumulation will occur except in the northeastern counties where one to three inches may fall this afternoon," was the official report at 4 p.m. yesterday.

So ends a nice wish — for a while. Maybe February will bring better luck, or exam week will find us snowbound.

Wetzel Case Jury Selection Moves Slowly

ROCKINGHAM, (AP — Frank Edward Wetzel watched intently here today as four of the jurors who will hold his life in their hands were seated in Richmond County Superior Court.

The four, one a woman, were selected from a regular panel to hear the trial of Wetzel on a charge of murdering State Highway Patrolman W. L. Reece of Hamlet on the night of Nov. 5.

State and defense lawyers then began examining a special 150-person venire drawn from the county.

Selection moved slowly. Twenty persons were questioned before the four were chosen. About half were rejected when they said they were opposed to capital punishment.

Solicitor M. G. Boyette is asking the death penalty against the 37-year-old from Seneca Falls, N. Y.

The four selected were Calvin Dawkins of East Rockingham, a textile operator; T. J. Emanuel of Hamlet, a garage owner; Mrs. Margaret Adams of Rockingham and Harold L. Ivey of Rockingham, a textile worker.

Wetzel sat quietly during proceedings in his usual costume of dark trousers, a white shirt with a figured tie and an extra-long tan corduroy coat.

During the recess, he sat alone with hands folded and eyes downcast. He paid no attention to the large courtroom crowd of 500 persons and he never once looked in the direction of the murdered patrolman's widow, Mrs. Reece.

John T., Page Jr., court-appointed lawyer for Wetzel, used four of his 14 peremptory challenges this morning. He rejected one man who said he helped sell tickets for a benefit for the Reece family. He challenged the others when they ex-

Aycock Cites 'Artificial Barriers' Impeding University Advancement

By PETE IVEY

Chancellor William B. Aycock yesterday invited the faculty of the University to prevent "artificial barriers" which might separate scientists and humanists.

Other artificial barriers, outside the University, threaten the institution's advancement, he declared.

Aycock urged the faculty to banish dividing influences and to strengthen itself internally in order to cope with obstacles which could be erected to stifle the University's advancement.

Addressing the Faculty Club at the Carolina Inn on "Universities and Artificial Boundaries," Chancellor Aycock cited the increasing federal support for scientific education and he said bolstering the sciences should not be any cause for alarm to the non-science educators.

"It would be a tragedy if splitting the atom should become the basis for splitting our educational system by causing a wedge to be driven between science and the humanities," said the chancellor.

He expressed confidence that all segments of education will go forward. "Those of us in a University must emphasize that education is a seamless web," he said. "Our educational skirmish line, like a battle skirmish line, is seldom straight but the advancement of a portion of the line serves to expedite advancement of the remainder.

"A temporary advance in one area should be welcome so long as it is used as a lever to accelerate the advance of all," said the Chancellor. "Increased support for some now will mean increased support for all in the foreseeable future."

Outside

Cooperation between schools, departments and faculty members is necessary, said Aycock, if the University is to meet and surmount existing and threatening "artificial barriers" outside the University and which in large measure could restrict the institution's progress.

Referring to the growth of Carolina from a small college in 1900 with a faculty of 35 and a student body of 512 and an appropriation of $25,000 to 1958 where there are over 7,000 students, 600 officers of instruction and an operating budget in excess of $19,000,000 Chancellor Aycock added that the "growth in administrative machinery has paralled the growth of the University."

Whereas the University used to look to the Board of Trustees for approval of policy and to the General Assembly and a few private donors for financial support, today, said Aycock, the University also must look either directly or indirectly to a Consolidated University Office, the Board of Higher Education, the Department of Administration, the State Personnel Department, and the Advisory Budget Commission for approval of policy and for many administrative decisions.

"The development of this superstructure," said Chancellor Aycock, "leaves the executive head of this institution in the middle."

Aycock described the position he

Grad Club Schedules Idea-Sharing Sessions

A series of speeches and idea-sharing sessions between various departments is being arranged here under sponsorship of the Graduate Club.

"Graduate Students' Specialization: Limits or Frontiers" is the title of the series, which will include talks by three faculty members from each of three University divisions: Humanities, Social Sciences and Natural Sciences.

Dr. William S. Newman, professor of music, will be first speaker, on Monday. His topic will be "Is Music Really A Product of Its Times?"

All nine programs will be held on Mondays, at 6 p. m. in Lenior Hall. All graduates students and faculty members have been invited to join the club members for the supper meetings and discussions.

The Humanities Division's talks will be centered on the theme of "man's creative interpretation of the world around him." The two other speakers will be Dr. William S. Wells, Kenan professor of English; and Miss Minerva Pinnell, assistant professor or art.

Professor Well's talk on Feb. 3 will deal with 'the Limits of Poetry" and Miss Pinnell's on Feb. 17 with 'Sources of Imagery in the Visual Arts."

William A. Deanton of Statesville, president of the Graduate Club, worked out plans for the series along with the executives board, which incudes Nancy Green, Winston-Salem; Grace Alley, Burlington; Bob Rennick, Chapel Hill; Jackie McCarthy, Norfolk, Va.; Margaret Minter, Tyler, Ala.; and Jean Pierre Boissavit, Bordeaux, France. James P. Carse of the campus YMCA-YWCA staff serves as adviser.

No Students Reported Hurt Over Holidays

No Carolina student was involved in any serious automobile accident during the Christmas holidays, according to reports from Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, university physician, and Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

If any serious accidents had occurred during the holidays, either of these two officials would probably have been notified about them.

Jefferies said that if any student with a Chamblee Insurance policy had an accident or illness during the holidays, then he must fill out a claim policy within 20 days of the accident or sickness.

Claim forms may be secured from Jefferies office in South Building or at the Infirmary.

George Hamilton To Appear On TV Tonight

George Hamilton IV, former UNC student and member of Kappa Alpha social fraternity, will appear on the CBS TV Patti Page The Big Record Show tonight.

He will sing his latest recording, "Why Don't They Understand," which is at present number nine across the nation and is expected to cross the million mark any day.

He will also be appearing on the American Band Stand TV show over the ABC network on Friday afternoon, Jan. 10.

Israeli Official, Dr. Abba Eban Lectures Tonight In Hill Hall

Carolina Forum Brings 2nd Campus Speaker

By SARAH ADAMS

Dr. Abba Eban, Israeli Ambassador to the United States, will appear at 8 o'clock tonight in Hill Hall as second in a series of lecturers under auspices of the Carolina Forum.

The well-known diplomat, scholar and author is among numerous national and world leaders who have appeared at UNC under sponsorship of the local student operated speaker organization.

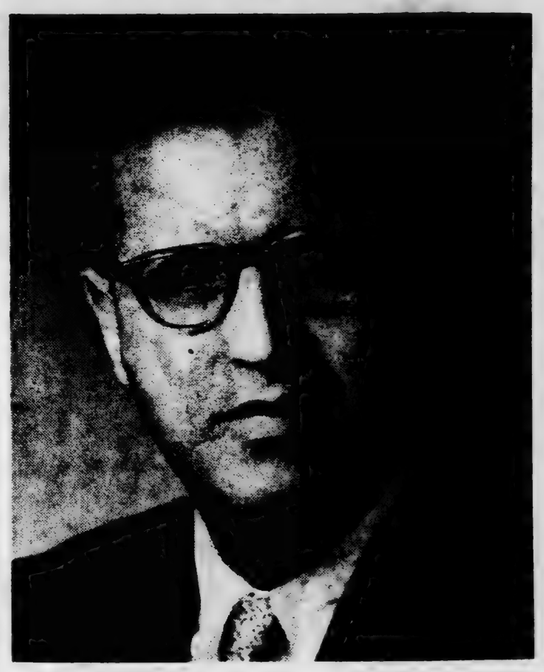
At the age of 43, Dr. Eban is one of the youngest experts of international affairs in the world today. Having been active in Israeli and world politics since 1946, Eban has amassed a remarkably distinguished record over the past 12 years.

In 1946 Dr. Eban went to Jerusalem to act as Liason Officer of Allied Headquarters with the Jewish population. At that time his job was to enlist the participation of Jewish volunteers in special missions on behalf of the Allied forces in the Near East and Europe.

After World War II, Eban served with the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem. In 1947 he was a member of the staff of the Jewish Agency which secured the vote of the General Assembly of the United Nations to set up the State of Israel.

An active member of the Zionist movement, Dr. Eban appeared before the Political and Securities Committee of the United Nations in 1949 to plead the case for Israel's admission to the United Nations.

In that same year, with the admission of Israel to the United Nations, Dr. Eban was appointed permanent representative of the Israeli Delegation to the UN.



Eban became Ambassador to the United States in September, 1950. When appointed Ambassador to the United States, Eban, at the age of 35, was the youngest official to hold a position of such rank and importance in Washington.

As a scholar, Dr. Eban has an equally outstanding record. A recognized authority on Middle Eastern Affairs, Dr. Eban was born in South Africa. Raised in England, he attended Cambridge University where he specialized in Oriental languages. Later, he was appointed to the faculty of Pembroke College of Cambridge University as an authority on Hebrew, Arabic and Persian literature.

In 1946 Eban became chief instructor at the Middle East Arab Center in Jerusalem. During the time that he served in this capacity, Dr. Eban traveled widely in the countries of the Near East, frequently lecturing in Hebrew and Arabic to Jewish and Arab audiences and contributing to journals written in these languages.

Ambassador Eban has achieved prominence in the United States as a diplomat, a scholar, an orator and an author. He recently published a book, Voice of Israel. He has been awarded honorary degrees by the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Boston University and the University of Maryland.

The Carolina Forum has, in the past, been responsible for the appearance of many distinguished personalities on the UNC campus. About Eban's appearance, Jim Holmes, chairman of the Forum, has said, "I am glad that he is coming. We have been after him for a long time."

ISRAELI AMBASSADOR Abba Eban will speak tonight in Hill Hall at 8 o'clock. Coming to the University under the auspices of the Carolina Forum, he is their second speaker of the school year.

news brief

No Information

MOSCOW, Jan. 7—(AP)—Soviet officials in a position to know said tonight they have no information about a Russian rocket carrying a man into space.

A spokesman for the Soviet Academy of Sciences and the committee for cultural relations with foreign countries made this response to questions about yesterday's unofficial reports that a Soviet rocket shot 186 miles up shortly after New Year and that the man aboard parachuted successfully.

A Soviet foreign office spokesman, questioned along similar lines by Western correspondents, said he was unable to say anything about the accounts published abroad. Asked if the Soviet government would have an announcement on the subject, the foreign ministry spokesman said so far as he knew there was no communique in sight.

Wetzel

ROCKINGHAM., Jan. 7—(AP)—Court officials pressed on today in their task of selecting a jury to decide the fate of Frank Edward Wetzel, handsome 37-year-old 3-time loser charged with murdering a North Carolina highway patrolman.

By noon, only four jurors had been picked in a slow session during which state and defense attorneys questoned the prospective jurors. A regular jury panel was exhausted and a special venire of 150 persons from Richmond County was called.

Congress

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7—(AP)—Congress embarked on its first Space Age session today in an atmosphere of grave concern over Russia's scientific strides.

That defense matters would get top billing was pointed up a few hours after the session opened. President Eisenhower forwarded to the Senate and House an emergency request for $1,260,000,000 in new funds to speed missile development and expand air defenses.

The supplemental money request, for the current fiscal year that ends June 30, also called for transfer to the missile program

Ragged Game, Maybe But McGuire Content

By DAVE WIBLE

Carolina's 79-63 victory over the William and Mary Indians last night was—from the stands — a very ragged and uninteresting ball game, but from the coaches' end of the Tar Heel bench it was anything but uninteresting.

Frank McGuire, realizing after the opening minutes that it was his contest began substituting — looking over his bench and trying several new combinations. "I was satisfied with the game," McGuire said, "though when we did so much substituting it disrupted the playing of the regulars."

USED BENCH

"The main thing we are working on," McGuire said, "Is helping and working with Kepley (The Tar Heels' 6-9 center who has replaced injured Joe Quigg). We need a big man, and we are trying to give him as much game experience as possible."

McGuire gave most of his bench a good chance to show their stuff in the latter part of the first half, but stuck with his regulars after the intermission. The Indians began to narrow the lead and, as McGuire said, "A ten or twelve point lead can go—just like that."

BELLO BELLOWS

For the fans probably the most excitement came from referee Lou Bello (should be Bellow). The funny man of the ACC whistle tooters kept the crowd laughing with his antics long seen in the ACC. At one point in the game, Tar Heel Tommy Kearns hit a beautiful set shot from about thirty feet out. Bello turned to the sideline and said, "I used to be able to shoot like that."

William and Mary Coach Bill Chambers said that he was ". . . pleased considering . . ." The Indian coach brought out the fact that his team is very young. There are two freshmen and a sophomore on the starting five. "I was very proud of the spirit and drive my boys showed."

Gaither

PARIS, Jan. 7 (AP)—Top american diplomats and military men, charged with shaping U. S. policy in western Europe say they have not seen the controversial Gaither report on U. S. defense capabilities.

Sources close to Air Force Gen. Lauris Norstad, NATO commander in Europe and W. Randolph Burgess, ambassador to NATO, say even they have not seen the report.

Leaks about the report, still under secrecy wraps in Washington, say it warns that the United States is in danger of falling behind the Soviet Union in military strength by 1963. Decisions must be taken this year if the country is to have supremacy in the arms race, the report is said to warn.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the University infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Lula Sue Ballentine, Betty Brown, Lucy Forsyth and Jane Mulvey and Raymond Smith, Charles Moss, James Somers, Milburn Gibbs, Amos Bullard, Roy Goodman, Gerald Sher, William Brigman, Franklin Clontz, Norman Kantor, Boyce Cole, Jerry Oppenheimer, William Sermons, Paul Clark, Richard Fetzer, Donald Tribus, Julian Smith and Robert Foxworth.

'Sergeants' Cast Has Many TV Actors

By DAVE PETERSON

The legitimate theatre, always on the lookout for new talent, has found its young but imposing sister medium, television, a fertile field in all categories. "No Time For Sergeants," comedy hit from New York which comes to Memorial Hall, Friday at 8:30 p. m., has recruited its author and several of its leading players from video.

The young man who was introduced to legitimate theatregoers by this production is Ira Levin, who adapted the play from Mac Hyman's best selling novel.

Levin's first brush with television occurred when he was studying radar at Ft. Monmouth as a private in the Army. He wrote a TV play about the radar school entitled "Notebook Warrior," which was bought by U. S. Steel and was subsequently included in "Adventures in Modern Literature" as an outstanding example of video writing.

The recognition won by this initial effort resulted in his being chosen by the same sponsors to write an abbreviated television version of "No Time For Sergeants." Maurice Evans promptly signed Levin to do a full-length adaptation for the stage.

The "No Time For Sergeants" troupe has many leading television actors in its ranks as well. Two of them in particular came to Evans' attention through their outstanding work on television.

One is Rex Everhart, who plays the harried master sergeant who is stymied by a Georgia plowboy's unending amiability. Everhart has been active on such programs as Studio One, Camera Three, and with Lee Tracy for more than two years on "The Amazing Mr. Malone."

The other television actor lured into the legitimate theatre by "Sergeants" is James Millhollin, who plays the intense psychiatrist who finds his own questions backfire when put to the unaffected Georgia boy. Millhollin has appeared on many daily television shows and notes among his credits the Executioner in Robert Montgomery's "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," 302 in "Darkness at Noon" and "$1,000 Window" with Sir Cedric Harwicke.

It may be that Maurice Evans has an advantage over most of his fellow stage producers when it comes to spotting fresh talent on television because he also produced for NBC-TV the distinguished Hallmark 90 minute dramatic series.

"No Time For Sergeants" plays Chapel Hill under the auspices of The Carolina Playmakers. Tickets for the show are obtainable at 214 Abernethy Hall. Good seats are still available.

PLANE SCENE—Charles Hohman and Tucker Ashworth appear in the plane scene of "No Time For Sergeants," which comes to Memorial Hall Friday at 8:30 p.m.

Parking Problems At UNC

So long as cars outnumber available parking places on the UNC campus, problems will assert themselves for administration officials and students alike.

In a report to the Student Party Monday night, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jeffries pointed out that students now have 2,841 cars registered with South Building. But unrestricted parking areas for students total only 1,078, he said.

All those spaces, incidentally, are on university-owned property. They do not include parking areas on streets adjacent to university property, or areas provided by sorority and fraternity houses.

Still, however, even with those off-campus areas included, parking remains a serious problem at the university—one which officials are attempting to solve through construction of lots for student use and through regulation of student ownership of vehicles on the campus.

We never have believed in discrimination against freshmen and sophomores in determination of who can have a car on campus. It's almost like telling an 18-year-old he can't drive on public highways because he has not yet turned 21.

But that same discrimination, it appears to some, is almost a necessary evil if chaos is to be averted on the campus. For a given area can absorb only so much traffic, and ultimately control to that end must be arbitrary—within limits—if the purpose is to be attained.

What students should convince themselves of is the fact that parking space cannot be made available for every person at UNC. It's all right, in our opinion, to own a car in Chapel Hill, but it's ridiculous to expect a parking space, provided for by the university, within jumping distance of every class building.

The time was when people did not mind walking a couple blocks to town or the store, or anywhere else they wanted to go. Even now they do it in the big cities, where traffic problems in some cases are more acute than those in Chapel Hill.

So, we would suggest that students exercise the old art of walking when it doesn't involve a trek from Durham to Saunders Hall, and leave what little space there is for those who commute or who keep their cars parked in a given space for use only on the weekend or at night.

And, too, we would suggest that the university soon abandon discriminatory regulations against freshmen and sophomores, allowing all students to be considered equally when it comes to apportioning spaces for student parking.

After all, everyone is equal in the eyes of the state—and lower classmen deserve of their taxes the same considerations which are given those who have been in college a year or two longer.

The Undergraduates' Role

Chancellor William B. Aycock, addressing a Faculty Club Luncheon yesterday, declared that increased enrollment here might cause economy-minded authorities to restrict attendance of out-of-state students in the University and to propose that Chapel Hill will be confined to a graduate and professional school.

"Once again," he said, "it is an appealing thought (to economy-minded persons) to provide the first two or four years of study elsewhere and restrict this institution to advanced study."

Well, we're like Chancellor Aycock. We hope that "authorities" —General Assembly or Board of Higher Education or whoever they be— never actively attempt to make a graduate institution out of the University of North Carolina.

Probably the Chancellor said it as well as anybody when he declared: "The blood stream of the university is its undergraduates. They become a significant part of the graduate and professional schools and no university can be strong is there is an artificial barrier which precludes it from training a significant number of undergraduates."

It would, indeed, be tragic for the State of North Carolina to convert the University here into an exclusive graduate institution. Lost would be the rich knowledge gained by thousands of undergraduates from what is among the best faculties in the nation; gone to other states would be the cosmopolitan faculty itself, which contributes no small part to the culture and advancement of North Carolina.

And to where would students turn who seek an education within the bounds of the state where many shall live and die? Long before now Governor Hodges has expounded on the shortage of colleges and universities in North Carolina. He has pressed the establishment of community colleges to absorb a mass overflow of students to state institutions.

Surely, the abolition of UNC as an undergraduate school would only add to the existing shortage of colleges in Tar Heelia. We don't think that the General Assembly would want to be a part to such an action.

As for out-of-state students, they too should be allowed and encouraged to attend UNC. However, we first should make room for North Carolinians who want to attend the University, and add out-of-staters to the student body to give it the diversity which attracts good instructors and makes for a finer institution.

Sorority Welcome

We're glad to see (for more reasons than one) that a new sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma, will be added to the Carolina campus beginning next semester.

It will not only further diversify national sorority chapters on the UNC campus, but will make possible the acceptance of still more Carolina coeds into the sisterhood of sorority life.

As pointed out yesterday, some 60 girls who went through fall rush were denied bids "primarily because there was not enough room for them in the currently existing six national sororities here."

A new chapter will surely absorb some of these who want to become members of a sorority—itself an economic and social contribution to the University.

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Music 1958—Looking Ahead To Good Year

The year 1957 was a pretty good one for music — record sales skyrocketed, classics and jazz prospered side by side, Johnny Mathis brought the ballad back to popularity. Jazz and classical music lost two of their greatest talents in Tatum and Toscanini, but they died not to be forgotten. Giesecking was killed in a plane crash but Emil Gilels came along to step into his illustrious shoes. It was a year of happy and sad events, but a good year.

This year should be even better. Some events which look pretty possible — Leonard Bernstein, on the New York Philharmonic podium, will conduct his original "Concert for Rock and Roll Band," which will be heralded as the work of the century by all. Renata Tebaldi ,disgusted with the Met, will displace Lizzy Miles in New Orleans and make a disk with Bob Scobey called "Renata Rocks"—it will sell two hundred thousand copies.

Louis Armstrong will swallow his pride and record a modern "Duet for Two Trumpets" with Miles Davis. Sinatra will star as Abe Lincoln in Cecil B. DeMille's' adaptation of "Abe Lincoln In Illinois.'" Natalie Wood will play Mrs. Lincoln and sing the hit of the year, a ballad called "You Can't Fool Them All." Dave Brubeck will be sent on a State Department tour of Siam, and be the flop of the year .

Norman Granz will be elected "Man of the Year," for finally putting decent liner notes on his Verve records. Dizzy Gillespie will join the Modern Jazz Quartet and Sonny Rollins in a shaving jamboree on TV, sponsored by Gillette as the "Major Sport Attraction of the Week." Erroll Garner will write three symphonies which Metropoulos will conduct in Boston.

Elvis Presley will shave, compliments of Uncle Sam, and become a jet pilot. Eydie Gorme will be elected "Mother of the Year," barely edging out Marilyn Monroe. June Christy will replace Renata Tebaldi at the Met, and the critics will love her. Some new records we're bound to see— "Music To Pick Your Nose By," "Music To Round Up Cattle By," and "Music To Bore You."

John Foster Dulles will lead the Ferko String Band in the music from "Around the World In 80 Days." The Newport Jazz Festival will be held in a tent with three rings — Dizzy, Louie, and Mahalia Jackson. Nobody will vote in the Playboy Jazz Poll. Jazz Today and Metronome will go out of business, to nobody's disappointment except Charlie Mingus.

More seriously, we hope — a great year for the Duke; a new Menotti opera; a new Armstrong minus Barrett Deems; less Festivals and more music; Nat Hentoff comes back to Downbeat; Dix keeps his band together; the bubbles obscure the view; you all have a ball.

Research Committee Should Again Take Stock Of Hearings' Purposes

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Investigating the present method of selecting the editor of The Daily Tar Heel is a good idea.

But it is beginning to look like it is body politic trying to turn out a system non-politic. The committee investigating editorial selection has gotten off to a fine start. It has written other schools about how they select editors, and has scheduled a series of "hearings" to get the opinions of Carolina students on the matter.

Actually, according to one member of the committee, they are not "hearings," as publiczed, but "interviews."

The chairman of the committee reportedly prefers that the interview" be closed to reporters of The Daily Tar Heel.

The first thing the comittee will have to do when it meets about an hour from when this column is being written is decide whether the student body is entitled to known what is going on inside a meeting of people working out a better plan to slect the student body's editor.

The closed chamber methods have been explained by an expression of the belief that a group meeting would become a babble of cross-talking. This indicates a lack of faith in the chairman, who as a member of the legislature should know how to control a group through parliamentary procedure.

If a committee does not have faith in its ability to control a group, people might start to wonder about its ability to render a qualified report on so important an issue as the selection of an editor.

Another member has been heard saying that Chairman Pat Adams "feels some people would have views they wouldn't want quoted" by a Daily Tar Heel reporter.

Yet one of the students who testified yesterday, said before he was interviewed that "Pat Adams knows my views, I want other people to hear them."

He was told by a comittee-man to appear anyway, so that his voice would be added to the list of those feeling one way or the other.

This member is using the interviews to collect statistics. If the committee goes against what his faction wants in the way of a report, he will release a minority report, and begin a program for which he will need the statistics.

This is how the committee stands, divided before it has enough information to form a qualified opinion, each faction looking for facts that will support its side and brushing over the total picture.

Yesterday it was not certain that there will even be any open hearings, that is hearings where anybody can come and sit and hear who is asking what kind of questions.

The committee had better survey its purpose again. The members may find the committee is working for the student body, and not for their own individual plans.

THE TEST

Will America Die With A Whimper?

By FRANK CROWTHER

If we look back into the history of our world, we encounter some rather amazing facts—facts which expand the aura of gloom and doom now so prevalent in our country.

Our earth has been in existence, supposedly, for some 4 billion years; the dinosaurs turned up and roamed the planet for about 300 million years; man has been around approximately 1 million years; and to Modern Man we assign the last 100,000 years.

During the last 5,000 years, civilization has seen many cultures come and go. The Egyptians lasted for about 3,500 years; Rome in the West for 1,229, Rome in the East endured some 1,123 years; Britain & France have managed to survive now for approximately 1,000 years. Our country, if you give us the years from the first English settlements in America, is entering its 351st year; if we begin with the ratification of our Constitution, we are in our 165th year. The question facing all of us Americans today is whether we will even survive for another 10 or 15 years. This is no mere conjecture or hypothetical situation; it is the most crucial problem ever to confront the American people; it is the supreme moment of decision and endeavor in our short history; it is a frighteningly naked struggle of life and death.

The tragic occurrences of the last three months centering around the Russian achievements in science and our paucity of scientific fire power, both physical and mental, have been of the intensity which may cause Uncle Sam to break down with a coronary occlusion or cerebral thrombosis. We Americans have got to realize, even convince ourselves through resignation if necesstry, that our country can never be the same again. It should be apparent to us now, but the Neanderthals and the Neolithics still prevail in the strata of our society. So, then, it is up to those of us who see the tragic and desperate situtaion to pick our country up; it is our responsibility to plug the holes in the dike; if we are sincere in our belief that America has been, is, and will be the greatest example of living freedom for all men, we are thus bound by an inherent and mandatory obligation to our fathers who first sunk their plows deep into the rich soil of this land. In fact, those of us who believe in ourselves as Americans have no choice—we do not choose what is our natural calling.

Now, the questions arise: where do we begin, what can we do, whom are we to trust and who will assume the leadership that is so direly needed?

In years gone by, many of us have looked to our President and the representatives in government during times of crisis. We now look to them and are filled with apprehension. I certainly do not question the sincerity of President Eisenhower, but sincerity is not leadership. I am reminded of one Nevile Chamberlin, who called for a balanced economy in 1938, gave away Czechoslovakia and was betrayed by Hitler in 1939, and lay dying in a London hospital in 1940 while blankly staring out the window at the city burning around him. Chamberlin, I believe, was a sincere man, in desperately seeking "peace in our time," but he nearly lost the continent to a maniac.

We now have an administration which has continually reiterated that it seeks peace for the world through freedom. But this freedom can never possibly exist without our defending it, with our lives if necessary. Yet, and even our piously cherished dollar bills which we will end up burning for heat or choking on if we insist on balancing the almighty budget in deference to the safety of the free world. As Malcolm P. McNeir, Harvard economist, said yesterday, "in a very real sense" we have already lost the cost war. Addressing the National Dry Goods Association, he went on, "Unless we immediately give right answers to some very crucial national problems, problems that are as crucial as life and death, the matter of department store profits may in the years ahead become of only historical interest." He thinks that we have two alternatives: "—retreat and ultimate surrender or a program of leadership, dedicated to surpassing the Soviets in science."

Another problem which he treated has been the topic of national discussion of late. "I do not think," he said, "we have as yet begun to realize the full picture, partly because our leaders have been afraid to give us the facts." Yes, why are we not given the facts? May I ask how it is possible to insist that we have a democracy when the people are not informed? Isn't this in the basis of democracy? What kind of a miserable administration do we have when they take it upon themselves to measure out the facts as if they were sifting flour for a cake of their own recipe? This is my country to, Mr. President, and I feel that I have the right to know the trouble in which we now find ourselves. I don't want grandiose terms and garbled generalizations, I want to know where we stand, how far behind we actually are, and just exactly what our prospects for recovery are. If you keep this from us, Mr. President, you may go down in history along side the Benedict Arnolds. They may have to record that you betrayed your country while at the helm and decided to protect "the national security" by taking it upon yourself to decide what the country should and should not know while your people were sinking and suffocating in the dismal swamp. The historians may have to record that "America started out as a great experiment and burst to the head of the pack from the very beginning, only to lose wind and drop out of the race. The country ended with a whimper and died."

Alpha Gams Present Pledges In 'Winter Wonderland'

The Carolina Inn Ballroom was transformed into a "Winter Wonderland" Saturday night when the Alpha Gamma Deltas presented their 1957 pledge class at their annual pledge dance.

Snow-covered greenery, accented by glittering snowflakes suspended from the four chandeliers, a massive Christmas tree in the center of one wall and columns studded with silver snowflakes by the banisters set the tempo of the dinner dance.

At the candlelight banquet the tables were centered with red candles garlanded with snowy greenery. To mark the pledges places were presents from their sorority sisters—Alpha Gam charm necklaces.

The highlight of the evening came with the presentation of the fall pledges and their escorts. These couples formed a figure representing a huge snowflake.

First to be presented was Pledge Class President Paddy Wall of Winston-Salem, with Wayne Gaugh of Winston-Salem. The other pledge officers, Vice-President Jimise Skillman of Charlotte, with Nat Crews of Winston-Salem, Secretary Phyllis Wall of Raleigh with Bobby Cunningham of Raleigh and Treasurer Beth Coye of Long Beach, Calif. with Donnie McKee of Newton, were presented next, followed by the remainder of the pledges and their escorts.

Master of ceremonies Ray Jefferies introduced each pledge and her escort ,after which they formed a large snowflake marked by white satin ribbons in the center of the floor with the pledge class president in the center holding white streamers leading to each couple.

Immediately after the formation the pledges, dressed in white gowns and carrying nosegays of red carnations, kneeled while the Alpha Gam sisters sang "Reverie" to them.

The music for the evening of dancing was provided by The Embers of Durham.

Friday night the Alpha Gams entertained their dates at an informal party held at The Castle in Durham.

Yesterday's Answer

Aycock Cites

occupies as "the narrow neck in the administrative hourglass."

"One bulb consists of internal administration and the other bulb is the superstructure," he said. "For the past few years the sands of administrative authority has been flowing from the internal bulb into the bulb of the superstructure. The hour into which this flow continues could be a long one."

Flexibility

One consequence is a limitation of the flexibility of the departments, schools and divisions at Chapel Hill, Aycock said. "The executive head of an institution cannot provide flexibility in excess of that which is entrusted to him. This rigidity can seriously hobble a University."

Final authority for approval of educational policy, which was once in the hands of the Board of Trustees, is gradually being invested in the Board of Higher Education. Chancellor Aycock pointed out to the faculty. This is in accordance with law passed by the General Assembly.

The situation is one which makes it imperative that the administration and faculty at Chapel Hill must spend "considerable time and effort to secure ultimate decisions."

Aycock stated: "In order for those of us who represent you in administration to persent your needs more effectively it is essential that issues which can be resolved internally to be resolved close to the source. Further, it will allow us time to be prepared to resist further artifical barriers which might be erected for us."

Enrollments

To illustrate kinds of barriers which might be anticipated, Aycock stated that impending increased enrollments might cause economy-minded authorities to restrict attendance of out-of-state students in the University and to propose that Chapel Hill will be confined to a graduate and professional school.

"A representative student body is essential to the enrichment of the lives of all students and it is important in our efforts to attract and keep a cosmopolitan faculty," said Aycock.

Of a possible threat to the undergraduate schools, he said, "The blood stream of the University is its undergraduates. They become a significant part of the graduate and professional schools and no University can be strong if there is an artifical barrier which precludes it from training a significant number of undergraduates."

Chancellor Aycock began his address by referring to such artifical boundaries as tariff barriers which restrain free trade between states and world-wide economic efforts to remove international economics obstacles to free flow of goods. He also mentioned removal of barriers which paved the way for pooling resources in atomic energy development.

"Recently we have come to realize that we have been unrealistic in erecting artifical limits around scientific knowledge," he said. "We now recall that our leading scientists tried to impress on us that scientific knowledge, like all knowledge—apart from a few industrial secrets—has no boundaries. In retrospect we see that we have pursued a policy of trying to keep secret, that which is already known by others."

Aycock added: "Moreover, temporarily, at least, we are the losers in the secrecy contest."

An important function of education, said Chancellor Aycock, is "to point out artificial barriers and instill in students a determination to eliminate existing ones and to prevent to creation of new ones."

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan 7—(AP)— Federalized Arkansas Nationalized Guardsmen are on duty at integrated Central High School in the datyime only as of today, another move relaxing the military surveillance at the school.

Guardsmen left Central High at 5 p.m. yesterday and will no longer serve at night, weekends or holidays on the campus. They will be at the school between 7 a.m. and 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays.

The decision was reached by the Arkansas Military District after discussions with authorities at Washington and officials of the Little Rock School District, a spokesman said.

Meanwhile, eight of the nine Negro students attending Central showed up for class as usual.

The absentee is Minnie Jean Brown, still under indefinite suspension for an incident during which she overturned food on two white students in the school cafeteria.

Investigations

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7—(AP)— New era matters from missiles to tranquilizers will be the target of Congressional inquiries this year.

But more ordinary questions like taxes and the cost of a home mortgage aren't going to be overlooked either.

A survey of House and Senate committees today showed dozens of investigations are planned for the new session of Congress which opened today.

Some of the inquiries may never come about. But others are sure to take their place as circumstances demand. The force of politics, seldom absent, will become more pronounced as the legislators get closer to the November elections.

Knows Nothing

LONDON, Jan. 7—(AP)—The official Soviet news agency Tass said today it knew nothing of the launching of a rocket into space with a man aboard.

Moscow radio quoted the deputy director of Tass as saying it was "completely incomprehensible" to him how western news agencies had obtained such a report.

Snow & Ice Blanket Most Of North Carolina

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Old Man Winter continued to buff his icy breath across North Carolina today in the wake of rain, sleet and snow that blanketed the state yesterday.

The cold snap, which came in with the New Year, needed only precipitation Monday night to develop into sleet and snow that left most roads and highways hazardous.

The slick roads resulted in a rash of traffic accidents, including four separate school bus accidents, none serious. Many counties closed their schools or cut yesterday's sessions short.

Since the start of the cold wave, at least two deaths in the state have been attributed to the weather, but the Weather Man says there is no immediate relief in sight.

Tar Heels in the piedmont section awoke to find rain and sleet falling yesterday. This turned into a heavy snowfall about 8:30 or 9 a. m. which lasted several hours. Among cities reporting snow were Charlotte, Concord, Salisbury, High Point, Winston-Salem and Greensboro.

Snow also was reported in the central and eastern sections. Raleigh, Wilson, Rocky Mount and Elizabeth City all repotred snowfalls.

The Weather Bureau had warned of a heavy snowfall and predicted from two to five inches.

Winston-Salem and Asheville each reported a trace, Charlotte three-eighth's of an inch, and Salisbury and Greensboro had about one inch, as did Raleigh.

The prediction for today was for colder and clearing skies. The expected lows were about in the mountains, 15 to 17 in the piedmont and about 20 on the coast.

There were three minor school bus accidents in Alamance County and one in Cleveland County at Lawndale. It was here that a school bus carrying 25 students skidded and collided with a cotton truck. Ten of the students received minor injuries, mostly bruises and scratches.

In Alamance County a school bus carrying 67 students en route to the Alexander Wilson School near Swepsonville skidded off the road and down a 15-foot embankment. The driver, Calvin Coble, 16 climbed out a window and opened an emergency door through which the children climbed to safety.

Betty Jo Wright of Rt. 1, Graham received first aid treatment for a jaw injury. The other children were shaken up.

The other bus accidents in the county saw one bus skid into a car and another bus slip into a ditch.

Among the counties closing their schools yesterday were Cabarrus, Forsyth and Alamance. One school in Cleveland County was closed.

Wake and Durham counties were among those counties closing their schools early yesterday because of the weather.

Tar Heels Overpower Scrappy William And Mary 79-63

Kearns Top Scorer; Brennan Buckets 20

By BILL KING

William and Mary's Indians made the nation's third ranked basketball team work for the distinction last night as the Tar Heel's had a suprisingly tough time downing the scrappy Williamsburg contingents, 79-63 before an almost full house in Woollen Gym.

The Tar Heels were never hard put for a lead, but the fighting injuns pow wowed at half time and came back to put up a real good battle before succumbing late to the superior Carolina forces.

Tenth Win

Carolina, in winning its tenth game in eleven starts and its 47th in the last 48 games, could never get a second half attack going that would make the Indians bury the hatchets as they had to battle off a late William and Mary threat to insure the victory.

The Tar Heels carried a 38-22 lead into the second half and that margin stood up, give or take a few points, for a little while.

At 12:29, Carolina held a 51-37 advantage, but before the McGuiremen could hit the 60 point mark with 7:04 left, the Indians had run up their point total to 47.

William and Mary continued to scrap the Tar Heel's first unit, and at one point with 4:19 to go, W&M pulled to within ten points, 66-56.

Pete Brennan ,who was second high scorer with 20 points, then tapped in two points, and Tommy Kearns, who led the scoring with 23, was good with a layup to make it 70-56 and the visitors had seen their best minutes.

Pull Away

For the final three minutes, the Tar Heels were able to pull away with little trouble as Kearns hit six points in that period.

Third high man for the Tar Heels was number one replacement, Harvey Salz who chipped in 16 points, his personal high for the season. Following Salz were Lee Shaffer with 10, Dick Kepley with 6 and Bob Cunningham and John Crotty had two each.

The Tar Heels attempted 79 shots from the floor and hit 29 for a 39.2 percentage. William and Mary hit 21 of 71 for a 29.5 mark. From the free throw line, Carolina made 21 of 31 and 67.7; the Indians were 21 for 29 and 72.4. The Tar Heels hauled in 65 rebounds, while the Indians had 47.

Carolina played it man to man all the way and did an adequate job of keeping the Injuns off balance. William and Mary switched to a zone after intermission and used it as its basic defense after that.

The First Half

The Tar Heels weren't long setting up a comfortable halftime margin. Leading 8-6 after 5:04 of that period, Carolina quickly dropped in 12 points before the Indians could scare up another field goal. Don Engelken's two free throws and a jumper by Injun Roy Lange broke the scoring draught at 11:20 and made the score read 20-10.

The Tar Heels promptly got buckets by Kepley, Brennan and Kepley again to make it 26-10 but the visitors rallied with five quickies to close the gap to 26-15 with 7:59 left, and by that time, ten Tar Heels had seen action.

With Kepley, Kearns, Harvey Salz, Roy Searcy and Ray Stanley on the floor for Carolina ,the Indians started a little uprising toward the end of the half and trailed only 32-22 with 1:35 remaining. But two long and beautiful set shots by Kearns and a layup by Crotty closed the scoring before intermission with the Tar Heels ahead, 38-22.

Carolina hit 44.4 of its shots from the floor in th first half. William and Mary had 20.6 Carolina out-rebounded 35-17.

Pete Leads

GREENSBORO, Jan. 7 —(AP)— Carolina's Pete Brennan for the third straight week leads Atlantic Coast Conference basketball scorers and the handsome forward is also stealing the show from the conference's bigger men in rebounding.

According to latest ACC Service Bureau figures, Brennan not only tops the conference in scoring with an average of 20.7, but also leads in rebounding with an average of 12.1 recoveries per contest. He boosted both averages with a 32-point, 22-rebound performance against Wake Forest last Saturday night.

Brennan, proving himself to be no "gunner," has a shooting average of 47.4 per cent and is hitting 71.6 per cent at the foul line. Most of his points are scored off a soft one-handed jump shot.

Coach Sam Barnes is hopeful that his team will be able to rebound from the 32-0 pasting it took at the hands of Maryland's conference champions.

Same Lineup

The Tar Heels will probably start about the same lineup against the Wolfpack as they did against Maryland. If this is the case, Curt Champlin, Henry Ryhne, and Perrin Henderson will handle the lightest weight divistons. Captain Kenney Hoke will probably start at 157 with David Atkinson at 167.

For State Coach Al Crawford, this will be the second conference meet for his team. Crawford will be forced to start a young team since he has only returning lettermen.

Frosh in Prelim

Prior to the varsity match at 7:00 o'clock, the Carolina freshman wrestling team will take on the Wolfpack yearlings.

The Tar Babies will be after third victory in a row since the opening loss to Virginia. The team was scheduled to have wrestled Pheiffer yesterday, but that match was cancelled and rescheduled for February 7.

Coach Jim Carse is planning to send either Frank London or Frank Walker into the 123 pound match. Chip Woodrum and Peter Marks will be at 130 and 137 respectively. Phil Davis will start at 147 followed by David Turnbull in the 157 pound devision.

The heavier weigh classes will be manned by Frank Elkins at 167, John Matney at 177, and Gorden Hurley at heavyweight.

Johnny Ray Operation

NEW YORK, Jan. 7—(AP)— A major ear operation was performed today on singer Johnny Ray, deaf since childhood.

Mt. Sinai Hospital officials said he is resting comfortably and that the effectiveness of the surgery will be known in three days. A spokesman said that hearing is restored in about 80 per cent of such cases.

The operation was described as "Fenestration"—the making of a new opening within the left ear to replace a nonfunctioning natural channel.

Ray, who will be 31 next Friday, underwent a different type of ear operation several months ago in an unsuccessful effort to restore hearing.

Freshmen Whip Elon JV's, 97-48

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina Tar Babies pushed their season slate to 6-1 last night by completely routing hapless Elon 97-48.

The frosh piled up a 51-30 halftime lead and coasted home with a 53 point spread at the final horn. Doug Moe and Hugh Donahue tied for high-scoring honors, each with 23. Play-maker Lou Brown followed with 18.

TURNING POINT

The turning point of the contest came when Elon, on outside shooting, managed to pull within two at 21-19 midway in the first stanza. Coach Ken Rosemond called time out. The yearlings roared back onto the floor and poured in 30 points for the rest of the half while Elon cuold get but 11.

The frosh outscored Elon 46-18 in the last half. Outstanding in the Tar Babies' sixth win of the current season was the outside shooting and play-making of Brown, the hook shots and tremendous rebounding of Donahue, and the driving layups and jump shots of Moe.

STRONG DEFENSE

Carolina also demonstrated a strong defense, stealing the ball on many occasions and making it virtually impossible for the Christians to work the ball into the middle.

Carolina's fast-break worked well in spots. Brown made several circus passes to Moe which had the crowd in a frenzy. Donahue contributed some fantastic hook-shots and tap-ins.

THE SCORING

Carolina — Moe 23; Donahue 23; Brown 18; Beck 9; Longnecker 6; Hart 4; Hollers 4; Shuford 3; Matthews; Dunlap 2; Deaton 2; Hickey.

Elon — Turner 11; Burke 10, Snyder 8; Clark 7; Robertson 6; Scoggins 2; Mauldin 2; Myers 1; Leonard 1; Smith.

The In-Service Training Program scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 14, has been postponed. The programs are sponsored by the dean of women's office.

MILWAUKEE FIRST

'56-57 UNC Cagers 2nd In Team Of Year Vote

Fred Haney's hustling Braves, who brought major league baseball's first world championship to Milwaukee, were overwhelmingly acclaimed the Team-of-The-Year today in the annual Associated Press year-end poll of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Winners over the New York Yankees after seven pulsating world series games, the Braves collected 133 first place votes from among the 211 participants.

Not overlooked, but well out of the running, were Carolina's college basketball titleholders, the Boston Celtics, National Basketball Assn. powerhouse and Auburn's national collegiate football champs.

Milwaukee received 508 points on a basis of three points for first place, two for second and one for third. The Tar Heels gathered 205 points and 28 first place votes, the Celtics 146 points and 18 firsts and Auburn 137 points and 13 for the top position.

Following the Plainsmen in point-total order were Ohio State's football Buckeyes; the Cleveland Browns of the National Football League; the Montreal Canadians, Stanley Cup playoff winners in the National Hockey League and the Michigan State football team.

Carolina ran through the 1956-1957 basketball campaign without a setback, piling up 32 consecutive triumphs. In the post-season NCAA title competition the Tar Heels overcame Kansas and Wilt (The Stile) Chamberlain in a triple-overtime thriller.

The Celtics whipped the stubborn St. Louis Hawks for the NBA crown after finishing on top in the Eastern Division of the pro loop.

Auburn was only one of two major schools which emerged from the past football season with an unblemished record. Arizona State was the other.

Tar Heels Meet Virginia In Woollen Tonight

CCUN To Try Organizing Other Groups

Members of the UNC chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations decided to attempt organizing other CCUN chapters over the state after attending a UN Seminar in York in November, 1957..

During the seminar, UNC students became impressed that CCUN was important enough to warrant a special project on the part of the local CCUN to try establishing other chapters on North Carolina campuses.

The UNC chapter will launch its project by holding a conference here this weekend for representatives from North Carolina colleges.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Visit

The highlight of the conference will be the visit of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt on Sunday. Mrs. Roosevelt will talk informally to delegates attending the conference Sunday afternoon from 3 to 3:30 in Roland Parker I and II.

Mrs. Roosevelt will give a public address Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall. This speech will be covered by WUNC radio and television.

During the conference, a business meeting will be held to elect a Continuation Committee. This committee will coordinate CCUN activities in North Carolina chapters.

Bill Sugg, chairman of the local CCUN, said in letters inviting representatives of other colleges to the conference that an understanding of the United Nations, promoted by CCUN, is vital to future leaders of the country, since the United Nations is the organization that can achieve world peace.

Flexibility

A major factor in favor of the establishment of CCUN chapters is the flexibility of the organization. A college may affiliate with CCUN in three ways: independently, as an affiliate CCUN committee or as an affiliate organization.

The independent CCUN group is organized as a separate campus body. It is a United Nations club which devotes its entire program to education on the United Nations and a development of international understanding.

The affiliate CCUN committee is established as a functioning committee of an already existing organization on a campus. The UNC CCUN is a chapter of this type, since it's affiliated with the Seminar Committee of the YMCA-YWCA.

The affiliated organization is an established campus group which has decided to devote a good part of its program to the United Nations.

GM SLATE

The following activities are scheduled for Graham Memorial today: Student Council, 7-11 p. m., Grail Room; Rules Committee, 4-5 p. m., Roland Parker I; SP Caucus, 7-7:30 p. m., Roland Parker I, Traffic Council, 4-6 p. m., Woodhouse Conference Room; UP Caucus, 6:30-7:30 p. m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Women's Honor Council, 6:45-10 p. m., Council Room.

ACC's Top Three Scores To Tangle

By BILL KING

Virginia's Cavaliers come to town tonight as the second link in a chain of three games for the Carolina Tar Heels this week. Woollen Gym tipoff time is set for 8 o'clock following a preliminary game between the Carolina frosh and Davidson JV's.

The Tar Heels will put a 10-1 overall record and a 3-0 conference mark on the line against the Old Dominion five. The Cavaliers have 6-4 record on the season and sport a 3-1 slate in conference competition.

Maryland Saturday

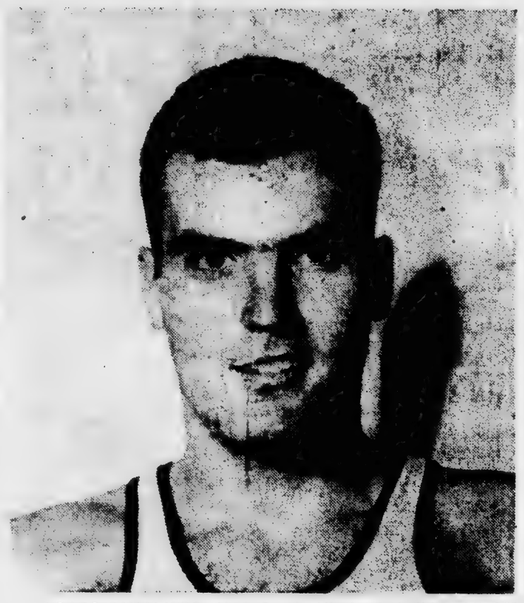
This is the final game for the Tar Heels before they encounter the tough Maryland Terps in College Park, Md. this weekend in a 14,500 sellout, largest crowd ever to gather in the Terp's new indoor stadium.

Oddly enough, these two clubs go into the game holding ACC victories over the same opponents. Clemson, South Carolina and Wake Forest. Virginia, however, has lost to N. C. State, a team which the Tar Heels beat for the Dixie Classic championship. The Tar Heels also beat Duke in the Classic.

Carolina's last outing was a 79-63 victory over a scrappy William and Mary team in Woollen Gym Tuesday night. The Cavaliers lost, 73-69 to the Indians. Virginia has also beaten Washington and Lee, Pennsylvania and Va. Tech, while losing to Richmond and Lasalle in addition to State and W & M.

Top 3 Scorers

The contest will throw the three top scorers in the ACC together. Tar Heel Pete Brennan has a 20.7 average to lead the league. Virgina's Herb Busch is second with an even 18 point average and Carolina guard Tommy Kearns is third at 17. Virginia also has forward John Siewers (12.0) and guard Dick Stobbs (11.0) in the top 20 scorers. Carolina's Lee Shaffer is ninth in the conference at 13.3.



The Tar Heel attack will be paced by Brennan and Kearns. Both hit the 20 point mark against William and Mary, Kearns with 23 and Brennan with 20. Sophomore forward Lee Shaffer, senior guard Bob Cunningham and sophomore center Dick Kepley wil probably round out the starting lineup for the Chapel Hillians.

Salz Should Play

Sophomore guard Harvey Salz is also expected to see a lot of action. The Brooklyn native hit 16 points against William and Mary and had been the number one replacement all season.

For Virginia, it will probably be Busch, Stobbs, Siewers, Paul Adkins and Bill Nelligan.

On hand for the contest will be the 1917 Carolina team which defeated Virginia. Eleven of the 14 members of that team have gathered in Chapel Hill for a two-day reunion.

LEADS CAVALIERS—Herb Busch, Virginia's hulking 6-7, 240-lb. center will lead his club against the Carolina Tar Heels in Woollen Gym tonight. Busch's 18 point average is second to Pete Brennan in the ACC.

Legislature Sets Meet Tonight

The Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall and will present Freshman Merit Certificates to 115 sophomores.

There are no bills left over from the last session of legislature. Legislature Speaker Furtado said probably some bills would be introduced.

Chairman of the Publications Board Harold O'Tuel will make a report concerning the financial aspects of the student publications.

The report is not in any way connected with the Newspaper Research Committee.

The Legislature meeting is open to the public, and Speaker Furtado urges any interested students to attend.

African Art Featured At Person Hall

Person Hall Art Gallery is showing a distinguished collection of ancient African art through the month of January.

The extensive variety of work includes masks, figures, fetishes and objects of everyday use in addition to pieces made for ceremonial use.

African art had a considerable influence on certain phases of early 20th century modern art and has continued to attract growing interest from artists and art-conscious laymen alike, while given extended study of archaeologists and ethnologists.

The ancient art producing areas are located at the west central coastal regions of Africa, covering from the French Sudan to the Belgian Congo.

The collection is exhibited through the courtesy of the D'Arcy Galleries of New York.

Sorority Will Colonize Its 86th Chapter Here

Kappa Kappa Gamma, the national sorority which will begin organizing here in February, has 85 active chapters in the United States and Canada.

An announcement Tuesday from from Miss Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, dean of women, reported that the national sorority had accepted a bid from the University to establish the seventh sorority here.

In a letter from Mrs Frank H. Alexander, director of Kappa Kappa Gamma chapters in this area, yesterday, she said the sorority was looking forward to a chapter at UNC.

In commenting on the sorority, she said Kappa Kappa Gamma is interested in the advancement of education for women and the provision of educational opportunities for deserving women.

The sorority has contributed over a half million dollars in scholarships, she said. The national philanthropy of Kappa Kappa Gamma is the rehabilitation of the physically and mentally handicapped.

Mrs. Alexander said she would be in Chapel Hill soon in making arrangements for the colonization of the sorority.

Colonization is the preliminary stop to the actual installation of the sorority on a college campus.

The closest chapter of Kappa Kappa Gamma to UNC is one at Duke University.

Many of the other chapters are concentrated in Southern colleges and universities.

Refugee Problem Holds Key In Relaxing Tensions Of Area

By CURTIS GANS

That the conflict between the major powers to the world "constitutes the major source of regional conflict" in the middle east was asserted by Israeli Ambassador to the U.S. and U.N. delegate Abba Eban, in the second Carolina Forum of the year in Hill Hall last night.

Eban said that the major cause of the present Arab-Israeli crisis was the refugee problem. He asserted that the Arabs are responsible for this dilemma and that the Arab nations could clear the situation up if they wanted to.

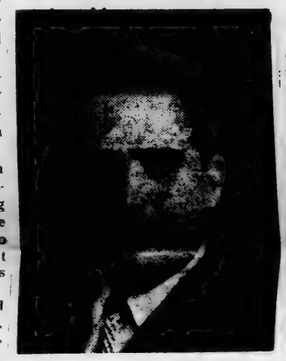
Eban added that he felt that the Arab nation did not want to resolve the conflict or else it would have been resolved long ago. Refusal to absorb the refugees, he felt, is a major facet of the conflict.

Israel and the other nations of the world would be glad to co-operate if integration was made along ethnic lines. He cited as evidence that the refugees of World War II had been integrated along these lines, but that it was Arab refusal to negotiate on these terms that was causing the current bottleneck.

Eban said that he could not conceive of any territorial problem from Israel's side, when Israel possessed only 8,000 square miles of territory as compared to 4,000,000 possessed by the Arab nations.

Eban pointed with pride to the Israeli "accomplishment" in the first decade of its existence. He said that this was a spiritual and historical renascence.

The fact that Israel was a democracy in an area currently noted for despotism, military dictatorships, and feudalism, was an especially noteworthy feature.



He said that certain clarification of non-aggression and anti-aggression treaties currently obtaining between the U. S. and the Middle East was necessary in order to avoid the miscalculations that were responsible for previous wars.

In answering a question posed by a member of the audience, Eban said that the unilateral state of war that existed between Egypt and Israel prior to the Israeli march across the Sinai Peninsula was responsible for that action.

He assailed Egyptian dictator Gamal Abdel Nasser fer putting Israel in this position and denying to the countries of the west the free use of the seas in the nationalization of the Suez Canal.

In concluding his speech, he noted the paradox between the unequalled tension in the Middle East, and the limitless opportunities that still remain.

Art Sobel Resigns Post On Elections Board

ART SOBEL

By VIRGINIA SANDIDGE

Art Sobel, Elections Board chairman, has resigned his position effective immediately, Student Body President Sonny Evans disclosed today.

Sobel said that "other commitments" prohibited his continuing in the student government post during the next semester.

In making the announcement, Evans said interviews will be held daily between 2 and 5 p.m. until a replacement is found for Sobel to head the elections board.

A statement by Sobel read: "I won't have the time next semester that the job requires, because I have other commitments. I appreciate Sonny's letting me serve and would like to thank the members of my committee for the job they did."

Evans, citing Sobel's long experience with the board, said student government "is very sorry" about the chairman's decision to resign.

". . . His four years' experience and the outstanding job that he did for the past year make him a very qualified individual," Evans said.

Sobel's resignation continued the fate of the University's past five elections board chairmen. All have resigned before termination of their prescribed tenures of office.

The elections board conducts all elections on the campus and sees that they are properly carried out. Its next responsibility lies in administration of spring elections.

Daily Tar Heel Research Group Hears Views

Six students attended and gave their views at the first of two open hearings of the Newspaper Research Committee held Tuesday.

Suggestions were given for selection of the editor, relationship between the paper and the journalism school, administration, and student government, the financial structure of the paper, responsibilities of the various newspaper department heads, and the question of salaries for any and all members of the staff.

The next open hearing will be held Monday, Jan. 13, in Roland Parker II. Committee Chairman Pat Adams invited all people who have views on these matters to come. The meeting will be open to reporters.

Appearing before the committee yesterday were: Barry Winston, Walt Schruntek, Charlie Sloan, Pebley Barrow, Joel Fleischman and Paul Rule.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday inculded:

Misses Emily Stafford, Nancy Carter, Lucy Forsyth, Linda Watkins, Lelia Midgette and Jane Mulvey and Charles Moss, Roy Goodman, Paul Clark.

'Sergeants' Star, Charles Hohman Helped Make Army Theatre History

By DAVE PETERSON

Charles Hohman, who plays the role of Will Stockdale in "No Time For Sergeants" in Memorial Hall, Friday at 8:30, helped make theatrical Army history with Maurice Evans during World War II.

Drafted in 1942, he shipped to Hawaii and while on a troopship won a quiz contest which singled him out to Evans, then a captain enroute to the Pacific island to form a G. I. Entertainment Section.

After basic and jungle training Hohman was transferred to the Evans unit and was cast in a leading role in "Boy Meet Girl." He subsequently appeared in "Richard II," "Macbeth" with Evans and Judith Anderson, "Brother Rat" and "Personal Appearance."

An active participant on the picturesque Goldenrod Showboat on the Mississippi, he appeared in a series of "old style" melodramas.

After the war he opened a summer theatre in St. Louis, and most recently was in the advertising business in his hometown until called upon by Evans to take over the role of Will in "Sergeants." He has played the role on Broadway for over a year.

A few choice seats are still available for the professional production. They may be obtained from the Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved at $2.20, $3.30 and $4.40.

Doppler Data Digitizer, Beer Bearers, Too

Will Centrifugal Bumble-Puppy Team Be Organized At UNC?

By WHIT WHITFIELD

As CBPL President, Louis Shirkey, said: "Bumble-Puppy is the greatest thing since gold fish swallowing, and it tastes better." In a few words, this is the most apt description of the new game which is taking the nation by storm.

Centrifugal Bumble-Puppy is beginnning to threaten baseball as the national pastime. It began a few months ago at the University of Connecticut as a rather whimsical game, but since that time has swept through 35 high schools and prep schools as well as some 65 colleges throughout the nation.

First Bumble-Puppy

Its originator, Louis Iritsky, and Mark Hawthrone, Managing Editor of the Conn. Daily Campus recognized its potential, and immediately set up the National Centrifugal Bumble-Puppy League, with headquarters at Storrs, Conn.

Iritsky, of course, was elected the first president. University of Conn. President, Dr. A. N. Jorgenson was made an honorary left puppy on the Conn. first team.

Since that time., Sports Illustrated, NBC's Monitor (of the going places and doing things fame), The Herald Tribune radio station WOR (N. Y.), Mad, Humbug, and dozens of college humor mags and newspapers have spread its fame.

Among the schools which have organized teams are: Oregon, Illinois, Smith, Cornell, Syracuse, Penn, Dook, Michigan, Columbia, Dartmouth, Rutgers, Temple, ad infinitum.

The rules of the game are, briefly as follows: The game is played by two teams, composed of a right bumble, left bumble, right puppy, left puppy, center centrifugal, alternate center centrifugal, stinger (whose function has not as yet been determined), doppler data drigitizer (scorer), and one or more beer-bearers, depending upon the length of the game, the heat and humidity at game time, and the coach's disposition.

In high schools and blue nose institutions, this position is known as water carrier.

Mad! Mad! Mad!

The players of both teams stand around a cylindrical centrifugal bumble-puppy machine, which may be anywhere from nine to 457 feet high, powered by solar engery and heel-toe action. The doppler data digitizer of the home team throws an eight-inch ball into the top of the machine.

If it does not reappear, the game is forfeited. If it does reappear out of one of the nine holes on the side of the machine, the game is started.

The ball must be caught by one of the players and run past one of the goal or feather-lines, which are placed on the perimeter of the playing field, 49 feet, three inches from the machine.

Passing is permitted with the game ball, girls, (in the guise of cheerleaders), or interested spectators. Passing out is tolerated for those who have low tolerance levels and alcoholics.

Obstacles such as barbed wire, water holes, and snake pits may be added to lend an aura of excitement and terror. The CBPL Obstacle Committee has ruled that this is optional however, so cowards may play also without fear.

A score is called a "feather." Only three feathers may be made per inning, unless the home team does not pass "Go" or collect $200.

Flip Flap Flap

The playing field is divided into five quadrants, center flap, left and right flap, and far flap. The fifth quadrant has not been named due to its location which has not as yet been determined.

The beer-cooler is located in the center flap, therefore making it the most popular point of reference.

Games are usually played until the beer runs out. It might be pointed out that beer need not be used. Gin, vodka, or champagne might be desired at the wealthier schools, whereas cokes or water substituted at state supported schools.

Before the same starts, it might be wise to check with local ABC officials. Members schools who presist in using non tax paid alcohol will be put on probation and will be denied the privilege of participating in post-seasonal bowl games and or CBPL playoffs.

In addition to the regular squad, there may also be a team manager and one or more scoffers. Usually there is a right and left scoffer who believe that the game cannot be played. Despite the negative attitude of the scoffer, he is a valuable member of the team.

Uniforms are left up to the discretion of the individual team, but are mandatory. Teams may be mixed or otherwise, but it is preferable that they be of one sex. (Mixed teams are more fun, but they have a tendency to slow down the game.)

Results of league games should be sent to Conference offices for final tabulation. As yet, these conference offices have not been staffed or setup. However, don't be dismayed by this trivial matter.

Set up your squad immediately so as to be eligible for the post season classics. Keep your eye on the sports section for further developments on the CBPL, the very latest in sports.

A Fable In Physical Ed

Once upon a time there was a short, rather frail young man of teenage years who went away to get a college education. When he got to Church Mound, he learned he was required to take physical education.

But that's all right, he said, because development of the mind should be complemented by development of the body. Surely one is as important as the other, because healthy mind and healthy body go hand in hand.

He found his way to the Booketeria and purchased what texts were required in his several courses. They were small books, not too large to carry, and he tucked them under his arm and headed back to Lewis Dormitory where he would spend the next two semesters.

The he reported for his physical education class. He showed his basket card, was given a variety of proper clothing and located a locked for his possessions. Now all he had to do was slip into the physical education togs.

And so, almost ready to go upstairs, our short, rather frail young man approached the finale of his change from street to PE clothing. He held up a pair of sweat pants full length just before stepping in, when he discovered it was all he could do to see over the top.

Please, he said to the basket man, could I have a smaller pair of sweat pants. My name is Daffer, not Shaffer and these are just a mite too long. They hang over my feet like blubber on a fat man.

We're sorry, came the answer. But we just don't have any sweat pants any shorter than those. You're lucky to get what you did.

Well, conjectured our short, rather frail young man, do they expect the best performance, to say nothing of comfort, when such togs as these are worn by such people as me? Why, I bet that even those big athletes are given clothes that fit.

Too, he thought how the university made available proper texts for other required courses. Shouldn't the policy of making available proper materials for required courses obtain in all areas of the college?

When he got upstairs, there was a tall, rather hefty young man with sweat pants halfway up his tibia. Well, thought our short, rather frail young man, I guess there just weren't any more.

Ike's Request Inadequate

President Eisenhower's request for an additional $1.2 billion for defense spending this year points out the inadequacies of what has been rumored as his program for 1958-59.

Ike asked the returning Congress Tuesday for $1,260,000,000 to develop space weapons, "beef up the Strategic Air Command and hire more scientists" this fiscal year, boosting the overall defense budget to $38.9 billion.

And next year? One source said Ike's request for defense will approximate $40 billion, or just $2.3 billion above the initial request for fiscal 1957-58. And that amount is a starter on our race to catch up with the Russians.

The total inadequacy of the President's supposed request for the coming year is attested to by two recent, privately-financed studies of Russian technological advancement while the United States has sat on its haunches living on her reputation.

First came the Gaither Report, revealing the stark fact that American military strength from today on will be far outreached by the productive arm of Russian technology. It proposed billions and billions to close the ever-widening gap of military strength.

Then there was the Rockefeller Report, suggesting that current comparison of Russian and American technology demands minimum increase of defense expenditure by the United States next year of a total $3 billion. That was the minimum.

Thus we see that programs to be presented by the federal government fall far short of the goal cited by private industry if the United States is ever to regain its position as a world leader and even survive under the threat of Red dominance.

Somehow, the President must come to realize that Russian technology is no longer a laughing matter, and demands the overburdening of American bodies and taxes before the nation succumbs to a bright spot in the pages of history.

Two Suggestions For City Officers

Note to City of Chapel Hill:

Item I: Please mark lanes at intersection of East Franklin and Henderson Streets, where new "turn right" sign has been installed to allow traffic moving West on Franklin to enter Henderson St., despite the traffic light.

New light works beautifully, but absence of properly-marked lanes makes it virtually useless. Vehicles stopped for the red light, continuing westward direction on Franklin, prohibit flow of traffic onto Henderson Street.

Item II: Please find some money in a forthcoming budget to pave north side of Cameron Avenue in westerly direction from its intersection with Columbia Street. Costs could be partly assessed against adjacent property owners.

The reason is simple. Recently we grasped an elderly man's arm as he began to fall in slippery mud on the unpaved walkway.

Reds' Space Man

It now turns out that Russia's launching of a "manned" satellite was little more than a science fiction story broadcast over Red radio.

That, at least, is the opinion of some sources who noted that on the day of the alleged launching, a Russian radio produced a make-believe interview with a man flying through space in a satellite

That's nothing. Orson Welles' produced a similar scare 20 years ago, except back then he had men from outer space landing in their ships on earth. We're not sure which is more frightening.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Master Minds, Coffee Lovers At Odds Again

By GAIL GODWIN

Evidently, some pre-school mentalities have slipped into our midst. I wonder if all universities have them. They look just like ordinary people, but they act on kindergarten impulses.

The latest joy of these pre-school pests is filling up sugar bowls with salt in all the campus restaurants.

To be sure, they can gleefully anticipate the results in their (small) minds. Along comes a sleepy, grouchy, cold and un-awake student into the cafeteria. He has abandoned the warmth and security of his sheets and blankets and braved the ten degree weather for one reason.

That reason is a cup of coffee.

One cup of coffee, which will transform an irate, shaky robot into a human being; which will awaken a dull mind in time for the eight o'clock quiz; which will bring a momentary satisfaction into the life of the coffee fiend.

With trembling hands he reaches for the sugar and carefully measures it into his mug of salvation. With the gentleness of a true connisseur he lifts the steaming cup to his lips.

Ugg! His morning is spoiled, his day is ruined, his mouth is embittered with . . . salt!

Oh, undoubtedly, this is real mirth for the preschool pest. Silently and cautiously he goes about his sabotage. He may carry his own personal salt carton, or he may just use the salt shaker that comes with the table.

Regardless of the source, salt is salt. The pest has had his practical joke, and the coffee drinker is poisoned.

However, he who laughs last laughs best. There is a counter-attack being launched which is putting iodine in the pest's soda pop bottles. Won't he be surprised?

The writer of this column wishes to acknowledge an early greeting card sent to her by an anonymous admirer. The art work was rather simple, but it definitely showed a remarkable resemblance to "Giddy" Godwin as the envelope was addressed.

Thomas Ciappa, of Oswego, N. Y., wondered if it wouldn't be smart to have his brakes relined. He decided definitely it would be when his car kept right on going through the door of the brake-testing station. Damage, $300.

It was bound to happen sooner or later, of course, and it did — to Melvin Carter, of Kinlock, Mo. Trying eagerly to hitchhike a ride, Melvin edged a bit too close to traffic and a passing car whacked his outstretched thumb so hard he had to have it treated. He eventually took a bus.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Ike Nixes Treaty; Puts Off Peace

By CURTIS GANS

The New Year brings new happenings.

President Eisenhower a few days ago drafted a reply to the Soviet Union saying that the U. S. would refuse to sign a non-aggression pact, until the U. S. was sure of Russian good faith in matters of less far reaching importance.

In doing this, the President of the United States had made it clear to the world that he will not grab at every possibility of achieving peace. He has further made it clear, by his conditions under which such a treaty could be agreed upon by the U. S., that there will be an exceedingly long time before any constructive attempt for peace will be successfully tried.

The President of the United States by his recent action has posed a picture of the U. S. to the world as a nation which does not want peace. It is indeed a sad situation when the supposed world leading democracy champions a course which leads away from the paths of peace.

There was a cartoon in this week's New York Times' News of the Week in Review section which depicted Russia on one side of the fence and the U. S. on the other. In the cartoon the two people, representative of the two groups, held signs pertaining to the establishment of peace. The sign in the hand of the Russian said, "Russia's way," the sign in the hand of the Amerian said, "West's way." The next two signs depicted the arms build-up that has come as the result of the lack of ability of both countries to compromise.

There is a very basic need to compromise. There is also a basic need for the U. S. to present itself to the world as a spearhead in the drive for peace.

There then is a need for the U. S. to agree and not shut out any peace drives, even if they are not initiated by the United States.

Perhaps the non-aggression pact would be a step toward the lesser agreements that the President deems so important. Perhaps the treaty represents only a worthless slip of paper.

However, even if the treaty is a worthless piece of paper similar to the Kellogg-Briand pact of 1928, the U. S. can at least demonstrate its good intentions to the world.

After the small signing of a non-aggression treaty is accomplished, which would mean no sacrifice of sovereignty for the U. S., the U. S. may go ahead with its plans for peace proposals for the U. N., for a disarmament conference, and perhaps for a summit meeting.

If the U. S. persues the course it is now following, it will never be able to arrange any of these for the simple reason that the Soviets and other nations of the world are going to distrust the good intentions of the U. S.

A just and lasting peace can never be accomplished without give and take from both sides of the fence. The arms race will never stop unless both countries take the initiative in trying to stop the arms race. The net result of distrust and one-sided efforts will be a world living under the domination of fear or possibly a third world war which will bring ruin and pain to untold millions of people.

Peace must be sought, and the U. S. must be cautious, but not so cautious as to rebuff any peace proposal that comes.

In order to achieve peace and the survival of democracy, the U. S. must keep all avenues open.

Our Public Schools And Responsibility

According to a recent news item, Dean Thomas L. Norton of New York University has reported that his university is attacking the problem of stulent's inalequate ailities in writing and speaking. The method of solution involves expanded colrse requirements in literature, speech and writing.

This seems to me to be a case in which a serious problem is recognized with admirable clarity and a solution is proposed which can at best be nothing more than a short-range expedient. Significantly, on the very same page of The Times on which the item describing Dr. Norton's report appeared, it was also reported that a Kent State University publication has revealed that "25 to 40 per cent of the pupils entering high school are reading below the ninth grade level and require speech help to correct deficiencies and overcome retardation."

University administrators and facilty have long been aware that students are coming to college with less and less training in fundamentals. It appears clear to me that the universities must take the lead in compelling the pub ic schools to take a long hard look at their curricula. This will not be done if the universities take upon themselves the responsibility for developing skills which must be taught in the public schools.

This is not to say that speech writing and literature should not be taught in a university—of course they should. But universities should insist that applicants for admission should have reached an acceptable level of proficiency in these areas before they can matriculate. Only then will the public schools make the changes that are so overdue.

"Imagination is a contagious disease. It cannot be measured by the yard, or weighed by the pound, and then delivered to the students by members of the faculty. It can only be communicated by a faculty whose members themselves wear their learning with imagination.  The whole art in the organization of a university is the provision of a faculty whose learning is lighted up with imagination. This is the problem of problems in university education; and unless are careful the recent vast extension of universities in number of students and in variety of activities  will fail in producing its proper results, by the mishandling of this problem.—Alfred N. KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

A long, long time ago, March 3, 1917 in fact, there was an inconspicious headline on the front page of the Daily Tar Heel which read: "Tar Heels Win Game In Last Eight Minutes."

The story went on tell that "by a sudden rush in the last eight mintues, Carolina defeated Virginia last Saturday at Lynchburg by a score of 35-24."

What, you might ask is the significance of all this. Well, it just so happens that every living member of that Carolina team is right here in Chapel Hill today, and upon what more appropriate date than the day of the Carolina-Virginia game, 1958 of course?

Yes, this is reunion day. The living 11 of 14 members of that 1917 team have come back to Chapel Hill to renew old aquaintances; and for many of them, it's the first trip back to the Hill since they graduated.

The man behind this unique project is General F. Carlyle Shepard, Associate Dean of the General College and an outstanding member of that team. And you can bet this is one of the great moments in the good general's life.

"I haven't seen some of those fellows since we played ball together back in '17," explains Gen. Shepard enthusiastically. "I've asked them all to wear name tags because I'm sure we won't be able to recognize each other after such a long time apart," he said.

Most prominent among the 11 is our own Gov. Luther H. Hodges. He is one of the six who made his home in North Carolina. The others are: Gen. Shepard, Charles E. Tennant of Asheville, William R. Cuthberson of Charlotte, Prof. John M. Gwynn of Chapel Hill and Sidney C. Perry of Durham.

The others are from Dallas, Settle, Wash. Philadelphia, and Columbus, Ga.

The old teammates got together yesterday for first time and they'll be here through tonight's game. Last evening, they all went over to "Luther's" mansion to rehash old times, since the Gov. will not be able to be with the team in Chapel Hill due to previous commitments.

Campus sportswriting back in those days was really interesting. The Athletic Assn. was in charge of the Tar Heel then and some members of the team were also on the Tar Heel staff as well as student leaders in other phases of campus life.

From an except of the aforementioned article, it must be concluded that the students here at that time were just one big happy family. Observe from these paragraphs "lifted" from the article, the use of familarity throughout.

"Although slightly in the lead the Tar Heels did not hit their stride until the spirit of teamwork, the true star of the contest, began to work a perfect passing game.

"With the score 19 to 19 and only eight minutes to play, Raby intercepted a wold pass by a Va. guard and shot the ball to Buzz, who dribbled, and finding Grandin uncovered near the center of the floor passed to the Tar Heel pivot man, who transferred it to Mac. Shep. (Gen Shepard), seeing the way thing were going, fell in line and caged a cedarbird.

"That start sealed the Virginians' fate, for the machine that had been started did not feel like stopping until the referee assured them there was no need of playing over the time usually alloted for one half. Carolina led by 11 points when the timekeeper called a halt."

Shepard recalls hat the coach of the 1917 team was Harold B. Peacock, now a physician at Pennsylvania Hospital. "Peacock was the Lennie Rosenbluth of that day when he was in college," said Shepard. "He came here to coach and it was the first time we'd ever had a coach with any playing background."

This is truly a great day for this group of individuals who were carrying on the Carolina athletic tradition 40 years ago. We wish to offer them a hearty WELCOME BACK and propose another such reunion in 1968.

This game tonight could turn into a real closie if the Cavaliers are hot. Billy McCann's boys have whipped up a 6-4 record this season and have three of the ACC's top 20 scorers.

Virginia has beaten Wake Forest, Clemson and South Carolina and have lost only to N. C. State in conference play. The Tar Heels, of course, hold a 3-0 official conference mark discounting wins over Duke and State in the Dixie Classic.

The Tar Heels were a bit ragged in their victory over William and Mary here Tuesday night, but Frank McGuire was doing a little experimenting with his lineup and appeared satisfied with the way things came off. Virgina, incidentally, lost 73-69 to William and Mary earlier in the season.

Matmen Split With State

Carolina's varsity wrestling team achieved a 3-2 season record by trimming North Carolina State 18-13. In the opening meet, however, State's freshman wrestlers took the Carolina freshman team by a 25-15 count.

The varsity put together a forfeit, a pin, a tie, and two decisions in taking its third victory of the season .The Tar Heels jumped off to a big lead by taking the first four matches and then held off a State rally in the heavier weight classes to win the meet.

Tar Heel Wins

In the opening match Carolina's Curt Champlin got the Tar Heels five points when State had to forfeit. Bill Suttle won the 130 bout with a 6-0 victory over Phil Fules. Perrin Henderson picked up the only Carolina pin when he put away State's Trontman in 1:10. J. W. Welborn took the other Tar Heel decision by winning his 147 pound bout 4-2. Jack Gray picked up two more points when he drew with Peter Guse.

Tony Malteese and John Lawrence got six points for State by taking decisions from Kenny Hoke and Ray Russell. The only State pin of the evening came when Broyhill pinned Rob Boyette.

Matney Wins

In the freshman meet, State gave the Tar Babies ten points by way of two forfeits but came back with five pins to win the meet. Carolina's best showing came in the 177 pound match where John Matney pinned Jacobs of State.

Citadel Next

The next wrestling meet will be held in Woollen Gym Saturday when the Tar Heels take on a strong Citadel team.

Varsity Summary

123- Champlin (C) won by forfeit; 130- Suttle (C) decisioned Fules (6-0); 137- Henderson (C) pinned Trontman (1:10); 147- Welborn (C) decisioned Dall (4-2); 157- Malteese (S) decisioned Hoke (7-2); 167- Gray (C) drew with Guse (2-2); 177- Broyhill (S) pinned Boyette (8:21); Heavyweight- Lawrence (S) decisioned Russell (6-2).

Frosh Summary

Tar Heel-Terps Game Sat. Is 14,500 Sellout

College Park, Md., Jan. 6 — The University of Maryland announced here today that the game between the Maryland basketball team and the Carolina squad Saturday night is a complete sellout.

Maryland publicity officials stated that 14,500 tickets have been sold, exceeding last year's top figure of 14,000, also for a game with North Carolina.

The extra 500 seats are temporary ones and will be located just off the playing floor.

There is a possibility that standing room tickets may be sold, which would increase the amount to 16,000.

This possibility will not be known until Friday night.

The contest brings together the nation's third-ranked team in Carolina and the eleventh-rated Maryland squad. Carolina sports a 10-1 mark, losing only to top-ranked West Virginia, while the Terps boast a 7-2 record.

"A cheerful inn for visitors, a town hall for the State, and a home for returning sons and daughters of the Alma Mater' reads the plaque over the fireplace in the main lounge of the Carolina Inn in Chapel Hill.

Davidson Is Tar Baby's Foe Tonite

By ELLIOTT COPPER

Carolina's freshman basketball team, fresh from a 97-48 victory over the Elon JV here Tuesday night, will go after its eighth win of the season when it meets the Davidson JV's in a 6 o'clock game at Woollen Gym tonight.

With Lou Brown back in the starting lineup, the Tar Babies will be at full strength for tonight's encounter.

In the Elon game, Doug Moe and Jim Donahue led the scoring parade with 23 points each. Brown was close behind the leaders with 18 markers.

Strong Defense

Coach Ken Rosemond's squad displayed a strong defense in the Elon game, and it could be the determining factor in the outcome of tonight's tilt.

On Saturday night the freshmen will journey over to Winston-Salem for a return engagement with the Wake Forest freshmen. In their first meting of the season, the Tar Babies won a close one, 76-72. Next Wednesday the team will take on a powerpacked State freshman squad prior to the varsity contest.

Coach Rosemond will probably open the game with Donahue, Moe, and Brown in the forecourt and Tam Shuford and Bill Hart at the guard posts.

Behind Russia

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7 (AP) — Sen. Symington (D-Mo) predicted today the United States will be behind Russia in over-all air striking power by 1960 unless U. S. plans "are immediately and radically changed."

Symington, a former secretary of the Air Force, criticized the Eisenhower administration for not putting more money and effort into new aircraft as well as missiles.

RASH OF FIRES STRIKE UNC BUILDINGS

Youth Questioned In Fire Outbreak

By DAVE JONES and CURTIS GANS

An unidentified youth was being questioned last night by the Chapel Hill Police Dept. in connection with a series of fires that broke out on the UNC campus yesterday.

The suspect was reportedly arrested at the Carolina Inn, scene of three fires, by Patrolman C. W. Ethridge.

The youth was described as being about 15 or 16 years old and admitted that he was a psychiatric patient.

A fire broke out at about 8 a.m. in the woods near Kenan Stadium.

This fire was followed at approximately 4 p.m., by a fire in Miller Hall, near the offices of the North Carolina Heart Association.

Later, at 7:30 p.m., a fire broke out in Swain Hall, which caused an estimated $150,000 damages.

A fire subsequently broke out in Hill Hall Annex Y, and three fires were ignited at the Carolina Inn. All fires, except the Swain Hall fire, caused little damage.

CLASSES AS USUAL

Students having classes at Swain Hall, Hill Hall Annex "Y" or Miller Hall should proceed to their usual meeting places today. They will then be instructed as to substitute classrooms, according to Ray Jeffries, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

Carolina Inn Damaged By Three Fires

By PAUL RULE

L. B. Rogerson, manager of Carolina Inn, reported three fires between about 9:00 and 10:00. A closet was damaged on the third floor. Small corridor fires were reported on the second and third floors.

Damage was limited to drapes, doors and rugs. "We had just installed $15,000 worth of new carpet," commented Rogerson.

"We're looking for a fire-bug," the manager added.

Hill Hall Annex "Y" suffered charring and smoke damage to the main hallway. A small cabinet was destroyed, also. Flames were extinguished before they reached any of the rooms in the small frame building.

IN THE INFIRMARY

The following students were in the infirmary yesterday:

Misses Emily Stafford, Linda Watkins, Lelia Midyette, Jane Mulvey, Lucy Forsyth, Messrs Jerry Oppenheimer, Joseph Pearce, Julian Smith, Donald Tribus, Ray Fennell, Richard Benize, Roy Goodman, Harold Russell, Robert Foxworth, Graham Bell, William Parham, Shahane Talyor and Harold Mann.

Phi Society Elects Stribling President

The Philanthropic Literary Society held elections last Tuesday for officers for the Spring semester.

Jess Stribling was elected as President. A junior from Evanston, Illinois, Stribling is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon and is majoring in history. He has served as critic, parliamentarian, and President pro-tempore of the Society.

Other officers elected were Warren Coolidge, President pro-tempore; Ronnie Pruett, Parliamentarian; David Matthews, Critic; Stan Black, Sergeant at Arms; Bill Fackert, Clerk; and Jim Tolbert, Representative to the Debate Council. After the election retiring President Jim Tolbert gave a speech concerning his administration.

The newly elected officers will be inaugurated at the next meeting, on February 4. Dr. James King will be the Inaugural Speaker; his topic will be "The Purposes of the University."

FIREMEN BATTLE SWAIN HALL BLAZE

Blaze Burns Floor, Attic Of Swain Hall

By ANNE FRYE and CLARKE JONES

Fire of an undetermined origin Thursday night swept through the second floor and attic of Swain Hall, where WUNC and WUNC-TV have their studios.

The blaze began about 7:30 p.m. Firemen apparently had it under control by 8:30.

Voluntary work by several people in a class in the building at the time of the blaze, together with that of local firemen, saved over $50,000 worth of radio and television equipment.

According to Earl Wynn, communications center director, the fire was confined to the attic on both sides of the east wing of Swain Hall (facing Smith Dormitory), and the offices on second floor of the southeast wing.

WUNC-TV Production Manager John Hawes first discovered the fire. It started in his office, he said.

"I was coming back from supper a few minutes early to pick up something for a television program we had scheduled when I discovered it.

He and television cameraman Dick Hess used fire extinguishers but by then it was too late.

Hawes then "shut off the air-conditioning" to prevent the blaze from being fanned. "I'm glad I had sense enough to do that," he said. Asked how it started, he said "I have no idea."

Wynn was conducting a television lab course in Studio A on the west side of the first floor when the fire broke out.

A student in the 45-member class, Miss Louise Crumbley, said they first heard a noise through the ventilators, then saw sparks. After this, she said, they left the studio.

Boys in the class began carrying equipment from the west side of the building, where the radio station is housed.

Lights on second floor of the east wing were out during the fire. The lights in other parts of the building, the west wing including second floor, stayed on.

Most of the portable equipment was taken from the building, but much of the television equipment was soaked with water.

On the first floor, the ceilings were dripping water from the second floor.

Desks and typewriters were covered with water. In trying to keep as little water away from television equipment in the TV studio as possible, workmen covered equipment with plastic covers.

At least four fire trucks were on the scene.

Hawes said, "From all indications, we should be able to resume operations within the next few days."

He added that no one had gone into the amount of damage. "From first glance, they should be able to start up again."

Wynn said that the programs which generally originate from the WUNC-TV studio will be conducted at the studios at either State College or Woman's College.

This would include the two programs for public school students which originate from the UNC studio every day.

Concerning classes tomorrow in Swain Hall, Wynn said last night they would probably not be held.

The police and fire departments made no comment, and had not officially attributed the fires to arson.

Electrical equipment is carried out by an unidentified person from Swain Hall. It was estimated that $50,000 worth of equipment was saved by work of the firemen. (Photo by Roland Giduz)

UNC Rallies Late To Defeat Stubborn Virginia By 82-66

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels had to scrap mightily to continue their winning ways last night but finally rallied late to subdue a stubborn Virginia Cavalier team, 82-66 before 5,500 frenzied fans in Woollen Gym.

The crowd, composed mostly of Carolina students, watched this pulsating Atlantic Coast Conference contest from start to finish because nobody could actually be sure of the final outcome, despite the Tar Heel's late lead.

Sophs Pace

It was a couple of Carolina sophomores named Lee Shaffer and Harvey Salz who supplied the Tar Heels with that little something that enabled them to win their 11th game in 12 starts and their fourth straight conference game. That little something began to appear when Salz dropped in two free throws with 10:47 left to play. It put Carolina ahead to stay after the lead had changed hands 13 times, eight in the second half.

After Salz had dropped in his charity tosses, Shaffer came through with the next eight Tar Heel points to put them ahead, 63-55 with 7:30 left. From there out, it was all Carolina as the Virginians had to foul to get the ball.

Senior forward Pete Brennan was his usual consistent self and he was the man who held the Tar Heels together throughout this thrilling contest. He bucketed 29 points, 11 of them on free throws. Salz set a new personal high for himself with 19 points, 16 on field goals. Shaffer had 15 and Tommy Kearns chipped in 12. Center Herb Busch was high for Virginia with 22.

Va. Holds Lead

The Virginians led at half, 33-30 and it was almost four minutes before the Tar Heels could grab the advantage. Kearns hit a free throw at 16:02 to make it 39-38, but the Cavaliers came right back to get the lead again, largely on the shooting of forward John Siewers.

Siewers, in fact, kept Virginia in the thick of things in the second half and it was only two minutes after he fouled out that the Tar Heels began the rally which eventually paid off in a victory.

The closeness of the contest is evidenced in the final statistics. The Tar Heels got 55 rebounds, Virginia got 46. Carolina had a 38.8 shooting percentage from the floor Virginia was 38.7.

Free throws made a large difference in the game. Carolina hit

Mrs. Roosevelt To Give Speech At CCUN Meet

At least three people connected directly or indirectly with the United Nations will speak to delegates to a conference this weekend sponsored by the UNC chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations.

The main speaker is Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, whose visit here Sunday is being sponsored jointly by the CCUN and the Orange County chapter of the American Association for the United Nations.

The executive director of the national AAUN, C. M. Eichelberger, will discuss "The U. N. in Action" at a meeting of conference delegates Sunday afternoon at 3:30.

Miss Connie Curry, field secretary of the CCUN, will deliver the orientation talk at 7 o'clock Saturday night.

The two-day conference is being held by the local CCUN in an attempt to see other CCUN chapters organized throughout the state. So far, the chapter here is the only one in North Carolina.

Sunday afternoon from 3 to 3:30 Mrs. Roosevelt will speak informally with delegates to the conference. Her public address will be delivered at 8 o'clock Sunday night in Memorial Hall.

The most important meeting for the conference delegates will be a business session Sunday afternoon at 4:30.

Second UN Seminar Scheduled For Feb.

Another United Nations Seminar for UNC students will be held in New York February 20-23, according to an announcement yesterday by Ed Crow, chairman of the Seminar Committee of the YMCA-YWCA.

This second seminar this school year was planned after a successful similar one was held in November. During this seminar, UNC students heard Dr. Frank Porter Graham and other top officials connected with the United Nations. In addition the students visited U. N. delegations, including two trips to the Russian delegation.

During the seminar planned for the middle of February, U. N. reporter for NBC news, Pauline Frederick, has been invited to speak to the Carolina students.

The number of students to the seminar will be limited to around 20. Since any student on campus may attend the seminar, interested persons have been advised to sign up for the trip as soon as possible. Further information and arrangements for the trip to New York are available at the Y information office.

The theme of the seminar is "Recent Political Events in the U. N."

Scholarship Competition Announced

Competition for the annual Tri Delta general scholarship fund will be held January 11 - March 1, 1958.

The opening of the competition was announced yesterday by the office of the dean of women.

Women students in colleges where there are Tri Delta chapters are eligible to apply. They may or may not be sorority members, but could be well-qualified sutdents, showing promise of service to their future communities.

The total amount of the awards granted on any one of the 102 campuses included in the competition may not exceed $200.

The successful candidates will be notified by May 15, 1958.

Scholarships will be forwarded to the winners at the beginning of the term for which the awards are granted. Scholarships may be used for the 1958 summer session.

During the 1956-57 academic year, 172 awards totalling $24,172 were awarded from Tri Delta scholarship funds.

Applications are available in the office of the dean of women. Additional ones may be secured from Mrs. Glenn W. Whiteman, 609 W. Highland Drive, Seattle 99, Washington. Completed applications must reach Mrs. Whiteman by March 1, 1958.

UNC To Receive Comer Portrait

A portrait of the late Harry F. Comer, for many years head of the YMCA at UNC will be presented to the University Sunday, Jan 12, at 2:30 p. m. in Gerrard Hall.

The Comer portrait is being given to the institution by Mrs. Harry F. Comer of Abingdon, Va. The Comers have lived in Abingdon the past several years since Mr. Comer's retirement from the University.

GM SLATE

The following activity is scheduled for Graham Memorial today: Petite Dramatiques, 7:30-11 p .m., Roland Parker 1.

Excuse System Not Changed Says Strong

There will be no change in the system of issuing excuses, according to Ray Strong, assistant director of the Central Office of Records.

Strong stated that there are only two places from which a student may obtain authorized excuses. These are the students' dean or advisor, and the University Infirmary.

He added that a change in the form of excuses has been made. The three-by-five form which had been used have been replaced by a four-by-six form. The new forms, which have been used since Christmas holidays ended, are easier for the secretaries in the Central Office of Records to fill out, according to Strong.

However, Strong added that if anything "significant" comes out of the Honor Council investigations, a change in the system of issuing class excuses might take place.

Commenting on the recent cases of forged excuses, Strong stated that nothing had been taken from the Central Office of Records that any student was not entitled to have.

MARY DELL ROBERTS
In "No Time For Sergeants" Tonight

"No Time For Sergeants" Opens Tonight in Memorial

"No Time For Sergeants," the New York comedy hit about an unaffected inductee whose happy philosophy wreaks havoc with an entire Air Force Command Post, opens here tonight at 8:30 in Memorial Hall. The attraction is produced by Maurice Evans and Emmett Rogers.

Evans has taken steps to see that the "Sergeants" to be presented here is the same production which ran for two year engagement in New York. In every respect—cast, direction, scenery, lights and costumes—the producers have duplicated the standards of the original.

New York Cast

Heading the company in the role of the innocent inductee Will Stockdale is Charles Hohman, who played the cheerful privtae in New York for more than a year.

Rex Everhart as the frustrated Sergeant who become hopelessly entangled in Stockdale's happy string of good deeds, and Tucker Ashworth as the private's lonesome and comic buddy are also from the Broadway cast.

Howard Freman and Royal Beal play the roles they originally created, appearing as two enraged generals who are undermined by the draftee's everlasting good cheer.

The direction has been supervised by Morton Da Costa, who staged the original. Peter Larkins science designs, lacking none of their initial trick devices, have been re-designed by Gerald Ritholz to facilitate motorized travel and rapid shifts from town to town. Peggy Clark's lighting effects have been retained along with Noel Taylor's costumes.

Tickets for the production will be available all day today in the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall, and will be on sale in the lobby of Memorial Hall starting at 7 p. m.

Students Failing Probers

It now seems that students generally are looking with apathy upon Newspaper Research Committee hearings being held in Graham Memorial.

Of six persons who appeared before the committee Tuesday, all are now or have been associated with The Daily Tar Heel. NOT ONE PERSON DISASSOCIATED WITH THE PAPER HAS YET APPEARED BEORE THE COMMITTEE.

Thus we see that appraisal of the Tar Heel and suggestions to improve it are coming from within the publication. That is not as it should be, particularly since the hearings are being held by a committee set up by the student legislature.

Indeed, if only Tar Heel associates are to appear before the committee, it would have been easier for the legislature to come directly to our Graham Memorial offices and interview each staff member as it saw fit.

We do not feel that the legislature wanted to limit its findings only to Daily Tar Heel staff members, and for that reason set up a committee to get a cross-section of testimony and ideas from divergent areas of the campus. It is unfortunate that, thus far, the committee has failed in that respect.

Some suggestions, doubtless, will come out of the Newspaper Research Committee hearings and reports from other colleges and universities in the county. These will be presented to the legislature, debated, and its not inconceivable that some of them will be adopted as future policy for the publication.

In fact, it is the Newspaper Research Committee which is the heart of the Student Legislature's investigation of the Daily Tar Heel. And when it reports to the legislature, it will do so with the authority of a body having studied at close range suggestions and ideas to improve the paper.

Then, outside of the legislature, it will be too late for a cross-section of student opinion on the investigation. From this apathy could grow student dislike for recommendations at a time too late to do anything about it. The committee report will have been presented without benefit of suggestions from a cross-section of students.

The argument has been made that Tar Heel staff members, because they are close to the paper, are in a better position to make recommendations for it. To a degree that is true. It follows that persons who work on the paper know more about its operations and shortcomings than those who are not familiar with it.

Nevertheless, there could exist on the campus ideas about the newspaper which would not only be an asset to the committee hearings, but which also might play some role in determining future policy for the Tar Heel. And such ideas coming from non-Tar Heel staff members would be made without possibility of personal interest in the publication, save that it become an improved one for the university community.

Thus far, it appears that the committee hearings have been little more than the newspaper's examination of itself — and any fool knows that that is not the purpose of an investigative body.

GUEST EDITORIAL

Look Again, Gov. Hodges

Last week Gov. Luther Hodges said that a half million Escheats fund dollars were available for college loans but that he had found 'students just don't want to borow money and have to pay it back.'

Hodges made it appear that college students were not much interested in getting an education. But he would have done better if he had taken a close look at methods by which this money is loaned, to see whether University loan fund officials themselves are very much interested in education.

We speak from the experience of having once tried to get a student loan from this fabulous fund of a half-million unused dollars.

Some red tape is inevitable in any loan. But we found it was easier to borow from banks or individuals than to try to seperate U.N.C. officials from a dollar of this money.

The loan fund people demand just as much statement of security and collateral as the bank people do. They insist on a note signed by people of property just as a bank does. And their attitude is one of vague reproach, as if it is faintly sinful to be in college without being rich.

The fact that you may be a struggling student with family, no income except what you can earn between classes, and no collateral beyond what you are now training your mind to do — these things are easier to justify to a bank than to the University loan office.

The loan office is more likely to suggest what expenses you should cut than to lend you money. Generally its attitude to many loan applicants we have known has been that the world is full of thieves — and mightn't you just be one?

Perhaps what happened to us is what happens to many of these other applicants. By the time we were finally approved for a loan we preferred to go into debt to someone else rather than the University loan fund. And we did, and were able to repay it long before any loan fund deadline would have applied.

If other students have reacted as we did, then their problem is not repaying money. It's getting it in the first place.

And the recent news release which stated that "University loan officials almost have to beg students to take the money" must be a very recent innovation.

When a student is working his way through college he feels he is gradually learning both individual responsibility and dignity. Hodges and loan fund officials should remember that the same student prefers to borrow from organizations which treat him accordingly.

Local Chapter Has Project

The United Nations never has attained the world stature which was hoped for it after the body's formation following World War II.

Instead, a united organization for world peace seemingly has become second place to the impending struggle between the United States and Russia for supremacy on the planet.

If the United Nations is to survive, it will take a concerted effort on the "grass roots" levels of all nations, and it is to that end that chapters of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations are being established across the country.

We are glad to see that the UNC chapter of CCUN is doing its part toward world peace in attempting to establish other chapters of CCUN at colleges and universities in North Carolina. And we hope that the presence here this weekend of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, herself a strong advocate of the United Nations, will be an asset to the local chapter's project.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Reds Are Busy Producing Own Unreal Culture

By GAIL GODWIN

After the "beat-Russia-making-satellites" race began, several of the better American thinkers began warning of the danger of a singular, scientifically-focused aim. They pointed out what had happened to countries who momentarily sacrificed their culture in order to make giant-steps in the scientific field.

They gave examples, Germany, Japan. And now Russia. Their arguments were plausible. Obviously Russia thought so, too.

Recently, she has been wooing Argentina—whose provisional government will have elections next year—with her "cultural prowess."

She has rented a downtown movie theater for a clever. Moscow produced movie bill of classics, space stories, cartoons, propaganda and adventure films.

She sent the Bolshoi Theater ballet to the South American country this fall for three successful performances.

Violinist Igor Oistrakh gave concerts and lectured throughout Argentina.

Chess masters from the Soviet are touring the country; local book publishers are being subsidized to turn out inexpensive editions of Karl Marx and other books with pro-communist themes; artists, engineers, and scientists have been offered all-expense-paid trips to Russia.

Here in America, the Russian Embassy is busy putting out neat, slick magazines with beautiful covers. Such as USSR. The magazines feature Russia's intellects and artists, the picture stories of progress in Russian education, etc. One article recently running was entitled "Towards Progress, Friendship, and Truth."

Yes, the Big Red Country can mass-produce culture along with her firecrackers and rockets. For momentary purposes, that is. But a quick look behind the scenes may reveal that Russia's culture, like beauty in the proverb, is only skin-deep.

John Arends, of Olympia, Wash., can tell you what any man knows —that becoming a father is no picnic. After an all-night vigil at the hospital, Mr. Arends proudly rushed up to kiss his wife as she was wheeled from the delivery room. At the whiff of the ether, he passed out cold, landed kerplunk on the concrete floor. Mother, and child? Doing fine. Father? Two broken teeth and a banged-up face!

"Never Mind About Trees And Soil—— Make Us Some Fruit"

Committee To Give Two Reports

By CHARLIE SLOAN

(This is the second of three) columns on the student legislature's newspaper research committee. Sloan is a former managing editor of The Daily Tar Heel.)

When the committee to investigate the selection of Daily Tar Heel editors takes its findings to the legislature on February there will be two reports.

The committee has already agreed that a minority report as well as a majority report will be filed with the student law-makers.

But it appears that members of the committee have already decided who is going to write which report. At least one member of the committee is already confident that his side will be presented to the public only in the form of a minority statement.

That a distinction apparently already exists between the feelings of the committee members is unfortunate. They have not yet gathered enough information to arrive at logical conclusions, so it must follow that each of them started the investigation with a preconcieved notion of the outcome.

This split in opinion has already shown itself in the committee's policy toward the press. The hearings could be conducted in several ways. There could be fully open hearings, similar to the investigative circuses in Congress. Or the "interviews," as one member of the committee would rather they be called, could be conducted one at a time in the manner of Honor Council investigations.

A third alternative would be to hold individual interviews with a reporter covering the session for The Daily Tar Heel.

Tuesday's hearing was publicized as "open." On Monday reporters on the student government beat found it was to be closed, al a Honor Council, without newspaper coverage. Fast talking on the part of the reporters won news coverage.

On Tuesday a committee member said the committee would have to vote to settle the issue of coverage. When the group gathered there were seven members of The Daily Tar Heel staff present. Three of them are on the committee. None of them were covering the meeting. News Editor Paul Rule dropped in to listen for awhile, and by a fast exchange of notes told me that he didn't know who was covering the meeting but that committee-member Curtis Gans might do something on it.

A story written by a committee member is too much like a handout, even when it is accurate and well-written. Handouts have a quality of being considered propagandistic. Propaganda is not what the committee needs at this point.

This is no reflection on Rule's ability as a news editor. The Daily Tar Heel staff is well organized on a beat system, and reporters assigned to beats sometimes ask fellow staffers to cover meetings for them.

But Tuesdays' session was a surprise. Although it was not supposed to be an open meeting as advertised, anyone who appeared to testify was able to sit in the room where the questioning was being carried on.

Therefore anyone interested in knowing what was happening at the meeting could sit in, as at an open hearing.

Although the people present were mainly from The Daily Tar Heel staff, no one was covering it as a reporter.

Blame for the error in news coverage must be placed with The Daily Tar Heel, for it is now known that a reporter would have been admitted to the hearings. On the other hand the committee should make absolutely clear its stand on publicity, so that this week's misunderstandings will not be repeated.

In its short, not-too-public lifetime, the newspaper research committee has made a couple of mistakes, but as the members get more accustomed to what they are doing the bugs will be eliminated.

Something worthwhile is bound to come out of the group.

PROSPECT FOR 1958

Human Intelligence Is Needed For Salvation

The central problem of our time—as I view it—is how to employ human intelligence for the salvation of mankind.

For 12 years now we've sought to stave off (the) ultimate threat of disaster of devising arms which would be both ultimate and disastrous. This irony can probably be compounded a few more years, or perhaps even a few more decades. Missiles will bring anti-missiles, and anti-missiles will bring anti-anti-missiles. But inevitably, this whole electronics house of cards will reach a point where it can be constructed no higher.

Have we already gone too far in this search for peace through the accumulation of peril? Is there any way to halt this trend—or must we push on with new devices until we inevitably come to judgement before the atom? I believe there is a way out. And I believe it because I have acquired in my lifetime a decent respect for human intelligence.

It may be that the problems of accomodation in a world split by rival ideologies are more difficult than those with which we have struggled in the construction of ballistic missiles. But I believe, too, that if we apply to these human problems, the energy, creativity, and the perseverance we have devoted to science, even problems of accomodations will wield to reason. Admittedly, the problem of peaceful accomodation in the world is infinitely more difficult than the conquest of space, infinitely more complex than a trip to the moon. But if we will only come to the realization that it must be worked out—whatever it may mean even to such sacred traditions as absolute national soverignty — I believe that we can somehow, somewhere, and perhaps through some as yet undiscovered world thinker and leader find a workable solution.

I confess that this is as much an article of faith as it is an expression of reason.

We can compete with a Sputnik and probably create bigger and better Sputniks of our own. But what are we doing to prevent the Sputnik from evolving into just one more weapons system? And when are we going to muster an intelligence equal to that applied against the Sputnik and dedicate it to the preservation of this Satellite on which we live?

How long—I would ask you—can we put off salvation? When does humanity run out?

We can't sit about waiting for some felicitious accident of history that may somehow make the world all right. Time is running against us, and it is running against us with the speed of a Sputnik. If we're going to save ourselves from the instruments of our own intellect, we had better soon get ourselves under control and begin making the world safe for living. (—Omar N. Bradley addressing the St. Alban's Convocation)

Did Eban Blur Facts?

To The Editor:

Ambassador Abba Eban's assertion that the refugee problem constitutes the major source of regional conflict in the Middle East is correct.

However, Mr. Eban is a clever propagandist for the Israeli cause and as a propagandist I'm afraid he is inclined to blur the facts.

The refugee problem was caused directly by the Israelis and they have consistently refused to resolve it either by repatriation or payment for territory taken.

Driven from their lands by a combination of war and terrorism, the Palestinian Arab refugees now number close to 900,000 and live in unspeakable conditions in camps located in the Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and the Gaza Strip. Prior to partition in November of 1947, the Jews declared in sincere tones that they would make full restitution to the Arabs for any losses they might incur. Since the truce agreements of 1948, the Israelis have consistently refused to acknowledge any responsibility for the former owners of the land they occupy.

Mr. Eban cites refusal of the Arab nations to absorb the refugees. It might be pointed out that Egypt with its 23,240,000 inhabitants, its rising birth rate and a relatively small amount of cultivatable land is hardly in a position to absorb Egyptians, let alone Palestinians. Jordan, where the majority of the refugees are located, is mostly desert and cannot even exist as a State without sizable foreign subsidies. Syria is very underpopulated certainly but it is also short of water and again a large part of its area is desert. The Lebanon, a tiny country with modest resources is not possible. Iraq, which is beginning to boom, has absorbed some of the refugees and will probably absorb more. Because of its oil and its rivers it is the only really viable state of the area.

Mr. Eban said that he could not conceive of any territorial problem from Israel's side when Israel possessed only 8,000 square miles of territory as compared to 4,000,000 possessed by the Arab nations. Apparently Mr. Eban lumps all the Arab states into one vast area of Arabdom and does not consider these countries as separate entities. What Mr. Eban failed to note is that the land of Palestine occupies approximately 11,000 square miles which for 1,600 years has been inhabited by Moslem and Christian Arabs. In 1922 at the beginning of the British Mandate, there were 85,000 Jews in Palestine. As of the 1956 Israeli census there were 1,850,000 Jews in Palestine and they now occupy 80% of the land belonging to their former hosts.

Mr. Eban blames General Gamal Abdel Nasser entirely for the invasion of Sinai. He fails to mention that during the years 1949-54 the Israelis were condemned by te Mixed Armistice Commission for 95 severe border violations in the Jordan area alone as opposed to 60 violations by the Jordanians and that in late 1955 in retaliation against the Fedayeen (Self-Sacrificers, mostly Palestinian guerillas) engaged in a series of stepped-up attacks which included El Auja in the Sinai Desert, three Syrian villages on the northeast shore of Gallillee and Qaoilya in Jordan. The invasion of Sinai was undertaken just one day after Ambassador Eban, himself stated to President Eisenhower that "Israel will start no war."

I think that contrary to Mr. Eban's assertion, the Arab nations do not want to solve the World's most troublesome problem; it is the Israelis, who contrary to all reasons of sense and humanitarianism refuse to come even part of half way.

Covering The Campus

PHYSICS

Dr. Everett D. Palmatier, Chairman of the Department of Physics at UNC, will discuss the subject "Sputnik, and Then What?" at the regular Laymen's Fellowship meeting at United Congregational Christian Church, Sunday at 7:30 p.m.

All who are interested have been invited to attend. The meeting will be in the Parish House. Refreshments will be served.

ASTRONOMY

Three meetings of the Chapel Hill Astronomy Club have been scheduled for the remainder of January, President Bill Bayliss of Durham has announced.

The meetings will be held in the Faculty Lounge of the Morehead Planetarium at 8 p.m. on Mondays, Jan. 13, 20 and 27. The public has been invited.

YDC

Senator Frank Church from Idaho will be the guest speaker at the Young Democrats Club state rally on Jan. 11 at the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham.

All UNC members of YDC and YDC members from other places have been urged to attend.

There will be an executive committee meeting at 3 p.m., a workshop at 4 p.m., a social hour at 6 p.m. and a banquet at 7 p.m.

Persons wishing to attend must make reservations for the banquet by contacting Earl Dawkins, 3 Wyrick St., or call 9-5543.

FREE FLICK

"Grapes of Wrath" will be this week's free flick. There will be two showings tonight at 7:30 and 10 p.m. and one showing tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Public Offered Short Course On Income Tax

An income tax short course to be offered at the University during the next three months will be taught by Prof. Harold Q. Langenderfer of the School of Business Administration.

Prof. Langenderfer, who is assistant dean and associate professor in the school, is a certified public accountant and holds a Ph.D. degree in business administration.

In the night class, to begin Jan. 16 and continue through March 20, he will cover all phases of preparing personal income tax returns. Special attention to the new tax laws and revisions will be given during the 20 hours of instruction.

The UNC Extension Division is sponsoring the course, intended primarily for tax consultants and for citizens who need assistance with tax problems. Information and registration procedure may be obtained from Short Course, Box 1050, Chapel Hill.

DR. CLEMENS SOMMER
To Visit In West Germany

Prof. Sommer Leaves Jan. 11

Dr. Clemens Sommer, of the UNC faculty has been invited by the West German Government to be one of a dozen visiting American educators to tour cities and institutions in Germany.

Professor Sommer who teaches the history of art leaves by plane next Saturday, Jan. 11, from New York.

The touring group of Americans will include librarians, artists, sociologists and other humanities and liberal arts specialists. They will return to the United States Feb. 13.

The Department of State of West Germany issued the invitation to Prof. Sommer and the others, as a part of a program of adult education in Germany.

They will go first to Bonn and will visit Berlin, Munich, Stuttgart and other places, and will have opportunities to meet and talk with other professionals in their several fields of work.

Dr. Sommer has been a member of the faculty of the University at Chapel Hill since 1939. He received his Ph.D. degree at the University of Freiburg in Germany in 1919.

Claude Debussy's only operatic composition. "Pelleas et Mellisane" and Jacques Jansen as "Pelleas."

Old Book Prices Cut

Our old book corner has had its January haircut, and most of the books have had their prices trimmed.

You'll find books that were 72¢ moved down to the 48¢ shelf, books that were 97¢ cut to 72¢, and quite a clump that were in the $1.50 range chopped down to 97¢. Special sections, such as the Old Medical Shelf and the Religion Shelf have taken a price-trimming, too.

Might be worth your while to drop in and check.

MR. AND MRS. HARRY T. BRUNSON
. . . things have changed

Daily Tar Heel Visited By Alum

By SARAH ADAMS

"Carolina has grown by leaps and bounds," he said, recalling the days 37 years ago when he was a junior in the growing town of Chapel Hill.

"And one of the most striking changes is The Daily Tar Heel—its size, frequency of publication and new offices in Graham Memorial."

Harry T. Brunson, shifting his tall, slender body as he sat observing what he called new offices for the student newspaper, remembered when he was circulation manager for The Daily Tar Heel.

"Back then," he said, "when we had offices in the YMCA building, we published every Thursday with a circulation of about 3 800. It has really grown since then."

And now he was back in Chapel Hill — back at the newspaper where Jonathan Daniels had been associate editor while Junior Harry Brunson carried papers across a much smaller campus to half as many students.

Lenoir Hall, to Harry Brunson, was new. And so were many of the men's dormitories, all of the women's dormitories, and many other structures built under the New Deal.

But the most striking of all changes to the native of Montgomery, Ala., was in The Daily Tar Heel itself. It no longer was a weekly publication, but one printed six times a week and ranging from four to six pages.

Too, when he was circulation manager, outgoing papers were addressed by hand. Now there's an addressograph that daily stamps hundreds of Tar Heels for delivery throughout the United States.

Brunson said that during his tenure at the University in 1920-21, Daily Tar Heel offices occupied six to eight rooms in the left wing of the YMCA building. That space, he said, was larger than current office area.

But with a decrease in floor space came in staff members and other Tar Heel personnel. Now numbering about 50, Daily Tar Heel workers total almost five times those of Brunson's days.

Attending only one year at UNC, Brunson transferred to the University of Southern California where he received a B.A. Degree in English in 1922.

Upon his graduation he moved to Greenville, Ala., where for the past 37 years he has operated the Brunson Milling Co., which processes poultry and livestock feed.

"Jonathan (now editor of the Raleigh News and Observer) always wondered why I majored in English," he said.

NSA Heads To Discuss Conference

Around 25 people from three states in this area will attend a meeting here tomorrow to discuss the possibilities of a South-wide NSA conference in the near future.

If the meeting, along with similar meetings being held at Southern colleges, submits a report requesting a South-wide conference; the conference will definitely be set. This conference of student leaders will be concerned with the problem of desegregation.

The meeting here Saturday afternoon from 2 to 5 will include representatives from colleges in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia and residents of Chapel Hill.

Student Body President Sonny Evans, who invited people to the meeting, was acting on a request from NSA.

Evans said the meeting here includes certain groups other than NSA, including the YMCA, Baptist Student Union, Hillel, Newman Club and Methodist Youth Group.

YMCA Meet To Discuss European Trip

A YMCA meeting will be held in the Library assembly room at 5:00 p.m. today to discuss a European tour and European Seminars. The meeting is open to all students interested in the tours which will take place this summer.

Three possibilities of tours will be discussed. One tour of 42 days will be taken by plane. Two other tours to be taken by ship will be discussed. These will take 75 days. A Central European tour will be taken to Holland, Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, France and England. The other tour through Northern Europe will include Holland, Germany, Denmark, France, Norway, Sweden, Scotland, and England. The cost of the tours will be between $800 and $1000.

At the meeting students will discuss what points in Europe they wish to visit. The itenerary for the tour will be made up from what the students decide.

Merit System Council Lists Spring Examination Schedule

RALEIGH—The North Carolina Merit System Council has announced the schedule of continuous examinations for the first and second quarters of the year for several clerical positions with the State and county departments served by the Merit System.

The Employment Security Commission, State Commission for the Blind, Medical Care Commission, State Board of Health and local health units, and State Board of Public Welfare and the county departments of welfare are the agencies served by the Merit System Council.

Examinations will be offered for the following positions: clerks I and II, typist clerks I and II, stenographer clerks I and II, and general clerk-stenographer.

Examinations for all positions listed will be offered in Raleigh at the Merit System Office every Friday, January through June. These examinations will also be offered on alternate Fridays in January through June (Jan. 10 and 24; Feb. 7 and 21; March 7 and 21; April 4 and 18; May 2, 16, and 30; and June 13 and 27) in the local employment security office in the following cities:

Asheville, Bryson City, Charlotte, Durham, Elizabeth City, Fayetteville, Greensboro, Henderson, Hickory, Kinston, Morehead City, Morganton, North Wilkesboro, Roanoke Rapids, Salisbury, Shelby, Washington, Wilmington, Wilson, and Winston-Salem. All examinations will begin at 8:30 a. m.

There is no closing date for receipt of applications. An applicant may complete the application before the examination and take it with him to the examination, or send it to the Merit System Office and be formally admitted to the examination or he may complete the application at the examination center on the day of the examination.

Candidates are advised to complete the application before coming to the examination, however, if possible.

Applications, bulletins, and information about these examinations may be obtained by mail or in person from any local employment security office, county welfare office, local health unit, or from the Merit System Office, Mansion Park Building, Raleigh.

World In Brief

First Fatality

GREENSBORO, Jan. 7—The first traffic fatality of 1958 occurred here early today when a Charlotte man was killed in an auto accident, police said.

Police listed the man as Joseph Leonard Barnett, 42, of Charlotte.

They said he was a passenger in an auto driven by Victor Clyde Welker, 36, of Greensboro. Welker suffered injuries and was admitted to Wesley Long Hospital where his condition was said to be "satisfactory" today.

Army Satellite

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (AP)-The satellite which the Army proposes to send aloft is much bigger and somewhat heavier than either of those in the still-grounded Navy Vanguard program.

This was disclosed today with publication of official Army pictures of the Bullet-shaped object which the Army expects to hurl into orbit with a souped-up Jupiter-C rocket.

The total lenght of the satellite assembly is 80 inches, the Army said in answer to a question.

Of this total lenght, approximately 30 inches appears to be the tapered nose cone and tube of the actual satellite, containing radio transmitters and tistruments to record and report cosmic radiation, temperature, pressures and other data.

U. S. Accuses

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11 (AP)-The United States accused Russia today of trying to influence actions of the Atlantic Pact Summit Meeting next week by means of Soviet Premier Bulganin's letter to President Tisenhower.

Bulganin in the 3,000-word message delivered yesterday called for an end to all atomic-hydrogen tests and for an east-west conference to outlaw war.

When you graduate, do you want a

JOB?

Sure you want a job . . . but you want more than just a job. You want a job with opportunity, a job that offers a challenge. Union Carbide offers such jobs.

Jobs with opportunity for what? Advancement, for one thing. Union Carbide is introducing new products at the rate of one every fifteen days. Each new product opens up new avenues of advancement. Not only that; markets for our present products are expanding at an exciting rate too.

Jobs with what kind of challenge? Union Carbide has always operated on the frontiers of science. The challenges are the challenges of that frontier—the challenges of new ideas. Union Carbide is already among the largest U. S. producers of titanium—will tantalum be the next "wonder metal"? Union Carbide pioneered the two major plastics, vinyl and polyethylene—is another major break-through in the making? Challenging questions, and Union Carbide people are answering them.

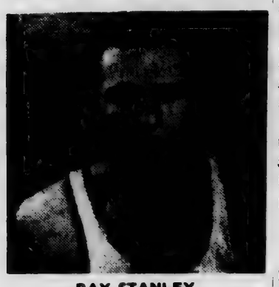
Tar Babies Beat Davidson JV's, 77-61 For Seventh Win

Gift From Flatbush



Freshman Star Moe Is Another Prize Package

By WAYNE THOMPSON

A tree grows in Brooklyn and so do good basketball players.

The latest Flatbush inhabitant at this cage conscious school is 6-5 freshman sharp shooter Doug Moe. Add his name to a list of Brooklyn bred Tar Heels like Pete Brennan, Joe Quigg, York Larese, Ray Stanley and Harvey Salz and its obvious why sports scribes ever the nation are calling the fourth ranked Tar Heels a "St. Johns away from home."

Moe, the highly touted drive artist who was sought after by almost 20

RAY STANLEY
He's Another Brooklynite

colleges last year, is averaging 24.7 point in six contests to date. Considering that he only saw limited action in two of the games, he can be considered nothing short of phenomenal.

Top Rebounder

Moe is also the team's leading rebounder despite the fact that 6-8 Hugh Donahue has been doing his job well off the boards. Doug's got all the tools which include agility, speed and two legs that would grace any Australian kangaroo. He's also talented.

Joe Quigg, the injured hero of last year's national championship team, could have, with the breaks, been an All-American choice this year. Now it looks like Pete Brennan, the sharp shooting forward with the magnetic hands, is setting the A-A pace. Next year it could be York Larese's turn or Moe perhaps.

Hold Out?

Larese, who will most likely be held out this season after missing early drills because of pre-season knee operation, is probably the best shot in the Tar Heel camp. The 6-4 Brooklyn boy amazed spectators at one practice by moving from corner to corner in a path around the foul circle and making 14 jump and set shots without a miss.

After the first round, he reversed the proecdure and duplicated the feat in 13 attempts. Not bad shooting for a sophomore who has yet to play his first varsity game.

Ray Stanley Too

Ray Stanley is another fine example of basketball, Brooklyn style. Although only 6-4, Ray is the only Tar Heel player who can dunk the ball both from the front and the back, one hand or two. He's also a good outside shot and with experience could be one of the all-time great North Carolinians. At least that's what Coach Frank McGuire expects and he has good reasons.

Not all the Brooklyn Tar Heels are big men tough. This is best illustrated by watching the finesse of 6-1 guardd Harvey Salz. The smooth backcourt operator, although only a sophomore, is the No. 1 reserve for Coach McGuire's charges this year.

Salz Has 63

In 10 games to date, Salz has scored 63 points and appears to be a polished performer at this stage of the season. He possesses a crafty jump shot and is extremely deadly from the corners. Harvey is also a good defensive player.

Geographically, Brooklyn is located in New York, but there is a little section of Chapel Hill reserved for Flatbush. And as long as policemen patrol the waterfront and watch the Boys for Coach Frank, Tar Heelia will replenish its supply of Brooklynites. They lost their beloved Brooklyn Dodgers, but Flatbushean always be proud of their contribution to National Championship basketball.

Duke Prepares For TV Date With NCS Sat.

DURHAM, Jan. 9—Duke's basketballers began practice today for their Saturday afternoon clash with rival N. C. State. The Atlantic Coast Conference game will be televised over the ACC regional network and will start at 2 p.m.

The visiting Wolfpack will rate the favorite's nod on the basis of a finer record this year, but past records usually do not mean much when these two teams face each other, especially on the Duke floor.

The 1957 contest ended in a 92-85 win for the Blue Devils despite the fact that, just a week before in the Dixie Classic, the Wolfpack had taken a walloping 102-80 win over Coach Harold Bradley's Blue Devils.

The two teams will meet for the first time this season in the Saturday contest.

Coach Bradley probably won't name his starters until Friday night. With a wealth of material to choose from, and that is the most posing problem facing the Duke mentor this season, Bradley still does not have a definite starting five.

At the guard spots, Bucky Allen the team's leading scorer, appears to have the nod for one post, and the other will be selected from Jack Boyd, Bob Vernon and co-captain Bobby Joe Harris.

For the center and forward posts, co-captain Jim Newcome, Larry Bateman, Paul Schmidt, Jerry Robertson, Bob Lakata, or Hayes Clement are all in contention.

The tussle before the TV cameras Saturday should see an interesting duel between guards. Like Duke, the Wolfpack boasts a fine array of backcourt men.

Captain Whitey Bell and colorful Lou Pucillo will lead off at those positions for the visitors. Bell played three fine games in the recent Dixie Clasic, the performances giving him a berth on the All-Classic team.

Pucillo, one of the smallest players ever to star at State, is a fancy dribbler and playmaker in addition to being a sharp shooter.

John Richter, at center, and Bob MacGillivray and either George Stepanovich or Don Gallagher at the forwards round out the starting five for Coach Everett Case's charges.

A game between the freshman teams of the two schools will follow the varsity tilt.

McGuire Knew Va. Would Be Hard To Beat

Frank McGuire : "All week long everyone has been asking me about Maryland and what we would do. Heck, we've been planning what we would do against Virginia-Maryland is Saturday night."

After Carolina's win over the Virginia Cavaliers last night Coach McGuire seemed to be the only man in the Carolina dressing room who expected the tough reception the Tar Heels got from Virginia. "It was a very good game," He said and added, "That Virginia club is going to make it an even tougher conference. They have good size balance and shoot real well."

Explaining the first half slump of the Tar Heels, McGuire said," We just weren't working the ball well enough for our shots. Too many were from outside, and we weren't connecting. Ya' know, I believe if we had played at Virginia, we would have been beat. The home court advantage was a tremendous advantage tonight."

"Highly praising all his team, McGuire was especially pleased with the performance of Dick Kepley. "Dick did a good"" job under the boards tonight and is coming along real well. The success of our team will depend on him, Ray Stanley and Danny Lotz. We have got to replace Queeg."

The capacity croud got a real big kick out of seeing the 41st reunion of the 1917 Tar Heels. The members of that team who had together traveled over 14,000 miles for the occasion were awarded certificates by UNC Vice President W. D. Carmichael Jr.

Indoor Track On Tap Here Sat.

By JIM HARPER

The 1958 edition of Coach Dale Ransom's Carolina track team will make its debut Saturday afternoon in the Tin Can in a practice meet with Duke

Headlining the meet will be Duke's record-breaking dash man, Dave Sime, and Carolina's great middle distance runner, Dave Scurlock. Both Surlock and Sime ran in the recent Sugar Bowl Indoor Meet, winning in their respective divisions. Scurlock, who is slated to appear in both the quarter and half mile events, turned in a good 48.7 time trial and a great 48.5 final for the 440 in the New Orleans meet.

Bishop Will Run

Among the top performers so far in practice sessions, Coach Ransom praised the work of Wayne Bishop, Everett Whatley, and Cowles Liipfert in the always strong distance division.

Senior Jim Varnam will be the top ranked dash man for Carolina. Varnam is teriffically fast off the starting blocks, where Sime is weakest, and in the 60 yard event might well upset the indoor record holder. Varnam was the runner-up in the ACC track meet held here last spring, losing to Sime only in the last few yards.

Elsewhere in the dash events, Both Lou Glascock and Lyndon DeBorde are shaping up to be the top Tar Heel hurdlers, and will probably finish one-two in that event.

In the abbreviated field events, which will be held indoors, sophomore Ward Sims will be the main Carolina headliner. Sims, who as a freshman appeared in three events, will enter the pole vault and broad jump. Gridder Don Kemper will be among the home entries in the shot put.

Senators Sell Usher; Speculation Ensues

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP)—Washington today sold centerfielder Bob Usher to Miami of the International League, setting off new speculation that the Senators are close to a deal with another American League club.

Senators' President Calvin Griffith has been searching for outfielders in negotiations with other teams.

Griffith, while declining comment on any added significance to Usher's departure, has said the Boston Red Sox are interested in infielder Pete Runnels and catcher Lou Berberet.

Lou Brown's 23 Paces; No Trouble For Frosh

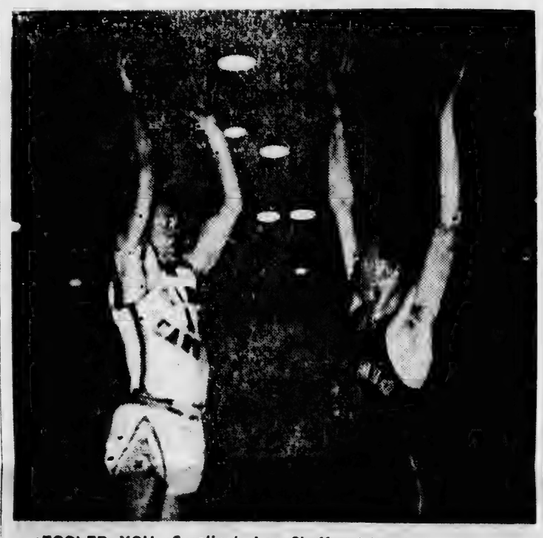
By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina Tar Babies picked up win number seven last night, beating the Davidson JV Wildcats 77-61 in the Virginia-Carolina preliminary.

The Frosh had no trouble at all in the first half as they completely outplayed the Wildcats on both offense and defense. Led by Lou Brown's 23 points, the yearlings worked the ball well through the middle and around the outside. Brown was high man followed by Pete Longnecker with 15, Hugh Donahue with 13, and Doug Moe with 10. Moe fouled out with 12 minutes to go in the game.

Control Boards

During the opening half, Donahue and Moe practically owned the boards, as Davidson could usually manage only one shot when it got the ball. Brown was effective on working the ball into the big men and on his outside shooting. Donahue scored on jump-shots and lay-ups. Longnecker had a very good night; he was hottest in the final half.



Davidson came back onto the floor after intermission a changed ball club full of fight. It held the Tar Babies evenly throughout the rest of the game, matching basket for basket, and working the ball much better.

The frosh started slowly, then caught fire, pulling to a lead of 28-8 with 9:40 to go in the first half. After that it was more or less decided, in spite of Davidson's good play in the second stanza.

The Tar Baby's fast break once again came into view last night, with Brown usually the key man, receiving help from Tom Shuford and Longnecker. The Brown to Moe combo worked beautifully most of the time, causing many excellent plays on the part of both.

Moe's fouling out was the reason for his lowest point production of the season. He had 10 at the half which was his final tally. Brown went on several spurts when he simply couldn't miss, hitting incredible shots from the outside.

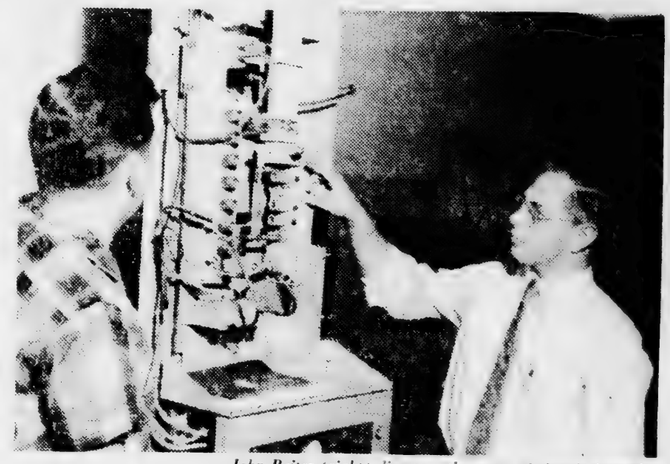
26 of 39 while Virginia had 18 of 24.

The first half was as close as you could want it. The largest spread by either team was a 14-8 Tar Heel lead at the 12:36 mark. The sharpshooting Virginians quickly chopped that margin away and at the 8:12 point, Busch hit a hook shot to send the visitors ahead, 17-15.

Virginia was able to hold a lead for the remainder of the half except when Brennan hit two quick field goals to tie it at 24 with 5:37 remaining. John Siewers hit a push shot one minute later to put the Cavaliers out front to stay the rest of the way.



Virginia outshot the Tar Heels from the floor in the first half. The Cavaliers had a 35.2 percentage, while the Tar Heels were 33.3. In the rebound department, Carolina hauled down 25 to Virginia's 23.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

John Reiter (right) discusses the route of signals from the wave guide through the IF stages of a microwave receiver.

"This was the kind of challenge I was looking for"

Here's what John A. Reiter, Jr., B.S. in Electronics, Arizona State College, '54, says about the biggest project so far in his Bell System career.

"This was the kind of challenge I was looking for—a chance to assist in planning a microwave radio relay system between Phoenix and Flagstaff, Arizona. Five intermediate relay stations would be needed, and I began by planning the tower locations on 'line of sight' paths after a study of topographical maps. Then I made field studies using altimeter measurements, and conducted path-loss tests to determine how high each tower should be. This was the trickiest part of the job. It called for detecting the presence of reflecting surfaces along the transmission route, and determining measures necessary to avoid their effects.

"Not the least part of the job was estimating the cost of each of the five relay stations. All told, the system will cost more than $500,000. When construction is finished in December of this year, I'll be responsible for technical considerations in connecting the radio relay and telephone carrier equipment.

"This assignment is an example of the challenges a technical man can find in the telephone company. You take the job from start to finish—from basic field studies to the final adjustments—with full responsibility. To technical men who want to get ahead, that's the ultimate in responsibility."

John Reiter is building his career with Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Company. Find out about the career opportunities for you. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. Can Carolina's Cage Champs Trip The Terrible Terps?

By BILL KING

COLLEGE PARK, Md.—The Carolina Tar Heels will be out to climax a three-game week on a sweet note here tonight as they go against the all-powerful Maryland Terps in the Bird's beautiful new gym before a crowd of 15,000, including 500 standing room customers. Tipoff is set for 8 o'clock.

This elaborate college community is proud of its team and its new gym and it would be even prouder if their golden boys could knock off the highly-vanuted Carolina club. Maryland comes into the contest with an overall record of eight wins and two losses and a 3-1 conference slate. Its only two losses were at the hands of Memphis State and Clemson.

Complete Sellout

The 15,000 sellout marks a new high in attendance in the gym here and will set a new ACC record. Last year's Carolina-Maryland crowd of 14,000 was the previous high. The game has been sold out for two weeks and Maryland officials have said they could have sold 25,000 tickets had they had the facilities.

The Tar Heels rode into Washington yesterday leading the Atlantic Coast Conference with a perfect 4-0 record. Their 11-1 mark for all games is likewise tops for the ACC.

The soothsayers, both expert and amateur, are figuring this to be one of the toughest games of the year for Coach Frank McGuire's high flying Tar Heels. The Terps gave the defending national champs one whale of a battle last season and this has probably been a strong psychological incentive for ticket buyers who figure these two teams are the class of the ACC.

Routed Duke

Maryland's latest conquest was a 74-49 rout of the Duke Blue Devils here Wednesday night. The Tar Heels beat Virginia in Chapel Hill Thursday night. The Terp's most notable fact this season was a victory over Kentucky, a team which the Tar Heels never got a shot at in the Kentucky Invitational during the Christmas holidays.

A full conference slate is on tap today and tonight, but to most ACC fans this is the big one. Maryland is considered the one real threat to the Tar Heel's conference crown and it makes little difference to these fans that the ACC tourney will decide the NCAA representative—they've come to see a couple of the nation's powers lock horns.

Brennan, Kearns Lead

Coach Bud Millikan's long famous possession type ball has been discarded and the Terps are now a running ball club. Millikan has virtually the same team that won 15 and lost nine a year ago, finishing in second place in the final ACC standings.

McGuire, of course, will be counting heavily on his two fine scorers, Pete Brennan and Tommy Kearns. But Brennan's running mate at forward, sophomore Lee Shaffer is also a dangerous scorer and it is these three big threats that will probably send Maryland into a tight man to man defense.

Even Distribution

Center Dick Kepley is another man the Terps will have to reckon with and there's nobody around who could give a fair estimate of the value of Carolina's tremendous senior guard Bob Cunningham. Add sophomore Harvey Salz to this list and you have a "top six" that could scare anybody right out of the gym.

Maryland has been noted this season for its policy of having several men in the double figures. Every man is, consequently, a scoring threat.

Top men for the Terps are forwards Charlie McNeil, John Nacincik, center Al Bunge and guards Perry Moore and Jim Halleck. Forward Nick Davis is also a man to watch. The Terp's most consistent high scorer is 6-8 sophomore Bunge.

Ray Stanley, Roy Searcy, Danny Lotz and John Crotty are also destined to see action for the Tar Heels.

Publications' Finances Reported Satisfactory

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Harold O'Tuel (SP), chairman of the Publications Board, speaking to the Student Legislature Thursday night reported that the financial conditions of student publications were "very good."

O'Tuel heads the board which watches the spending of The Carolina Handbook, The Yackety-Yack, The Daily Tar Heel, The Carolina Quarterly and the Ram and Ewe.

None of the publications will need to ask for additional funds at the present time, according to O'Tuel. However, if the Yackety-Yack has to pay a sales tax ($100) and a tax on photographs ($200), it will need more money, he said.

The Publications Board is now working through the University Lawyer in order to avoid paying this new tax.

The Daily Tar Heel is following its budget very closely, but may request money for another truck, he said.

There is a possibility that the Ram and Ewe may need an additional appropriation for the final issue. "They more than likely have funds to print two more issues," he added.

The Carolina Handbook had a surplus of $200 while The Carolina Quarterly is running on a "hairline" budget.

Dean of Student Awards Ernest L. Mackie was on hand for the presentation of the Freshman Merit Certificates.

Dick Robinson (UP) introduced a resolution "approving the constitution of the University Art League."

Erwin Fuller (SP), speaking with regards to a statement he made Dec. 12, said "I feel it would behoove all us representatives to exercise discretion and caution before attributing a statement, generally one changed from its original context, to fellow representatives . . ."

The statement he was referring to was "that adverse newspaper publicity has been largely responsible for blackening the name of the State Student Legislature in the eyes of the citizenry."

He said, "fairness and integrity decree that the use of quoted material be avoided unless he (the representative) is willing to consider the material in question in its original context."

Listeners Hot; Staff Hotter!

When Swain Hall, center of the University's Radio-TV operations, caught fire last night, the staff of WUNC-FM signed the station off the air in the usual manner so as to not create alarm.

Irate listeners immediately began calling to find out why broadcasting had been interrupted. After one prolific radio fan had held a staff member on the phone several minutes, he interrupted to say, "I'm sorry, I can't talk any longer, lady. The building's burning down!!"

Radio, TV Continuing Operation

By Ann Frye

WUNC radio and WUNC-TV are continuing operations but from temporary quarters.

A fire at Swain Hall, communications center Thursday night caused considerable damage to a suite of offices. Water damage to electronic equipment caused the radio and television operations to be set up in temporary quarters until re-installation of equipment.

WUNC was back on the air last night, operating from Radio Station WCHL, independent Chapel Hill radio that does not broadcast at night. The programs originate in WCHL studios and were fed back to the radio transmitter at Swain Hall. The transmitter was not damaged in the fire.

Programs from the Chapel Hill studio of WUNC-TV will begin Monday from a temporary studio on the sound stage in the radio section of Swain Hall.

Workmen were busy yesterday cleaning up debris in offices and studios to clear the way for construction. Earl Wynn, communications center director, said yesterday that the state insurance adjustor had authorized construction as soon as possible.

Classes

Classes usually held in Swain are being conducted in Gardner Hall through the end of this semester, Wynn said. Swain should be ready for classes there next semester, he said.

Wynn did not make any estimate of the over-all damage because, he said, some of the electronic equipment may be usable after it has dried out.

Wynn said some of the equipment carried out of the burning building Thursday night might have been damaged in the process. Yesterday the equipment was stored in Swain Hall.

The offices on second floor destroyed by fire have been setup temporarily in the motion picture center of Swain Hall.

Water Damage

Water damage was reported in offices on first floor, Swain, where the water had drained from the second floor offices. Heavy water and smoke damage to the television studios was reported.

The air conditioning equipment was put out of operation during the fire.

In commenting on the origin of the fire in a second-floor office, Wynn said he ruled out both the possibility of a cigarette and electrical equipment. He said John Hawes, who occupied the office where the fire started, does not smoke. The electric wires were not exposed in Hawes' office he said.

Roosevelt Speech

A member of the television staff said yesterday that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's speech Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall will not be carried over WUNC-TV because of equipment limitations .

The in-school classes, which ordinarily originate from this studio of WUNC-TV twice a day, were handled by the studio in Raleigh yesterday .

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt To Arrive Tomorrow For Public Address Here

Around 36 persons have accepted invitations to a conference today and tomorrow, the highlight of which will be a public address by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

The conference is being sponsored by the UNC chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations in an attempt to organize other CCUN chapters at North Carolina colleges.

Mrs. Roosevelt's visit is being jointly sponsored by the local CCUN and the Orange County chapter of the American Association for the United Nations.

Mrs. Roosevelt is expected to arrive tomorrow around 1 p.m. and will be present for a press conference from 2 to 2:45 p.m. Sunday in Roland Parker I and II.

She will speak informally with conference delegates Sunday at 3 p.m. about the United Nations.

Mrs. Roosevelt, a former delegate to the U.N. from the United States, is currently a volunteer for the AAUN, an organization which seeks to build an informed citizenry for the United Nations in this country.

The public address Sunday night, which will concern the role of the United Nations in the world today, will not be televised by WUNC-TV as formerly announced. Because of equipment limitations incurred in a fire Thursday in Swain Hall, communications center, the local television station will not be able to carry Mrs. Roosevelt's speech.

The major activity planned for delegates to the CCUN conference today is an orientation talk at 7 p.m. by Miss Connie Curry, field secretary of the CCUN. Her talk will be followed by small discussion groups to consider the meaning and organization of CCUN.

A dinner is planned for conference delegates at 6 p.m. today.

The conference was planned in November by the local CCUN after delegates to a UN seminar in New York became impressed with the importance of CCUN chapters on American college campuses today.

Bill Sugg, who is CCUN chairman here and in charge of the conference, said the CCUN is an organization to promote understanding of the international United Nations. The importance of the U.N., Sugg said, lies in the fact that this body is the only one that could achieve peace now.

Mrs. Roosevelt's visit to the state will continue through Monday, when she will be the principal speaker in Raleigh at the annual meting of the North Carolina AAUN.

The executive director of the AAUN, C. M. Eichelberger, will be present for a session of the conference here tomorrow. He will brief delegates on the relationship of CCUN to AAUN.

A banquet honoring Mrs. Roosevelt will be held tomorow at 6:30 p.m. at Carolina Inn.

Gallup, Hays Featured At Press Meet

Dr. George Gallup of the "Gallup Poll" and Representative Brooks Hays of Arkansas are the two headliner speakers at the annual Mid-Winter Press Institute to be held here and at Duke Univerity Jan. 23-25.

Congressman Hays is the advocate of moderation in race relations who tried to negotiate between President Eisenhower and Governor Faubus of Arkansas in the Little Rock school integration difficulty last year.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin will present Hays at the Duke University dinner Friday evening.

The institute will open Thursday, Jan. 23, with a reception given by the University at the Carolina Inn at which time the N. C. Press Association members will be guests. Other guests will be award winners in the annual press contests for dailies and weeklies in the state.

The press awards will be made at 8 p.m. in the Carroll Hall Auditorium.

Henry A. Dennis, publisher of the Henderson Dispatch, is president of the Press Association and will preside at most of the sessions.

The University will give a luncheon for the press at 1 p.m. Friday at the Carolina Inn, with Chancellor William B. Aycock as toastmaster.

Interns' Lounge Is Damaged By Fire

By DAVIS YOUNG

An air of tension reigned over the UNC campus yesterday following Thursday night's outbreak of three fires at the Carolina Inn, single fires at Miller Hall, Hill Annex (Y), Kenan woods and the big blaze at Swain Hall.

These fires were followed yesterday by the ignition of a couch at the interns' television lounge at Memorial Hospital. Damage to the lounge was minor and firemen were able to carry the couch out of the building.

The divan was destroyed and the wall behind it seriously charred before the flames were extinguished. Firemen and police found that a bunch of newspapers had been spread over the sofa and apparently set fire. The furniture was ablaze when the flames were discovered.

New Light On Case

Police Capt. William D. Blake admitted that the occurence of the new fire yesterday, while the main suspect was being questioned, gave an unexpected turn to the case.

Blake said they would continue to question the boy who was taken into custody following three fires at the Carolina Inn Thursday night. He suggested that there were also studying several other possible leads and considering the possibility of more than one person being involved in the incidents.

No Comment

Local officials were reluctant to comment about any phase of these fires, but it was learned that an extensive investigation was being carried on and that the state fire marshal was in town to head up the investigating group along with local and state law enforcement agencies.

No leads in the baffling case were released for the press, but it was known that authorities had held and questioned a 14-year-old youth who had been at the scene of several of the fires.

Suspect

He is a former psychiatric patient from the University's Memorial Hospital and was eventually released by police Thursday night in the custody of his mother. However, he was questioned again yesterday afternoon.

Damage to Swain Hall, most severely hit, was estimated to be in the neighborhood of $60,000. The damage is reportedly covered by insurance.

Blake told the Associated Press that in his opinion there was "no doubt" but that the fires were deliberately set.

Following yesterday's most recent fire, local firemen could be seen standing around the station in boots and other fire attire. When questioned about this one of the firemen speculated that "the way things are going we might as well just wait here and be ready."

On Lookout

The University was alerting campus employes and watchmen to be on the lookout for suspicious persons and the possibility of new fires tonight.

The first fire yesterday was reported at Miller Hall in the afternoon. Damage was said to be only slight.

Then at 7:30 last night fire swept the upper part of Swain Hall which houses the University's communications center, causing severe damage to the studios and equipment of WUNC-TV.

While firemen were battling the blaze at Swain Hall, a fire broke out at Hill Hall Annex. Three fires were later reported at the Carolina Inn, where damage was said to be confined mostly to carpeting.

Jury Convicts Frank Wetzel In 1st Degree

ROCKINGHAM, Jan. 10 (AP)—A Richmond County court jury today convicted Frank Wetzel, 36-year-old New York ex-convict, of first degree murder in the slaying of a North Carolina highway patrolman.

The jury of 10 men and two women, which debated more than three hours, recommended mercy for the handsome, stockily built escapee from a New York mental institution.

Judge J. A. Rousseau immediately sentenced him to life in prison, a sentence mandatory under North Carolina law.

A shout went up from a packed court room of 900 when the jury announced its verdict, although Judge Rosseau had warned against any demonstration.

The crowd obviously was pleased with the verdict.

Wetzel stood up before the crowd and remarked in a strong, clear voice:

"Everybody has been nice to me in North Carolina and I appreciate it."

Mrs. Wister Lee Reece, widow of the patrolman Wetzel shot down without warning on the night of Nov. 5, bowed her head and wept.

She had attended the trial in company with Mrs. J. T. Brown, wife of another patrolman gunned down the same night. Wetzel also is accused of this killing, but was tried only for the Reece shooting.

Students Being Cheated

Literally hundreds of Carolina students are being cheated out of precious dollars every day due to a serious flaw in circulation of their daily newspaper.

Consequently, it shall be our purpose henceforth to bring about revisions in our circulation policy so that more students every day will receive the Daily Tar Heel for which they pay at the first of the year.

Under current practice, your newspaper is distributed to all dormitories, fraternity and sorority houses on campus. It also is placed at "pick-up" stations in Victory Village, Glenn Lennox and Lenoir Hall, and is delivered to other residences in the community where an aggregation of students permits its economic circulation.

Of a total 7,000 students at the campus, only some 3,800 live in dormitories. Another 750 or so live in sorority and fraternity houses. The remainder of students live out in town—at Glen Lennox, Victory Village, private homes, trailers—or commute to class daily.

That leaves scores of persons living away from regular circulation routes who, despite the fact that they never receive a Daily Tar Heel, are required to pay for it in the $18 block fee charged every student at the first of the year.

It is not fair to these students to pay for a service which they do not receive. If they are to contribute $3.30 each to the newspaper's operation, then it becomes the obligation of the paper and of the legislature which provides money for it to reach the student with his product.

Under current operating expense this is more the hoped-for than the possible. We cannot mail or have delivered to every residence in Chapel Hill a newspaper which costs each student only about 2½ cents per day. Despite our obligation to the payee, the Tar Heel stands to lose heavily if expenses are increased without proportionate increase in revenue.

Even now hundreds of students are denied the right to read a Daily Tar Heel. As pointed out earlier, there are some 7,000 students at the University. We print only 6,500 issues per day. Add to local subscriptions the 400 or so mailed out of Chapel Hill, and we find that students outnumber Daily Tar Heels by some 900.

From those 900 people the Daily Tar Heel reaps some $3,000 annually—a lot of money when they are not receiving a service for which they pay. If the fee is to be mandatory, then the product for which it pays must be provided.

To print an additional 900 papers per day would cost about $25. But still there exists the problem of getting those papers to the students currently neglected. Some way to do this must be found if justification for mandatory fees is to reign.

On Student Loan Funds

Local loan fund officials, incensed by a guest editorial in The Daily Tar Heel yesterday, say they can produce evidence to refute ramarks made about their program and show that, after all, it's not as hard to borrow money for an education as the editorial asserted.

Copied from the Sanford Daily Herald, the editorial said that "some red tape is inevitable in any loan. But we found it was easier to borrow from banks or individuals than to try to separate UNC officials from a dollar of this money."

"When a student is working his way through college," the editorial concluded, "he feels he is gradually learning both individaul responsibility and dignity. Hodges (Gov. Luther Hodges) and loan fund officials should remember that the same student prefers to borrow from organizations which treat him accordingly."

Now, we don't know circumstances surrounding efforts of the editorial writer to borrow money from the University of North Carolina. He finally was approved for the loan, the editorial said, but by that time "we preferred to go into debt to someone else rather than the University loan fund."

It is not conceivable to us that such chastisement of the loan fund would have been editorially expressed without evidence to support it. But neither do we deny that loan fund officials have the right to defend their program upon its attack.

Consequently, we will abide by a request of the loan fund committee that a study be made of its students, requirements, volume of participation, repayment and other aspects of the organization's operations.

We have not had the experience of borrowing from a student loan fund, but our appearance and signature have become familiar in the bank at home. It is, we have found, a convenient way of financing an education—and the only string attached is that the loan be repaid in good time.

Perhaps out of a study of the UNC loan fund would come revelations—maybe startling ones—of the organization's operations. If anything, the organization stands to gain from such a study.

Tar Heel Has Time Getting Fire News

We abhor as much as anyone in Chapel Hill the continuing rash of fires on the University campus and implications thereof. Neither do we like the attitude of local police and fire officials in their conduct surrounding the tragedies.

The News Editor of the Daily Tar Heel, upon hearing the fire alarm sound Friday afternoon, called the fire department to ask about the blaze. "Was there a fire alarm?," he asked the man on the other end of the phone.

The answer: he didn't know.

"Well," continued the News Editor, "can you tell me where the fire is?" At that the other party hung up the receiver, never answering a single question put to him—and, we might add, put to him in a polite manner.

But that's not all. A Tar Heel reporter, sent to the fire department, asked for the Chief. He was, he was told, at his home. So this reporter called the fire chief's residence, only to find that no one was there.

"I thought you said he was at home," the reporter commented to an individual at the fire department. Then came the answer: The chief was "out of town."

When this same reporter attempted to question the Chief of Police about seven fires Thursday night, he was given the run around and never has yet talked with the official. The reporter saw the chief at the police station, but never could seem to catch up with him to pose his questions.

We've experienced similar treatment ourselves in growing up on a daily newspaper. And, like others, we've been overlooked by officials because, instead of having a heavy beard, trench coat and Pork Pie hat, we were coatless, beardless and bareheaded.

Surely the history of some of the nation's journalists points out the fact that teenaged college boys are not always the simpletons that some think they are. We, too, deserve the cooperation of our public officials.

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Song Lyrics—90 Per Cent Are Terrible

Writing lyrics for a song is one of the most difficult tasks I know of. There are a very few people who seem to have been born with an innate ability to put the right word in the right place, but for every one of these there are about a million poor misled souls who can't progress beyond "Moon" and "June" or "be" and "me." Everything would be fine if these blunderers kept their avaracious hands out of the song writing rackets, but the desire to defeat an obstacle bigger than they are leads them to inflict torture on the American people the effect of which is devastating.

The is a current hit song by the Shepard Sisters which either doesn't have a name or, if it does, I haven't been able to salvage it from the surrounding bathos of sound. They guy who wrote the lyrics must have been a genius, because here is what goes on for about half of the disk - "Ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya." Far be it from me to deprive a man or woman of his inalienable right to ya ya to his hearts content. I guess I just miss the message.

The guy who writes Elvis' lyrics goes a step above the Sisters, though. He lets Elvis go "Yuh yuh yuh yuh yuh" for three minutes. Somebody once told me that those yuhs have significance, but the only things it reminds me of are unprintable.

Some of those jungle songs are pretty interesting, too. For instance, you're very liable to hear some guy stand up right in the middle of a tender oom-pah ballad and proceed to imiate the sound that I always associated with the "Just So Stories."

Then there are the titles - "Raunchy" will always remain an inescapable clog in my memory. "Jailhouse Rock" always has seemed pretty incongruous to me. I never could understand the words and so what am I supposed to think of? Walls? The prison bully? The veritable pile? The Warden's head? I give up - what is it?. I expect to see these titles pretty soon: "Grundy," "Lousy," "The Mutt In Sputnik II,"' and perhaps a religious one called "The Rusty Nails."

The best, cleverest, lyrics I ever heard were written by Noel Coward in a song called "The Bar On The Piccola Marina." Here is an irresistible garnering:

"In a bar on the Piccola Marina,
Life came to Mrs. Wentworth Brewster;
Hot flushes of delight suffused her,
Right round the bend she went -
Picture her astonishment!
She'd just sit there propping up the bar
Beside a fisherman who sang to a guitar;
When accused of having gone too far,
She merely cried - funiculi, funicula, funicyourself!"
And so it goes.

"Yeah — I'm Still In"

State Of The Union: Good & Bad

By CURTIS GANS

President Eisenhower, in his State of the Union message to Congress Thursday, outlined the problems facing the U. S.

The president also tried to deal with these problems seriously and capably. He succeeded in many cases.

Perhaps the most notable case of the president's facing the issue squarely was in the case of inter-service rivalries, where he recognized the existence of such and added that he would seek to destroy these rivalries for the efficiency of the defense system. He intimated, but did not say outright, that he was in favor of certain unification due to the peculiar nature of missile warfare. This is a step in the right direction.

He further realized the need for advancement of the missile program as well as the submarine and anti-attack defense system. On the outlay of money to these projects will depend the success of these projects.

The recognition of mutual trade and aid necessities was another high point in the speech, for without these America cannot have strong and devoted allies. He was careful, too, t mention that this aid was not to solely be in the form of armaments, and that the economic strength of American allies means as much to the strength of the free world. Russia is waging an economic as well as a military and diplomatic war.

Perhaps the best point of the Eisenhower address was the insistence on the information co-operation between the U. S. and its allies. In order that the U. S. alliance system be as efficent as possible, this step is a necessity.

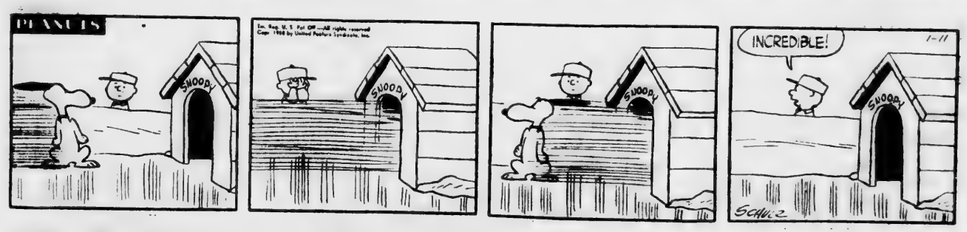
The merit in these proposals lies in the extent of action that is taken by Congress and the president. A minor effort will not overcome the Russians.

On the debit side of the ledger of the State of the Union address was the stubborn refusal of the president to realize that the missile is the coming weapon, and that compared to this the American aircraft and navy, is all but obsolete.

Moreover, the picture that the president gave to the Congress of the United States was an unnecessarily rosy one, where the lag in missile development was the only flaw. It just isn't so .

The president pointed to a new high in business in the year 1957, but failed to point out that at present the stock market had undergone a long decline.

The president also was, in order to present a balanced budget, expecting too much out of private sources, when he asked them to take the burden of international aid. This is a job for the people of America, not just the wealthy.



The president's education program sounds fine as he elaborates it in words, but the funds that he plans to appropriate to the education program is inadequate to do the entire job of overhaul of the inadequate system that now exists. For the future of a strong democracy, much more is needed.

Lastly, and perhaps worst of all, the president is still pushing the expediency of the balanced budget within the existing tax framework. Hence several useful projects will be left out and others will get little attention. Furthermore, the major projects will get less atention than needed. There needs to be a little less political expediency from the White House.

As the Russian menace becomes all too real to the people of the United States, the people will become willing to pay more for the freedom to think and speak. Publishing the Gaither Report might accomplish just this end, and following upon this the people of the United States might be willing to pay something through taxation for their lives.

There needs indeed in America a sense of urgency, this sense was lacking in the president's address.

Research Probers Ask Editorship Questions

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Want to feel like a candidate for Daily Tar Heel editor?

All the interested student has to do is appear before the committee investigating the selection of editors and he will be asked all sorts of flattering questions.

Committee members will beg to know about the office of editor, the organization of the paper, the question of salaries and about, logically enough, how the editor should be selected.

Don't worry, though. If you haven't formed an opinion or devised a plan when you enter the room, the committee knows just what questions to ask to get a plan for picking editors out of you.

It's not really wheedling information that doesn't exist. There are a surprising number of opinions floating around in everybody's head that add up to an editor selection plan when they are assembled in the right order.

This citizen of the student body found himself expounding as an authority on a plan whereby a skyhook would swoop down and grab a group of people whose names would remain a closely guarded secret until they assembled to choose an editor.

Really, it is a very nice plan. Nobody would be able to approach the members of the selections board beforehand because no one would know who they were. Thus politicking would be virtually removed from the selection of the editor. But who would select the selections committee? Too bad we don't have any skyhooks.

The committee will probably hear a lot of these plans that at first sound like they have something and later turn out to be impossible. But somebody's wild, spur-of-the-minute idea could quite conceivably be turned into a workable plan.

Drawing ideas out of people is a good idea. Some folks may not realize they have something until they start answering questions about their opinions.

Last November the committee released a purpose. It is a very general purpose, and allows for almost anything on the part of the committee.

The committee's main purpose, of course, is to study the methods of selecting editors around the country with a view to revising Carolina's own awkward system.

Next on the list is to study "internal organization of the paper, in order to obtain recommendations to be reported to the student legislature." This phase of the committee's work is superfluous.

If a successful method of selecting editors can be devised, then there is no reason for anybody but the editor to be concerned with internal organization. Each individual editor can turn out his best paper only if the paper is organized to his satisfaction.

Any suggestions on internal organization, however the newspaper research committee defines the term, should be taken to the editor, not to the student legislature.

If suggestions are taken to the legislature and then passed on to the editor, it puts the editor in the position of accepting control of student government if he accepts the suggestions and may upset him some excellent improvements if he does not accept them.

Rather than put the editor in this predicament, the committee should take the report of its findings on internal organization directly to the present editor, where something can be done without hesitation if the suggestions warrant it.

The findings on selection of editors should be dispatched to the legislature, where that body can take action on what is presently in its jurisdiction.

In the meantime the committee should go on with its hearings. It should talk to as many interested students in as many phases of campus life as possible.

The legislators on the committee should continue to ask the questions that would please their constituents.

The newspaper people on he committee should go on and ask the technical questions.

The ambitious on the committee should go ahead and ask the pointed questions that might prove something later on.

And after all the questions are asked and answered the committee should stop being legislators and newspaper people and become simply a group of students reporting its findings to another group of students that has the power to act.

But maybe this is asking too much.

Reader Answers Letter

To The Editor:

It was interesting to read of reader Waite's rebuttal to Ambassador Eban. Few of us are blessed with divine insight as to be capable of sifting through the complexities of the Middle East situation to discover the facts (?) as she has. Her ability to isolate and ignore pertinent history is remarkable. She has been gracious enough to inform Mr. Eban that the land of Palestine has been occupied by Arabs for 1600 years. Few of us are so adept at informing others of facts they already knew. Did she think that the Jews had forgotten how long they had roamed the earth? They knew long before reader Waite was a gleam in her father's eye.

We have been informed that the Arab nations, with their rising birth rate, unusable soil and sizeable foreign subsidies cannot take care of the refugees.

Does she think that Israel, with rising birth rate, huge immigration, limited soil resources and sizeable foreign subsidation can do any better? She very cleverly pays little attention to the huge natural resources of the Arab nations.

Reader Waite also cleverly avoids the issue by quoting statistics on Jordanian and Israeli border violations when she is supposedly rebutting Mr. Eban's assertions regarding the Sinai Expedition.

Without philosophizing on the question of when a war actually starts, I would advise reader Waite to thoughtfully consider this question since she is so convinced that the Israelis started the war and directly caused the refugee situation. She should be convinced in her own mind about this question because the day may come. God forbid, when the U. S. will have to fire the first shot in its own defense. The time may have passed when America can wait for somebody to knock the chip off its shoulder before she goes to war.—Grad Student-Veteran.

Wetzel Convicted

Brown and will seek the death penalty.

Hooks made the statement after learning from The Associated Press that Wetzel had been convicted of first degree murder in the slaying of Patrolman W. L. Reece. The jury recommended mercy which carries a life imprisonment sentence.

Wetzel was accused of gunning down Patrolman Brown near Sanford for the same night Reece was killed near Ellerbe.

Hooks said "I've been waiting to see what the outcome of this trial will be. In view of this verdict I plan to bring him to trial" and will seek a first degree verdict with the death penalty.

Hooks said he had a term of Superior Court starting in Lee County, scene of the Brown slaying, in about three weeks. He added, "I don't whether we can get ready or not by that time because of out of state witnesses."

He said a special term may be called for the trial.

"I expect to move in the next week or two to have an attorney appointed for Wetzel in advance of the regular term," Hooks stated. Judge Clawson L. Williams of Sanford, resident Superior Court judge, will be asked to name an attorney to represent him.

Brown was shot down about an hour after Reece was killed. He was killed near Tramway.

Old Book Prices Cut

Our old book corner has had its January haircut, and most of the books have had their prices trimmed.

You'll find books that were 72¢ moved down to the 48¢ shelf, books that were 97¢ cut to 72¢, and quite a clump that were in the $1.50 range chopped down to 97¢. Special sections, such as the Old Medical Shelf and the Religion Shelf have taken a price-trimming, too.

Might be worth your while to drop in and check.

North Carolina Music Teachers To Attend Workshop Here Today

Classroom and music teachers from 18 of the North Carolina communities in which the Little Symphony of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra plays children's concerts will attend a workshop here today.

An additional workshop for teachers in communities in which the Little Symphony plays in Western North Carolina will be held in Hickory on Jan. 18.

These workshops will be conducted by Mrs. Fred B. McCall, director of the Children's Concert Division of the North Carolina Symphony Society and sponsored jointly by the North Carolina Symphony and the Extension Division of UNC.

At the workshop this Saturday, Mrs. McCall will go over the entire program that the Little Symphony will play for children this season, giving demonstrations of scores for precussion instruments, rhythmic activities, dance movements, etc.

She will teach the songs which the children are to sing at the concert.

Attending the workshop in Chapel Hill on Jan. 11 will be classroom and music teachers from Ahoskie, Asheboro, Burlington, Clinton, Elizabeth City, Henderson, Kinston, Lumberton, Morehead City-Beaufort, New Bern, Pembroke, Reidsvile, Roanoke Rapids, Rocky Mount, Roxboro, Sanford, Smithfield, and Southern Pines.

This will be the fourth year that workshops have been held, and they have received enthusiastic response, with attendance growing to over 300 last season, according to Dr. Benjamin Swalin, director of the North Carolina Symphony.

Workshop director Mrs. Fred B. McCall is supervisor of music in the Chapel Hill Elementary Schools and has served on various committees of the Music Educators National Conference.

She has given workshops at Indiana University and other colleges in addition to her activities with the North Carolina Symphony.

Speaking of the renewed proposal by Soviet Premier Bulganin for a ban on use of atomic weapons, Dulles told a news conference that the safety and perhaps the very existence of the United States could never be risked upon reliance on Soviet promises.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Jan. 10 (AP)—A 22-day silence at America's missile test center was shattered with a bang today when two intercontinental weapons—the Atlas and the Navaho—blasted off in rapid succession.

The Atlas, heaviest weapon hanging over the heads of U. S. enemies, made a fiery and thundering departure from its launching platform at 10:48 a. m. (EST). Fifteen minutes later, the Defense Department said "the beast" performed accurately over a limited range.

At 2:38 p. m., the now obsolete Navaho roared skyward and followed the Atlas trail down across the chain of missile tracking stations that reaches more than 5,000 miles from here to the southern tip of Africa.

Frosh Cage Squad Meets Baby Deacs

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's torrid Tar Babies, owners of a 7-1 season record including tonight to take on the equally hot Baby Deacons of Wake Forest for the second time in the space of a week.

Last Saturday night the freshmen withstood a late rally by the Baptists to pull a close one out of the fire 76-72. Thursday night the frosh downed Davidson 77-61 in their last appearance.

The Baby Deacs have lost only one other game to Duke, the only conqueror of the Tar Babies to date. Thursday night they completely routed Pembroke to the tune of 110-63.

The men to watch for the Deacs will be 5-10 guard Allie Hart and 6-8 center Jerry Steele. Hart, with a 19.7 average per game, canned 27 against the Tar Babies and 29 against Pembroke. Steele is averaging 16.7 and pumped in 29 also against Pembroke.

But the Tar Babies are no push-overs in any man's book and they have proved it on the hardwood. Four of the yearlings are averaging in double figures- Doug Moe with 22.3, Lou Brown, with 22.7, Hugh Donahue at 18.8, and Pete Longnecker with 13.1. Brown, a slick play-maker and sharpshooter, is the latest bright spot for the frosh.

The tall, talented Tar Babies feature control of the boards and this they have done very well throughout the season. Not a man on the entire squad is under 6 feet. Donahue tops the list at 6-8. Donahue, along with Moe, is the chief rebounder thus far.

Thursday night the yearlings had little trouble with Davidson as they built up a twenty-point lead early in the first half which was not seriously threatened for the remainder of the contest.

The battle tonight is slated for 6:00 as a preliminary for the Wake-Forest-Virginia game at 8:00.

BIG MEN TONIGHT—Tar Heel Dick Kepley on the left and Terp Al Bunge on the right will be the opposing centers in tonight's game at Maryland. Both are sophomores. Kepley at 6-9 had a big night against Virginia, and 6-8 Bunge has been a top rebounder for the Terps this year.

Matmen Meet The Citadel; Frosh Travel To Fort Bragg

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The varsity and freshman wrestling teams swing back into action today as they take on squads from The Citadel and Fort Bragg respectively. Jim Carse's freshmen will tangle with the soldiers at Fort Bragg in a 2:30 meet, while the varsity meets The Citadel at 7:30 in Woollen Gym.

Coach Sam Barnes takes a 3-2 season mark into tonight's encounter. In last year's meet, the Tar Heels brought home a 17-9 victory; this year, however, the visitors have a new coach in the person of John Guiton, a former wrestling instructor at Carolina.

Varsity Starters

The probable starting lineup will find either Curt Champlin or David Wall at 123 followed by Sophomore Bill Suttle in the 130 pound bout. Perrin Henderson, who won his last match against State by a fall, will again start at 137.

J. W. Welborn is going to start at 147 for the Tar Heels with either Kenny Hoke or Ray Russell in the 157 class. Starters in the three heaviest-weight divisions will be selected from Jack Gray, David Atkinson, and Bob Boyette.

The freshmen will take eleven grapplers to Fayetteville for their match. Three of the squad members will wrestle exhibition bouts, while the other eight will participate in a regulation meet.

The Tar Babies, beaten in their last match against N. C. State, will be trying for their fourth victory of the season.

Frosh Lineup

In the actual meet, Coach Carse plans to send Frank London, Chip Woodrum, and Peter Marks into the lightweight bouts. Phil Davis and Forrest Wright will handle the 147 and 157 matches. John Matney, a regular winner for the freshmen, and Gordon Hurley handle the top-weight classes.

The exhibition matches are going to be wrestled by G. C. Wilhoit, Frank Walker, and Doug Warner.

Following today's activity, the varsity and freshman teams will meet V. M. I. here next Saturday.

Beatty, Scurlock, Sime, Top Stars In UNC-Duke Indoor Meet Today

By JIMMY HARPER

Dave Scurlock, Duke University's Dave Sime, and Jim Beatty will be featured in an indoor track meet to be held in the Tin Can at 2:00 this afternoon. The practice meet with Duke will be the first inter-squad competition for Coach Dale Ranson's charges this season.

Scurlock, the greatest middle distance runner to perform at Carolina in years, has been in competition already this season, having run in the Sugar Bowl outdoor meet in New Orleans over the holidays. On the strength of his showing in the 440 and 880 in the ACC track meet last spring, he has been invited to appear in several big indoor meets later in the season. He is slated to run this afternoon in the 330, 660, three-quarter mile, and relay.

Sime, one of the all-time great sprinters, will run in the 60 yard dash, and perhaps the 70-yard low hurdles. He currently is the record holder for the 60-yard indoor, 220-yard outdoor events, and co-holder of the world record in the outdoor 100.

It was learned yesterday that Jim Beatty, a former All-American runner at Carolina, may be on hand to run in the meet. Beatty, who is in the Army and stationed at Columbia, S. C., will appear in the three-quarter mile run.

Two top Carolina runners will run in the event with Beatty, Wayne Bishop and Everett Whatley. Bishop, who was undefeated in ACC cross-country competition this fall is the outstanding ACC distance man this year. Whatley, the squad's captain, has run a 4:17 mile.

The meet will have competition in both varsity and freshman divisions, to take place simultaneously.

STARTING TIMES

Field Events—2:00
High and Low Hurdles—2:30
60-yard Dash—3:00
¾-mile Run—3:30
330-yard Dash—3:40
660-yard Dash—3:50
1.5-mile Run—4:00
Relay—4:10

Fish Meet Maryland

By MAC MAHAFFY

The varsity swimmers will meet the Maryland swim team today at College Park. The mermen will be seeking their seventh win of the season. Maryland has the strongest team that the Tar Heels will meet in the ACC division.

Making the trip will be sprinters Bill Roth, Walt Rose, and Bill Zickgraf. Brent Nash and Jeff Zwicker will represent Carolina in the backstroke, while Paul Wachendorfer and Telfair Mahaffy will swim the butterfly events. In the breaststroke will be Kit Mercer. Nash McIntosh will swim the distance events, and Ned Meekins and Pete Reynolds will do the diving.

Following the Maryland meet, the Tar Heels next two meets will be at home where they will meet State, ECC, and Florida.

Frosh Fish Top Preps

The Carolina freshman swim team defeated the Chapel Hill High School team Thursday afternoon 52 to 24, winning all the events but the freestyle relay.

Freshman star Harry Bloom of Baltimore, Maryland set a new University freshman record in the 100 yards butterfly with a time of 58.6. The old record was held by Paul Wachendorfer with a time of 59.0. Bloom shared high point honors with teammate Bob Hunter.

A DU PONT JOB-FINDER CHART FOR BS-MS ENGINEERS AND SCIENTISTS

Here is a sampling of the kinds of engineers and scientists which Du Pont will employ this year with BS-MS training—and their fields of work. The chart is an easy way to match your own interests against job openings at Du Pont.

For example: If you are a mechanical engineer, run your finger across the "Mechanical Engineers" column. The code letters refer to the type of work (Research, Development, etc.). The departments of the Company are listed across the top. The column across the bottom indicates some of the locations where these departments have openings. Du Pont also has opportunities for other engineering and scientific specialties, but space does not permit a complete listing.

Additional Dormitory For Women

Whitehead Dormitory, pictured here shortly after its completion in 1939, will serve beginning in September as an additional dorm for Carolina women. The building, originally designed for medical students, has a resident capacity of 116.

Whitehead Dormitory Will House Women Beginning Next September

Whitehead Men's Dormitory on South Columbia St. will be converted into a women's residence hall beginning September, 1958, according to an announcement this week by Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women.

The conversion to a women's dorm is possible, Dean Carmichael said, since 675 new spaces are being created for men in two new dormitories now under construction. These dorms are expected to be ready for occupancy by September.

The approval of Whitehead Dorm (which can house 116 persons) as the seventh women's residence hall came last week at a meeting of the Chancellor's Cabinet.

"Renovation of the building, if any, will be slight because of budget problems," Dean Carmichael said.

In fact, one of the main reasons Whitehead was selected as the latest women's dorm was that the cost of renovation would be less there than in some other building, she said.

According to an agreement with the Extension Division, Whitehead Dorm again this summer will be used for delegates to conferences.

Dean Carmichael said that it is incorrect to assume that the enrollment of coeds will be increased 116, the number of available spaces in Whitehead Dorm. In some of the women's dorms where girls have been tripling in crowded quarters, the situation will be alleviated.

Whitehead Dorm, erected in 1939, was named for Dr. Richard Henry Whitehead, who was dean of the Medical School around the turn of the century.

A meeting on how to convert Whitehead to a women's dorm will be discussed Monday by administration officials and other persons concerned.

ATLANTA, Jan. 11 (AP)—A group of Negro parents today filed suit in federal court here seeking to end segregation in Atlanta's public schools.

It was the first attempt to break down the public school pattern in Georgia although other suits have tried to end racial segregation in colleges and on Atlanta's buses.

Gov. Marvin Griffin, an ardent foe of integration, has declared re-

CCUN SECRETARY SAYS:

International Relations Important To Students

Delegates to a state-wide conference, sponsored by the local chapter of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, last night heard CCUN Field Secretary Miss Connie Curry explain why the American student must be interested in the United Nations and international relations in general.

Miss Curry spoke to around 30 delegates representing 15 colleges and universities in North Carolina. The conference, which continues through today, is being held in an attempt to organize CCUN chapters in the state and coordinate these chapters by a Continuation Committee.

Only Means

"In our world today, the United Nations is the only means for a peaceful solution of our world problems," she said. "If the United States is to take leadership in an intelligent solution of these problems, our policy must be formed and supported by an educated and informed populace."

Miss Curry said the awareness of the international situation must begin in college, where the student is learning to think.

Citing a report, "Changing Values in American Youth," she said the average college student does not change his values in college . . . that "our colleges have a socializing effect rather than a liberalizing one."

Student Movement

With this idea in mind, Miss Curry said the CCUN exists. Through a national student movement for the United Nations, she said CCUN hopes to bring an international mindedness to the American college community.

Through members groups, she explained that the CCUN sponsors such projects and programs as a model General Assembly, seminar trips to the United Nations, regional conferences and an annual leadership institute in New York.

In addition, each member campus receives monthly publications which keep the campus up to date on proceedings of the United Nations and a monthly magazine which explaines what other CCUN groups are doing.

Opportunity

Miss Curry told conference delegates they "have not only the opportunity to hear Mrs. Roosevelt (here today for several talks and a press conference), but the unique opportunity to form a CCUN state organization to carry on pro-

Maryland Upsets Tar Heels, 74-61

Terps Gain Tie With UNC As ACC Leaders

By BILL KING
(Special To The Daily Tar Heel)

COLLEGE PARK, MD. — The Powerful Maryland Terps proved to over 15,000 fans they were just that here last night by handing the third-ranked Carolina Tar Heels a 74-61 defeat in Cole Stadium.

Maryland put the clamps on the Chapel Hillians three and one half minutes before the first half ended and didn't take them off until this ACC affair was over. The Terps built up a 30-23 halftime lead and came roaring back in the second half to snap a six game winning streak and hand the Tar Heels their second loss in twelve games this season. It was also their first loss in ACC competition, leaving them at 4-1. Maryland with a 4-1 record moves into a first place tie in the conference.

The College Park contingent simply outplayed the Tar Heels, who experienced one of their worst nights this season in the second half. It was a case of Maryland doing no wrong as the tall Terps owned the backboards here in this beautiful stadium.

It was a wild and woolly affair, the Tar Heels getting a cold reception from the Maryland partisian. No blood was spilled but things got plenty hot in spots.

Both clubs played it man to man throughout the second half. The Tar Heels had more trouble hitting the basket than penetrating the Maryland defense as the ball just wouldn't drop for Frank McGuire's club.

None of the cheering fans were willing to concede Maryland the ball game for a long time in the second half, but when the Terps grabbed a 40-30 lead at 13:55 and then stretched the point R the throng sensed the Tar Heel's dominance was doomed and they cheered vigorously.

Carolina kept trying to battle back and finished the game in a full court press, but Maryland was the superior team on this particular night and all Tar Heel efforts went for naught. Bob Cunningham and Harvey Salz went out via the foul route for Carolina.

Everybody was hitting for the Terps. Maryland was deadly from the charity line and equally efficient from the floor.

Top scorers in the contest for Carolina were Pete Brennan and Lee Shaffer with 17 and Tommy Kearns with 10. Al Bunge had 14 for Maryland.

In the rebound department, Maryland racked up a 46-37 advantage. From the floor Maryland was 38.4, while Carolina was 30.4.

Maryland grabbed its 30-23 halftime lead by hitting seven straight points while holding the Tar Heels scoreless in the last three minutes and 36 seconds. Before that, the lead had changed hands nine times.

Forwards Pete Brennan and Lee Shaffer kept the Carolinans in the ball game for the first 20 minutes

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

Former U. N. Delegate To Speak At 8 Tonight

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, long a champion of strengthened support for the United Nations, will discuss the U. N. in a public address tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Her visit to Chapel Hill is being jointly sponsored by the UNC Collegiate Council for the United Nations and the Orange County chapter of the American Association for the United Nations.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who will arrive around 1 p.m. today, will hold a press conference from 2 to 2:45 in Roland Parker I and II.

In addition, she will speak informally to delegates to a CCUN conference, which began yesterday and continues through tonight. This informal talk has been set for 3 to 3:30 this afternoon.

The conference is being held by the local CCUN to initiate representatives from North Carolina campuses to this organization and its work in promoting an understanding of the role of the United Nations in the world today.

Mrs. Roosevelt's appearance here today is the third in recent years. In November, 1956, she made a private appearance sponsored by the North Carolina AAUN. Several years ago she was sponsored on the Weil lecture series.

VOLUNTEER

When Mrs. Roosevelt resigned her post as delegate to the United Nations General Assembly in 1952, she decided to devote herself to gaining understanding for the U.N. in the United States. At that time, she became a volunteer for the AAUN, a non-partisan organization which seeks to build an informed citizenry for the United Nations in the United States.

Mrs. Roosevelt now spends time in expansion and field work for the association. Through her work, she wants the United Nations to gain more and more support and interest from America's thinking people in the present critical times.

The wife of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt has been a member of the AAUN's Executive Committee for several years and is currently chairman of its Board of Governors.

CHAIRMAN

As chairman of this board, Mrs. Roosevelt sends out a newsletter informing AAUN members of the latest achievements and techniques used by other chapters throughout the nation.

Mrs. Roosevelt was officially associated with the United Nations since she went to London as United States delegate to the first part of the first regular session of the General Assembly. She continued in that post until later in 1952.

Throughout her service with the U.N., Mrs. Roosevelt served as the United States representative on the Third Committee of the General Assembly, the committee of social, humanitarian and cultural questions. She also was the United States member and chairman of the Commission on Human Rights during April and May, 1946.

ACTIVE

Besides her work with the United Nations and affiliated groups, Mrs. Roosevelt has been active in educational, sociological and political affairs. She was finance chairman of the women's division of the New York Democratic State Committee from 1934 to 1938. She worked with the Democratic National Campaign Committee in 1938 as a member of the advisory committee in charge of women's activities.

In the early part of the war, she was an assistant director of the office of Civil Defense. She is the author of numerous books and papers. Mrs. Roosevelt writes a daily column and conducts a question and answer page in McCall's Magazine once a month.

After her speech here, she will go to Raleigh to be principal speaker tomorrow for the annual meeting of the North Carolina AAUN.

NO FIRES YESTERDAY

Police Suspect Arson In Eight Campus Fires

No fires occurred on the UNC campus, yesterday.

Police are continuing investigation of a series of eight fires which broke out on the university campus Thursday and Friday.

Captain W. D. Blake of the Chapel Hill police force said police had released the two youths who were being questioned in connection with the fire, but added that the two youths were still in the picture as potential suspects.

Blake said that he had no doubt that the series of fires was a case of arson. He added that the arsonist had probably used a cigarette lighter rather than matches, as there was no evidence of matches at any of the fire scenes.

Blake had been on duty continuously for two days and nights, until yesterday afternoon when he was first able to get two hours sleep.

Blake said that the university had hired extra guards to cover the wooden buildings and other vulnerable areas of campus, and reports from reliable campus sources indicate that all buildings that are not in use have been locked, and that only one entrance to other buildings have been allowed to stay open.

Commenting on a report that the Federal Bureau of Investigation was working on the case, Blake said that this was untrue and that the F.B.I. does not have jurisdiction on local cases such as this. The State Bureau of Investigation, which has been reported as working on the case, is also handling the fires.

Blake said he did not know whether all the fires were started by the same person, and added that no arrests were in the immediate offing.

Blake said that evidence such as newspapers and oil found at Friday night's attempted fire at Hill Hall basement, and charred newspaper's found at the intern's quarters at Memorial Hospital, were indicative of arson.

He reported that the abundance of fires on Thursday, led him to believe arson was involved.

Blake pointed out that from the

WITH MEXICO CITY SCHOOL:

School Of Education In International Program

The UNC School of Education has been selected from among 312 teacher education institutions in the nation to participate in a far-reaching program aimed at promoting international understanding and good will.

To that end, it will render mutual assistance in the education of teachers through interchange of information and materials with The Escuela Normal Superior, Mexico City, Mexico.

H. Arnold Perry, Dean of the School of Education, made that announcement today and explained proposed activities by UNC in carrying out its end of the 18-month program. He lauded the School of Education for its selection for the project.

"We feel honored to have been chosen from among 300 accredited education institutions in the nation", Dean Perry said. All told 10 American colleges are participating in the project.

Sponsored by the United States Information Service, the interchange of information and materials is being conducted by the American Assn. of Colleges for Teacher Education, of which UNC is a member.

Locally, an 11-member committee cooperating with the School of Education and under its direction will coordinate UNC's role in the project. The committee met for its initial session during the past week.

Activities

A list of proposed activities slated by UNC in the interinstitutional affiliation project, announced and discussed at this meeting, includes:

1. Exchange of a collection of books for teacher education libraries.

2. Preparation of a photographic exhibit of U.S. schools to be displayed at the Escuela Normal Superior in Mexico City.

3. Preparation of a series of colored slides depicting American education for use in teacher educa-

Supreme Court Decisions

The State Supreme Court has acted wisely and with jurisprudence in decisions handed down in Raleigh Friday.

One case had to do with the reassignment of six Negroes to previously all-white schools in Greensboro. The court said the Negro students, under the N. C. Pupil Assignment Act, have the right to attend previously all-white schools.

The case was brought to court by parents of white children attending the schools. None of the three parents appealed for reassignment of his child, but attacked the assignment of all six of the Negroes.

"The interpretation here given is clear," Rodman wrote. "If a parent is dissatisfied with the operation of the school because of the assignment of his child, his remedy is to request reassignment of his child, not to appeal the assignment of the other pupil."

A "person aggrieved" under the Assignment Act, and therefore entitled to appeal to the court, "is the child assigned or someone acting in behalf of that child."

Thus the high court backed up action of the Greensboro School Board, making a noteworthy stride forward toward integration under a North Carolina law that is the only bulwark against a sudden, damaging mixing of the races in public institutions.

A second Supreme Court decision had to do with the right of a property owner to "accept or reject" as customers anybody he pleases "and for whatsoever whim suits his fancy."

The case came to court by appeal from seven Durham Negroes who were fined after entering a "white" section of an ice cream parlor.

Associate Justice William B. Rodman said our laws impose criminal penalties for interfering with the possession or right of possession of privately owned real estate. Consequently, the owner can accept or reject customers at will.

That decision, too, we feel, is a sound one which upholds the basic rights of American citizens in the administration and use of privately owned property. The real estate owner should possess the right to delegate how that property should be used.

GUEST EDITORIAL

Bombs In The Closet

After spending a great deal of time and effort to pore through miles of unused wire copy, we have found that the most interesting news personality of the past two weeks was Hjalmar Anderson.

Who, you may well ask, is Hjalmar Anderson?

Hjalmar Anderson is a janitor who works for a school in Illinois. Although he has been working steadily for the past two years, he has not collected any pay. The reason—he refuses to sign a loyalty oath.

Perhaps professionals can explain it better. We turn you over momentarily to the Associated Press:

"A 52-year-old janitor in a suburban Evanston school who can't collect his pay because he won't sign a loyalty oath, says the Internal Revenue Service claims he owes back taxes on the pay he has never collected . . . .

"Anderson hadn't been paid . . . because he refuses to sign the oath, required by state laws, on the grounds the oath of citizenship he took in 1932 should suffice."

Anderson made the following comment about the whole mess: If they think the oath I took in 1932 is worthless, any oath I'd take today would be equally worthless," Anderson told a reporter. Simple, but brilliant.

Not only is the school not paying Anderson, they are not releasing the witholding tax either. Meanwhile the federal government is demanding the tax, not of the school, but of Anderson.

If we were a hat, we would take it off to Mr. Anderson. He is not a janitor, he is a political genius.

Hundred of letters have spilled gallons of ink on the loyalty oath problem. And then a janitor in Illinois sums it up a it has seldom been summed up before.

It is not enough in this day and age to swear allegiance to the United States Constitution. One must swear umpteem times that he will not do this, or has not belonged to that, and has never thought whatever, that his parentage is clear of the red smear, and that he has never bought books at that little book store we all know about.

If we must have loyalty oaths, signing them should be a solemn, once-in-a-lifetime occasion. Yet today it is not uncommon for someone 21 years old to have signed six or seven.

(Thank goodness we have men in federal and state government who are protecting the citizens from rabble-rousing janitors who are undoubtedly hiding bombs in the mop handles, guided missiles in the broom closet, and atomic secrets in the clorox bottle.)

The New Year is a fine time to discuss loyalty oaths as they are a hangover—a hangover from the days of McCarthy madness. Like a good many of McCarthy's ideas, loyalty oaths are on the wane. But they are not going fast enough.

The ASUC executive committee, in one of its more intelligent decisions of the semester, recently took a stand against loyalty oaths for all academic personnel and state employes.

We would like to state our support of the ASUC on its stand and our even more enthusiastic support of Hjalmar Anderson, a little man who has the courage to be a real American when most of America is wrong.—The Daily California.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

'Jim' Queried Of President's Dozing Habits

By WHIT WHITFIELD

Immediately before the holidays (Dec. 17), there appeared in the New York Herald Tribune a tongue-in-cheek interview with a man only listed as "Jim." The reporter was Tribune columnist Arch Buchwald. The occasion was the NATO conference at which President Eisenhower was the center of interest. Every word he said, every movement he made was recorded by reporters. It was this that prompted Buchwald to wire the following "interview" back to the Tribune. (Some parts are omitted, however, due to its length.)

Scene: Hotel Crillon, Paris

Time: 12:30 A.M.

The man behind the microphone arrived at 12:30.

"I'm sorry I'm late gentlemen, but I thought the show at the Lido would end at 11:30. I have a few things to report. The President went to bed at 11:06 tonight."

Q. Jim, have Premier Gail'ard and Prime Minister MacMillan retired also?

A. To my knowledge they have.

Q. Then are we to assume that they will not meet with the President until morning?

A. Yes, you could assume that.

Q. Then does that mean that he is going to meet with Adenauer during the night?

A. I didn't say that. As far as I know, he's asleep until morning.

Q. Jim, whose idea was it for the President to go to sleep?

A. It was the President's idea. He was tired and decided to go to sleep.

Q. Did Sherman Adams, Dr. Snyder, or the President's son suggest he go to sleep?

A. As far as I know, the President suggested the idea himself.

Q. Jim, did the President speak to anyone before retiring?

A. He spoke to the sec. of state.

Q. What did he say?

A. He said, "Goodnight Foster."

Q. And what did the secretary of state say to the President?

A. He said, "Goodnight Mr. President."

Q. The secretary didn't say, "Pleasant dreams.?"

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Jim, how will the President be awakened in the morning? Will it be by an alarm clock ,or will someone come and knock on the door?

A. That hasn't been decided on as yet. But as soon as it has, I'll let you fellows know.

Q. Jim, when the President went to sleep last night, how did he feel?

A. He was feeling chipper and in good spirits.

Q. How many blankets were on the bed?

A. I'm not sure. Maybe two or three. But certainly no more than he uses in Washington.

Q. Could we say three?

A. I'd better check that. I know three blankets were made available, but it's possible he didn't use all of them.

Q. One could have been kicked off during the night?

A. Yes, that could be possible, but unlikely.

Q. Was there a glass of water by the bed?

A. There was a glass of water and a pitcher.

Q. Do you have any idea who the President will see first tomorrow morning?

A. I imagine he'll see the secretary of state.

Q. What will he say to him?

A. The President plans to say. "Good Morning, Foster."

Q. What will the secretary reply?

A. "Good morning, Mr. President."

Q. What about another briefing after breakast, Jim?

A. I think we better have another briefing about breakfast after its over.

Q. Thank you, Jim.

A. Okay, see you later.

Guess whose face was red, and who denounced the column as unadulterated rot?

UNC Student Upholds Loan Fund Editorial

To the Editor:

I would like to add a hearty second to the comments of the December 10th guest editorialist from the Sanford Daily Herald regarding student loans. I too, have experienced the attitude on the part of the rather sceptical, unsympathetic, purse-string holders that students were somehow "fairly sinful" in attending college without being rich. The other editorial observation that the loan office's' "attitude to many loan applicants we have known has been that the world is full of thieves—and mightn't you just be one?" also struck a very familiar chord.

As a student currently engaged in my fifth year of graduate school and financially responsible for myself, my wife, and our four children, I have had occasion to apply for student loans from three different universities. The University of North Carolina requirements are by far the most stringent. In addition to the usual budgetary analysis and data about past history, plus reason why parents are not supporting you, etc., one must also produce character references from three persons who have known you for five years or more but who are not connected with the University. However, even if these people say you are more truthful than Washington and more honest than Lincoln, this is to no avail, because these are only words. Since it is deeds that count, you must then get a relative and a non-relative who both have deeds to property in excess of the loan amount to agree to "sponsor" you. The sponsors must then get their County Clerk to verify in writing that such deeds do, in fact, exist and that they are owned by these sponsors and the sponsor must then obtain a Notary Public's seal that their signature regarding all this is, in fact, a genuine one. Ordinarily one might think that these procedures have plugged up any loop holes, but the doubting Thomases of the loan department take a much more far sighted viewpoint. In case the crafty applicant attempts to outwit the officials through suddenly expiring, his efforts will be in vain for there is the further safeguard which requires you to sign over your insurance policy to the officials so that your loan amount plus interest can be deducted before any conniving funeral director or widow get their hands on the University's money.

Faithfully,
Bob Van de Casile

We'll Still Tout UNC's Tar Heels

It strikes us funny like the Daily Athenaeum, student newspaper of West Virginia University, proclaims that their Mountaineers are "currently the toast of the basketball world."

Maybeso in Kentucky, but down in North Carolina we still hold up our glasses to the Tar Heels of Frank McGuire—and the only claim to fame for Kentucky is the whiskey in the glass.

'Sergeants' Play Has Strong, Weak Points

By ANTHONY WOLFF

A few years back the American public was confronted by James Jones' novel about the peacetime Army, From Here To Eternity; aside from its other virtues and faults, the book presented a rather twisted view of human beings in the Armed Forces. Quite a different view was presented to the audience in Memorial Hall on Saturday night by No Time For Sergeants, a hilarious comedy of the peacetime draft.

The hero of the play is one Will Stockdale, a caricature of the country bumpkin, several cuts below the Ritz Brothers, but possessing the same appealing naivete. Will is, by virtue of both nature and nurture, entirely unequipped to deal with service, military, or any of the other indirections which are the requirement of civilized man.

It is just such indirections that Ira Levin is satirizing in the adaptation of Mac Hyman's novel. Unfortunately, without the slightest notion of the effect which his candor and good-nature are having, Stockdale manages to upset the Armed Forces considerably. Society cannot contain individuals who do not "play the game" with the accepted conventions of communication and action. Will Stockdale is a misfit who serves the Air Force not at all, but who serves this comedy well. His very real straightforwardness is disastrous to the petty intrigue with which it is surrounded, and so Will Stockdale must be disposed of. In a more realistic, "serious" work, Melville's Billy Budd, for instance, the hero must die; in a comedy like No Time For Sergeants he is merely transferred to another branch of the service (not, it might be noted, without dragging a career officer with him; paralelling this in Billy Budd, the antagonist and protagonist both die.)

But enough of literary criticism: No Time For Sergeants is an hilarious spoof of today's hyper-civilized society. Saturday night's production was quite equal to the play, although one might wonder if the production hasn't deteriorated some from its Broadway standard.

Most of the acting was excellent, if not distinguished. Rex Everhart's portrayal of Sergeant King was the high mark of the evening. As the Sergeant whose eighteen years of military service are set to naught by his encounter with Stockdale, Mr. Everhart exhibited fine comic timing which did much to keep the pace and prevent the show from dragging.

In the lead role, Charles Hohman did a fine job; what was mainly lacking was that perfect timing which would have made his characterization even more amusing than it was. Also, Mr. Hohman must suffer by comparison with Andy Griffith, who created the role on Broadway. Even without seeing Mr. Griffith do the part, it is easy to see that he would have added something, particularly in the mountain accent which Mr. Hohman had to strain for. All in all, it was an engaging performance.

There were two portrayals which were noticably weak: Tucker Ashworth's Ben and Christian Flander's Irvin overplayed considerably. Flanders was the worst offender. His tough guy had no depth and never really came across. Ben, Will's "Buddy," might well have been less cute and childish.

The only outstanding performance in a minor role was James Millhollin's psychiatrist who is completely undone by Stockdale's ingenuousness — his abnormal normalcy, so to speak.

The rest of the performances were capable if undistinguished; certainly they were good enough to make the show an enjoyable one.

The settings well deserved the applause they received. Even in their traveling version, Peter Larkin's imagination was evident. Likewise for the lighting and direction.

So much for the production. As with other Memorial Hall affairs, the major discomforts were not in the performance, but in the old building itself. I almost wish our mysterious pyromaniac had found time on his rounds to set the place to the torch. Among its other faults, the building ought to burn like hell.

It is about time we realized that Memorial Hall is inadequate for any entertainment. To begin with, even church is no longer considered a discipline requiring an audience to torture themselves on pews which would defeat a yogi who sleeps on nails. Granting that my long legs compound the problems, the seats in Memorial Hall are a gyp to anyone who pays good money for them, and any performance, no matter how fine, loses appeal under such discomfort.

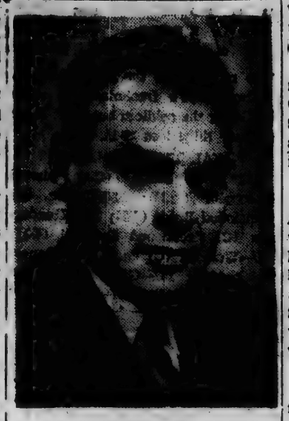
From the point of view of both performers and audience, the miserable acoustics of the hall are detrimental to a performance. Any speaker who must make himself audible in that cavernous echo chamber must sacrifice some of his art to volume and clarity; the audience, straining for the words, is distracted from the performance.

The stage itself is an insult to the artists who unwittingly are hoaxed to play on it. Not only are the backstage facilities inadequate, but the stage floor is a hazard, particularly to dancers. It was unfair — almost disgraceful — to invite dancers here these past two years; I could almost have forgiven them if they had refused to perform after seeing the condition of the stage floor.

We are in real need of a new theatre.

Music Dept. Presents 'King David' Tuesday

The UNC Music Dept. will present Honegger's "King David" in a Tuesday Evening Series concert Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall, with Earl Wynn of Chapel Hill as narrator.



Wynn is chairman of the UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures and director of the University's Communications Center.

The role of the narrator is of central importance in this work since he provides the connecting links between the various musical episodes which recount the life of the psalmist David. In Tuesday's performance an English translation of the original text by Rene Morax will be used.

Professor Wynn brings to his portrayal the wide experience of an extensive background. In addition to the many roles he has assumed in various productions of the Communications Center he has also appeared in starring roles with the Carolina Playmakers and has served as narrator in the other oratorio performances.

Other soloists for the occasion include Jo Jurgenson, who will perform the incantation of the Witch of Endor; Martha Fouse, soprano; Marilyn Zachau ,contralto, and Gene Strassler, tenor. The great choral sections which form the backbone of the work will be performed by the University Chorus, under its permanent director, Dr. Wilton Mason, who for this occasion will also direct the University Symphony Orchestra.

The performance is open to the public without charge.

College Assn. Meet Attended By Two Deans

The crisis in scientific education was discussed at a meeting of the American Assn. of Colleges, attended by two UNC deans at Miami Beach last week.

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, heard individual speeches and panel discussions on the present crisis in education at the meeting.

The featured speaker was John Hannah, Michigan State University president who was recently appointed chairman of the Civil Rights Commission by President Eisenhower.

Hannah said the crisis in science could be met best by the recognition that applied science and technology are not so important as basic science . . . and the humanities are of lasting value to man because they provide the values and insight that guide men's lives.

Dean Sitterson participated in a panel discussion on "Efficient Uses of Teaching Resources."

Letter

The Escuela Normal Superior, enrolling around 900 students its regular term, is expected to outline its program of cooperation in a forthcoming letter to the local School of Education. Then the project will begin immediately.

Dean Perry said the Information Service-backed project "is the first of its kind ever to be conducted in this country." He said it is a reflection of the organization's interest in similar projects "to be carried out over a long period of time."

The 10 American institutions participating in the project will interchange materials with schools in European, African and Asian nations, as well as with schools in Latin America.

Dean Perry said UNC's exchange with Escuela Normal Superior will be particularly helpful to local students planning to teach Spanish in secondary schools and colleges of this country. It also will aid teachers in the social studies, he said.

156 Students Admitted For Second Semester

The admissions office announced yesterday that 156 students have been admitted or re-admitted to the university for the second semester. A total of 168 applications were pending consideration.

The new students include 58 men and 31 women. Former students readmitting numbered 73.

Of the new students, 27 will be enrolled in the General College, 19 in the College of Arts and Sciences, five in the School of Business Administration and 10 in the School of Education.

Flying Back

Maj. Howard Curran, 39, of Tacoma, Wash., left Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in the plane of the U. S. air attache there.

All through the holidays Mike, 12, Mary Lou, 4, and Pat 2, feared their father was dead. Curran's younger jet pilot brother, Lt. Richard P. Curran, 25, had flown here from Andrews Air Force Base, near Washington, D. C. to help them keep the vigil.

Curran arrived in Belgrade by Yugoslav airliner earlier today after 10 days in custody of Albanian military authorities. He was missing for 13 days, until Communist Albania announced Tuesday he was being held.

The delegates will also hear Mrs. Roosevelt talk informally at 3 p.m. today.

An important business session to organize a state CCUN, as mentioned in Miss Curry's speech last night will be held at 4:30 p.m.

The chairman of the local CCUN sponsoring group is Bill Sugg, who was in overall charge of all arrangements for the conference.

Slide Lecture On Canticles Set Tomorrow

The Canticles of King Alfonso X will be the subject of a slide lecture in color with musical background presented by the University Art League Monday night. Dr. John Esten Keller, U. N. C. professor of Romance languages, will deliver the lecture on the 13th century Spanish manuscript.

The Canticles is a book which presents in song and verse over 400 miracles of the Holy Virgin and over 200 pictures in gold and color. Few people have been allowed to examine the book which is kept in the Museum of the Escurial near Madrid.

The slides used in this lecture were made in Spain for UNC by special permission of the Spanish government and the authorities of the Escurial monastery.

The public has been invited to the lecture Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Library Lecture Room.

Concert Pianist Plays Here Thursday Night

Robert MacDonald, young American concert pianist, will appear in UNC Thursday night when he will present a recital, his first in Chapel Hill since his student days.

The concert, which is open to the public without charge, will begin at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall, sponsored by the University's Music Dept.

MacDonald, a native of Little Rock, S. C., received the A.B. degree in music from UNC in 1950. While a student he won the Percy Craven Weeks Award as the most outstanding piano student, and was active in the band, glee club and Phi Mu Alpha.

After completing his master of music degree at Indiana University, he studied and performed for several years in Europe. He received the diploma in piano from the State Academy of Music in Vienna in 1957. His European concerts included those in Vienna, Zurich and Copenhagen.

In his recital here MacDonald will present a varied program with Ravel's Sonatine and the Beethoven Sonata in E Major, Op. 109 comprising the first part of the program. After intermission he will play Brahm's Variations on a Hungarian Theme, Op. 21, and Three Burlesques by Bartok.

Two groups of Chopin compositions will conclude the program. Three etudes, No. 3 in E Major, No. 9 in F Minor and No. 12 in C Minor, will be followed by the final work, Chopin's Fantasy in F Minor, Op. 49.

Newman Talks To Grad Club Here Monday

Dr. William Newman of the music faculty here will be the speaker in the first of a series of lectures sponsored by the Graduate Club Monday at 6 p.m. in Lenoir Hall, second floor.

Dr. Newman will speak on "Is Music Really the Product of Its Times?" The over-all topic of the lecture series is "Graduate Students' Specialization: Limits or Frontiers?"

Nine lectures covering all phases of graduate study will be given in the series. The first three concern the humanities: music, art and literature.

Miss Nancy Green is in charge of the lecture series. President of the Graduate Club is Bill Deaton.

Students who attend the Monday night speech have been asked to take their trays to second floor, Lenoir Hall.

Al Lowenstein Will Address Student Party In GM Monday

Al Lowenstein will address the Student Party on its history and present a challenge to the party at the SP meeting at 7:30 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounges in Graham Memorial Monday.

The meeting will initiate the party's membership drive. More than 200 invitations have been sent out. "We want some new people that are interested in student government and the Student Party," said SP Chairman Pat Adams.

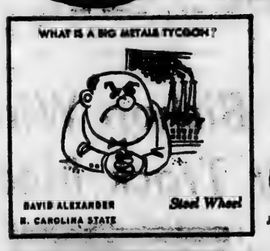
75 MEMBERS

There are presently 75 students in the party. Leon Holt, vice-chairman is in charge of the membership drive.

The meeting will include a discussion of the UNC Campus Judicial System. "The student party is seeking to make itself more responsive to the student community. In the future it is going to discuss im-

Consequences Of Exams Could Be Pretty Awful

Exams are bad enough in themselves, but the consequences can be even worse. What's "worse" could be a forced change of residence from Chapel Hill to elsewhere.



To remain at the university, a student must pass nine hours of work for one semester and a total of 21 hours for two semesters. The number of hours varies slightly at the various school and colleges on campus. Generally speaking, though, the nine and 21 hours hold true.

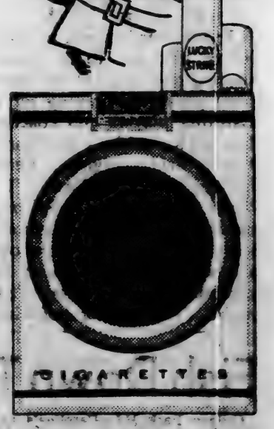
Sticklers!



MEMO TO MAESTROS: is your band dawdling instead of tootling? Is it full of feeble fifers and drooping drummers? Well, this musical slowdown may be traceable to lack of Luckies. Better give your band a break—and make it a Lucky one! A Lucky, you see, is a light smoke—the right smoke for everyone. It's all cigarette—all naturally light, wonderfully good-tasting tobacco. And Luckies' fine tobacco is toasted to taste even better. Now then, what's a marching band that never gets a Lucky break? Why, it's a Sore Corps! (Wasn't that cymbal?)

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Washington, D. C.—All that's left now are the battle scars of last night's Carolina-Maryland encounter. We can't tell you who won here because at this writing a large clock across the street from the DuPont Plaza Hotel (where the team stayed) tells us it's only a little after twelve noon.

But we can tell you the Tar Heels were ready for anything against the strong Maryland team last night.

Right now, most of the players are taking a stroll around Washington after a hearty breakfast in the hotel dining room at 1 o'clock. This is only one phase of a rigourous training schedule which the boys have to follow. Friday night was 12 o'clock curfew but most everybody went to bed earlier, after about a 75 minute workout in the Maryland gym upon arrival at four Friday afternoon.

A squad meeting is set for this afternoon at three, pre-game meal at four and the bus ride to College Park at six.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

One of the wonderful features of this trip for us was getting to know Carolina's assistant coach, Buck Freeman better.

Buck is truly a colorful person. He's extremely intelligent and one of the funniest people you'll ever see. On the practice or playing court, he's all business but sitting around a hotel lobby or riding with him on a bus, one is able to sense a sincerely glowing personality.

Basketball is Freeman's life and the players are his kids. He knows everyone of these boys from A to Z and he's like a father to each of them. Two fine men like Freeman and Coach McGuire plus a squad of really great cooperative guys is 50 percent of the constant battle for basketball supremacy.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The growth of this game of basketball is really amazing. Just think, last night 15,000 or more fans practically overran the beautiful new indoor stadium at Maryland to watch the Tar Heels and Terps do battle. Eight years ago, things were a little different.

"In 1950," recalls Maryland sports publicist Joe Blair, "When Coach Millikan and I came here, our games were played down in the old armory. Why we were lucky as heck to have as 250 fans out for some of our biggest games."

This ascending trend in attendance is by no means limited to Maryland. It's been that way all over the ACC and in almost all basketball conferences. And ain't it wonderful?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The folks at Maryland are mighty proud of this beautiful new building here, and rightly so. Indeed, it's a magnificent edifice.

One of the most colorful things about it is that the seats are there different colors, gold, blue and red. They're the colors in the Maryland flag. There's not a bad seat in the house either. The press box is located high above the last row of seats and a long, long way from the court. But the vantage point is excellent.

The gym houses about every athletic facility imaginable. There's hallway completely circling the building. On Friday, several athletes were spotted jogging around this hallway. Blair explained: "We have an indoor track downstairs but sometimes the wrestlers or track men just come up here to warmup." It's plenty big, that's for sure.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

College Park is about a 45 minute bus ride from here, but the excitement about last night's game was surprisingly prevelant in Washington.

One cab driver told us: "I don't know much about basketball but this must really be a big game. I've heard a lot of my passengers talking about it all day today.

Another man in the hotel lobby had this to say: "I'd give anything for a ticket. I came a long way to see this game and I'm gonna see it if I have to climb through a third story window."

He was just one of many fans who came to Washington hoping to buy a ducat for a buck or two over the regular price. But much to their sorrow, they found there just weren't any tickets left.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Exam time is upon us and most of the basketballers had a lot of studying to do over the weekend. Several of them studied on the flight up; others stayed in their rooms writing term papers or preping for exams Friday night . . . All the Carolina players and coaches were real happy to hear that Lennie Rosenbluth had scored 19 points against the St. Louis Hawks Friday night. . .Lennie was expected for the game last night as were former Tar Heel stars, Ernie Swartz and Vince Gramaldi . . . Spiro (of the Goody Shop) was here, naturally . . . Mike Ronman took pictures . . . We got the word that Joe Quigg's cast comes off tomorow and he'll be in a brace for another month . . . Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley recommended the move "Sayonara" highly. Saw it Friday night . . . all the hotel officials wished the Tar Heels luck . . .

Tar Babies Whip Baby Deacs By 72-52

Moe Collects 24 In Eighth Win For Frosh

Carolina's Tar Babies rolled to their eighth win of the season last night with a 72-52 triumph over the Wake Forest Baby Deacons in a hard-fought contest.

Doug Moe once again led the team with 24 points, most of them coming on outside jump-shots. He was followed by Hugh Donahue with 16 and Lou Brown with 15.

Shuford Stops Hart

The unsung hero of the game was guard Tam Shuford who held high-scoring Allie Hart of the Deacs to 6 points in the Tar Babies man-to-man defense. Hart had collected 27 against Carolina last week and picked up 29 in his last previous outing.

Although the frosh were unable to get a field goal for seven minutes in the first half, they still swent to an early 13 point speard at 14-1. The closest the Deacs ever came to catching Carolina after this was when they pulled within four points late in the first half.

The Baptists began the game with a zone defense, but they switched to a man-to-man, and finally into a half-court press in the final ten minutes which held the scoring down considerably.

Al Hart, although held to six points by Shuford, constantly gave the Tar Babies trouble by stealing the ball. The Deacs' main trouble throughout the battle was that they simply couldn't hit at all, having long droughts when they couldn't buy a basket.

Deacs Couldn't Hit

The victory was the eighth for Carolina, but more significantly it was their seventh in a row, only a loss to Duke marring the season slate.

THE SCORING

Moe 24, Donton 2, Longnecker 5, Hart 2, Donahue 16, Brown 15, Beck 4, Shuford 4.

Fennell 12, Wilmer 10, Steele 12, Hart 6, Adkins 12.

UNC-State Tilt Will Be On TV

Officials of WUNC-TV have announced that the UNC-State basketball game on next Wednesday night will be Broadvised.

There was some speculation that the station would not be able to televise the game due to the fire at Swain Hall the station's studio. However, the mobile unit which carries the game was not affected. Viewers may hear the play-by-play on radio.

and they did it in a strange manner. They were the only two Tar Heels to score in the final 11:58, but even more unusual, Brennan hit six stralight points between 11:58 and 8:27 and Shaffer took over from 8:27 til 3:36 to get the last eight points of the half for Carolina. Shafer had 10, Brennan nine at intermission.

Both teams played cautiously and deliberately before the break, the difference being Maryland's superior rebounding and fine shooting during the final few minutes. Maryland was in the man to man defense, Carolina used a zone.

The Tar Heels actually outshot the Terps in the first half, 34.7-34.3 but the Terps got hot towards the end of the half. Maryland grabbed 30 rebounds, the Tar Heels 23 befor intermission.

Refueling Sputnik

LONDON, Jan. 11 (AP)—A Moscow radio commentator said today a "refueling station ofthe sputnik type" would enable man to get to the moon and back with rocket engines and fuel already in existence.

"Soviet scientists are already calculating the trajectories that would be most advantageous for flight to the moon and close planets with the least expenditure of power,"" the commentator said.

With present fuel and engines, he added, a manned rocket initially traveling 24,000 miles an hour could break away from the earth's pull within a few minutes, float through space with engines off and use its power again to slow for a landing.

The space station would be necessary to supply the fuel needed for the landing and for the return flight, the commentator said.

Varsity Matmen Win; Frosh Lose

By ELLIOTT COOPER

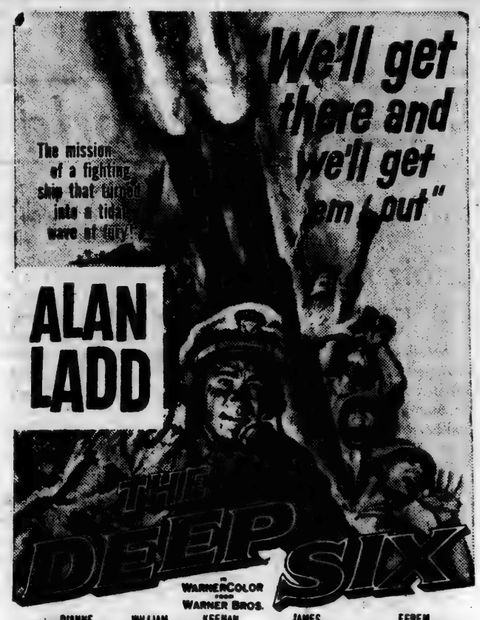
Carolina's varsity wrestling team won its fourth match of the season last night when it took a 20-10 decision from a strong Citadel squad at Woollen Gym. In an afternoon match, the freshman grapplers lost to the soldiers of Fort Bragg 19-11.

Coach Sam Barnes' team won all but two matches in taking the decision in an exciting contest. The Tar Heels lost the opening match when Curt Champlin was pinned after being ahead in the opening minutes of the bout. After winning six straight bouts, Rob Boyette, greatly outweighted in the heavyweight class, was pinned by Harrison in two minutes.

Tar Heel Winners

Bill Suttle won the first match for the winners in the 130 pound class when he took a 6-2 decision from Brodt. Perrin Henderson continued his winning ways by taking a 4-2 victory from Bob Dugwell. Another 4-2 decision was won for the Tar Heels in the 147 bout where J. W. Welborn was the victor.

Jack Gray picked up the only Carolina pin in his 157 match when he flattened Childdress. The two other Tar Heel wins were taken by Ray Russell and Davidd Atkinson, who returned to the lineup tonight.



Jim Carse's freshmen put up a battle for the soldiers but went down to their third loss 19-11.

PENN R. POST received his B.S. in engineering from U.C.L.A. in 1956. He is now in the second year of General Electric's Technical Marketing Program, in the Company's General Purpose Motor Department.

"In a growing industry, there's room for me to grow"

"Here at General Electric," says Penn R. Post, 24-year-old marketing trainee, "you hear a lot of talk about the future — even as far ahead as 1978. In fact, I've discovered that planning ahead for America's needs 10 and 20 years from now is characteristic of the electrical industry. And, what's important to me, General Electric's long-range planning takes my future into account. I'm now on my fourth assignment in the Company's Technical Marketing Program — all planned steps in my development.

"I'm pretty confident about the electrical future, too. For one thing, America's use of electricity has been doubling every ten years. And it will increase even faster as our population grows another 65 million by 1978 — and as research and development lead to new electrical products that help people live better. The way I look at it, the technical, manufacturing and marketing resources of large companies like General Electric are important factors in the growth of the electrical industry. And in a growing industry, there's room for me to grow."

Young people like Penn Post are an important part of General Electric's plans to meet the opportunities and challenges of the electrical future. Each of our 29,000 college-graduate employees is given opportunities for training and a climate for self-development that help him to achieve his fullest capabilities. For General Electric believes that the progress of any industry — and of the nation — depends on the progress of the people in it.

Scurlock, Bishop Win In Indoor Track Meet

By JIM HARPER

Both the varsity and freshman track teams participated in their first meet of the indoor season yesterday in the Tin Can, meeting the Duke squads in a practice engagement.

Some 150 spectators saw Dave Scurlock, Wayne Bishop, and Duke's Dave Sime turn in fine individual performances. No team scores were tabulated.

Scurlock ran the 330 dash in 36.3 seconds and anchored the winning relay team. After the meet Coach Dale Ranson said of the big quarter-miler, "Dave is running much better this season. Last year the boards (of the indoor track) worried him a little, but lately he has been getting used to them."

Bishop, normally entered in the two mile event, won the three-quarter mile handily in 3:12.3. He also ran on the second place relay team and in a portion of the one and ½ mile run. Bishop will appear in the Boston Knights of Columbus invitational meet next Saturday.

Sime, the big name attraction yesterday afternoon, ran in three 60 yard heats. His times for these heats were 6.4, 6.5, and 6.4 respectively. In the freshman division, Tar Heel Bob Sutton won his heat in 8.7.

Other outstanding performances included a 9.6 high hurdles by Lyndon DeBardo, a 21 foot broad jump by Ward Sims, and Don Kemper's shot put of 45 feet, 11.5 inches.

Jim Beatty, who was entered in the three-quarter mile run, was unable to appear in that event due to travel connection difficulties.

SP Begins Drive For Members

By DAVE JONES

The Student Party's 1958 membership drive was kicked off by Al Lowenstein last night with a plea to student political leaders for a reappraisal of the value of "principles that count."

Lowenstein, a past president of the National Student Association and SP leader as an undergraduate, was invited to speak to the SP and its guests by Party Vice Chairman Leon Holt and Party Secretary Betty Kaye Johnson.

"Win at all costs is not a doctrine that is representative of good student government," said Lowenstein, as he began his address.

He pointed to the Student Party's past record as the "conscience" of the campus and expounded the value of the principle that "virtue brings success in elections in addition to being its own reward."

Sonny Evans' record as Student Body President in a "time of great challenge to the University and its student body" was praised in the former NSA president's remarks.

He said further, in respect to the challenge, that "it comes at this time not only because of the changes in administration, but because of the changes in world attitudes toward education . . . education for survival. . .education in the world of Little Rock and the Sputniks."

For these reasons the Student Party must provide a successor to Student Body President Evans who can "carry forth his constructive programs and even see beyond his present scope," Lowenstein added.

Lowenstein listed briefly some fields in which student government must concern itself in the future: The questions of discriminatory clauses in social organizations on campus; balance in athletic emphasis, ("first a student, then an athlete"); men's dormitories and rising rents coming out of the state's self—liquidating clauses.

Also, the problems of under graduate counseling; and the shortcomings in the Honor system's structure concerning graduate students and women students.

Old business conducted by the SP membership at last night's meeting included the filling of a legislative vacancy in Dorm Men's IV. Jack Raper was elected to fill the vacancy.

New vacancies were announced in Town. Women's I and Dorm Men's II. These will be filled in two weeks, at the next SP meeting. A standing ovation was given to Jeannie Margaret Meador upon her resignation due to graduation. There is also one vacancy upon her advisory board which will be filled at the next meeting.

Appointments were made covering the Finance committee, the Social Committee and the Membership committee. The Chairmen are Denton Lotz, Dave Jones and Roger Foushee, respectively.

U.S. Should Define Long-Range Aims, Mrs. Roosevelt Asserts

By CURTIS GANS

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt said Sunday night that the United States could aid itself and the world if it would donate some of its surplus food to the underprivileged countries of the world.

Mrs. Roosevelt's talk was the last event in the two-day Collegiate Council for the United Nations conference held on the campus during the weekend. The speech was sponsored by the CCUN in conjunction with the Orange County chapter of the American Association for the United Nations.

She felt this aid should go with the help of the United Nations, because it was a fact, she explained that the nations that the U. S. gives aid to feel that the U. S. is going to take control of those nations. She added that these nations do not suspect the same thing of Russian aid.

In addition Mrs. Roosevelt thinks it necessary for the U. S. to define the long range aims of its foreign policy, pointing out that Russia has defined its aims quite clearly.

Freedoms

She said that the aims of the U. S. foreign policy should be to see that all peoples in the world have freedom of speech, thought, expression, and assembly.

Russia, she continued, can influence many of the uncommitteed and underprivileged nations by saying that the Russian nation has accomplished what it has in only 40 years. They further invite all people and provide the first three rows in the national theaters for guests from other countries, she reported.

Mrs. Roosevelt went on to add that the Russian people point with considerable pride to their free health services, and the fact that they all have jobs. However, she reflected they neglect to mention the fact that there is no choice involved.

She found that one of the questions most frequently asked of her while she was in Russia was, "In America does one family actually have a house to themselves."

Summit Meet

Explaining she would not favor a summit conference, until the groundwork was set up, she felt the U. S. must keep all avenues of communication open for peace.

On this subject she expressed the feeling that the Russian people earnestly want peace and look to the United Nations as something quite important, but she doubted that Nikita Khrushcev would be likely to give up anything that he wants. She expressed the feeling that negotiations with Khruschev would be difficult.

In defining Russia's aim in the Middle East as keeping a bridge open to Africa, she thought that this was where Russian hopes to exert influence.

"Russia can handle the dictatorships of the Middle East," she said, "but the Russian people might have difficulty with a democracy such as Israel."

Democracy Showcase

Mrs .Roosevelt felt that the U. S is the showcase of democracy to the world, and to win the uncommitted peoples of the world, two-thirds of which are not white, the U. S. must correct the inequalities that exist in the U. S.

Mrs. Roosevelt commented that the U. S. must not follow the Russian education system, but should straighten the education system that that exists especially in the primary and secondary levels.

Chorus & Symphony Orchestra To Present Concert Tonight

The UNC Music Department will present Honegger's "King David" tonight as the fall semester's final event in the Tuesday Evening Series. The concert will be given at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall and is open to public without charge.

Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor of music, will be musical director for the performance by the University Chorus, soloists and the University Symphony Orchestra.

Professor Earl Wynn, director of the University's Communications Center will appear in the role of narrator. He will provide the connecting links between the various musical episodes which recount the life of the psalmist David.

Jo Jurgensen will perform the incantation of the Witch of Endor. Vocal soloists for the occasion include Martha Fouse, soprano; Marilyn Zachau, contralto, and Gene Strassler, tenor.

The choral sections which form the backbone of the work will be performed by the University Chorus, under its permanent director, Dr. Wilton Mason, who for this occasion will also direct the University Symphony Orchestra.

Honegger was an unknown composer in 1921 when "King David" was first performed in a small Swiss village. This performance brought immediate recognition to the composer and since that time has become a standard part of choral repertoire. Tonight's performance will be the first presentation of it in Chapel Hill.

The 27 musical portions of the work alternate between solos, choruses, and orchestral interludes. For his narration Professor Wynn will use an English translation of the original text by Rene Morax.

Honor Council Set To Visit Coeds Tonight

Women's Honor Council members and past members will be present at house meetings in all women's dormitories and sororities Tuesday night at 11 o'clock to discuss the honor system with coeds.

According to Kit Whitehurst, chairman, the main purpose of these discussions is to give women students an increased awareness of their responsibility under the honor system.

The council members hope to clarify infomation concerning the composition of the council, the types of cases tried, the procedures used in investigations and trials, the types of penalties, and the responsibility of individuals in reporting infractions seen or suspected.

The Women's Honor Council is especially concerned about attitudes toward the Campus Code, which covers general behavior. In many cases, students are ignoring this phase of the honor system.

Also to be stressed are Honor Code infractions, which include lying, cheating, stealing, and fringe violations such as plagiarism and forgery.

Social rules covering lateness and signing out will also be discussed with the coeds.

It will be emphasized that ignorance of the rules is never a sufficient excuse for violations.

Following the talks, a question period will be held.

Possible Launching

BALTIMORE, Jan. 13-(AP)-The Army's Jupiter rocket will be used this week, probably Wednesday, in a second attempt to launch a U.S. earth satellite, the Baltimore Evening Sun said today.

Quoting a "usually well informed source," the paper said the decision to use the Jupiter was made when officials ruled that the rocket testing range at Cape Canaveral, Fla., should be made "available" this week to the Army, rather than the Navy.

There have been unconfirmed reports from Washington recently that another satellite launching attempt was scheduled for the Florida base this week, that it probably would come Wednesday, and that it presumably would be the second of the Navy's three-stage Vanguard rockets.

Evans Fears Hike In Dorm Rent Due To Housing Construction

Blazes Hit At Hospital, Local Home

By THE TAR HEEL STAFF

Two fires-one at Memorial Hospital and a second at a residence on Henderson Street—broke out within an hour of each other last night, but apparently neither was related to the recent rash of blazes here.

Officials said the first blaze occurred at 7:30 p. m. when a patient at the hospital set fire to clothing and bedcovering, then barricaded himself in his South Ward room on the second floor.

Less than an hour later, firemen answered a call to the W. P. Jordon residence at 215 Henderson St., where fire of undetermined origin burned a bureau and caused other slight damage in a second floor room.

Fire Chief J. S. Boone, said, however, that the blaze "probably" was started by a cigarette left burning on the bureau.

A spokesman for the University said the Memorial Hospital blaze was set by a psychiatric patient who had been under "constant-supervision" for the past week. His confinement ruled out the possibility that the patient was responsible for other recent blazes here, the spokesmann said.

Chief Boone said the patient broke open windows in his room, tore apart furniture and turned [illegible] ing the corner bathroom, then against the room door.

According to Boone, the patient refused to let firemen extricate him from the room, threatening potential rescuers and firemen with a pitcher.

The firemen burst through the door, Boone said ,and a resident doctor talked to the patient and made him release his weapon. Boone said the patient was about 20 years old.

Firemen said damage at both the hospital and the Jordon residence was slight.

Meanwhile, police reported no new development in their investigation of eight fires here Thursday and Friday. Both suspects in the blazes, believed to have been the work of an arsonist, have been released, police said.

Lucie Crossland, Dave Biren To Head Symposium Socials

By DAVIS YOUNG

Announcement has come from Sonny Hallford, chairman of the General Symposium, that Dave Biren and Lucie Crossland have been appointed co-chairman fo the Symposium's social and hospitality committee.

Biren comes from Arlington, Vr. and is a member of Chi Psi fraternity. Miss Crosslands makes her home in St. Petersburg, Fla. and is a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority.

The function of their committee can be divided into six categories. It is charged with providing transportation to and from transport depots where speakers will be arriving, making arrangements for their stay at the Carolina Inn, [illegible] ed, providing luncheons at the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn, arranging for luncheons and dinners at fraternities and sororities, seeing that guest speakers have hosts and guides for the duration of their stay.

The committee has had two meeting to date and another is planned immediately after the exam period. All preliminaries have been handled and the committee has now been divided into several sub-committees.

Co-chairman Biren gave the following statement to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday afternoon: "The work of the committee has progressed as far as it can go up to this point. Until final word is received from speakers, we can do no more.

"However, when confirmations from guests are received our work will increase. During the next semester, the co-operation of the committee will be needed to conclude our program."

Members of the committee aside from Biren and Miss Crosslands include: faculty advisor Edward L. Pianey of the Political Science [illegible] Charles Allsbrook, Charles Autrey, Elmo Ballance, Ann Crater, Ralph Cummings, Margaret Daughtridge and Sandy Dickinson.

Cabinet To Air Matter At Meeting

By DOUG EISELE

Student Body President Sonny Evans expressed the fear Monday that current construction of new dormitories would demand a substantial boost in rental fees at the University beginning next year.

He said that threat would be the leading topic for discussion tomorrow when student leaders held their regular monthly meeting with the Chancellor's cabinet.

"What we would like to know is whether the school is going to increase the cost of education commensurate with the growth of the University," Evans declared adding:

"We wonder if this burden be not placed on the student is not too great a one, in view of the principle on which the University was founded: that a higher education should be in the grasp of all those who want it."

Rent Goes Up

Evans, noting that "the whole campus rent goes up every time a new dorm is built," suggested that rental fees could be increased by $45 next year if former increases could be used as a yardstick for measuring the threatened hike.

"This whole practice to increase dorm rents every time you build a new dormitory is not a wise one and should be discussed," the student [illegible]

Honor Council Suspends One In Fraud Case

One student has been suspended and ten others placed on indefinite probation by the Men's Honor Council in connection with the recent excuse fraud, according to a statement from George Ragsdale, council chairman.

The student suspended from the University had turned himself in to the Honor Council. However, Ragsdale said the Council learned that the student had given false testimony to them concerning the number of excuses he had purchased and used.

The other ten students, who also turned themselves in, were placed on "indefinite probation, and will remain in such a status for one full semester, under normal conditions," Ragsdale said.

The investigation continues, Ragsdale reported and it will continue for some months.

Since the report of the council's investigation last appeared in The Daily Tar Heel, approximately 130 letters have been sent to instructors, he said.

Since that time, six more students have reported themselves to the Honor Council.

Hearings will resume immediately after exams, Ragsdale said.

The excuse fraud was made public during the Christmas holidays when Ragsdale issued a report to the press, saying that an "ex-student" at the University had been forging excuses like those given students by the Central Records office for excused absences.

The name of the "ex-student" was still withheld from publication.

IN THE INFIRMARY

The following students were reported in the infirmary yesterday:

Misses Susan Purser, Jeanne Fleming, Carolyn Beaty, and Lelia Hamlin, and Dieter Hudson, Don Gurley, William Brigman, Richard Robinson, David Welton, Valentin Rapelo, Julian Smith, James Shuford, and Joe Quigg.

Three One-Act Student Plays Slated By Carolina Playmakers This Week

Three new one-act plays by student playwrights are to be presented Thusday and Friday evenings at 7:30 in the Playmakers Theatre.

The annual introduction of new playwrights on campus is a tradition with the Carolina Playmakers begun under the leadership of Frederick H. Koch in the 1919-1920 season.

The list of playwrights since 1919 is an impressive one including such figures as the novelist Thomas Wolfe; Paul Green, whose dramatic compositions" In Abraham's Bosom" was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1936; Josephine Niggli, whose Mexican folk plays were published in 1938; Kai Jurgensen, Foster Fitz-Simons, and John W. Parker, who are currently on the staff of the Department of Dramatic Art.

Play Bill

The one-act plays are primarily handled by students of the DA Department, with student directors, designers, actors, and authors, under the supervision of a staff member.

The bill for Thursday and Friday will include "A White Butterfly," by Gabriela Roepke, of Santiago, Chile, directed by James Heldman, Durham with scenic designs by John Whitty, New Bern; "The Eternal Thread," by Gunsam Lee, of Seoul, Korea, directed by Albert Gordon, Greensboro, and designed by John Sneden, Teaneck, N. J.; and "Fairy Beauty," by George Hill, Jr., of Robinsville, under the direction of Rose Cristoff, Newark, N. J., with design by Taylor Williams, Dunn.

No admission charge is made for the bill of three plays.

Plans For The Probers

Well, we went before the Newspaper Research Committee yesterday and made several recommendations about operation of the Daily Tar Heel.

First, we held that the current method of selection of the editor—by popular election—is the only fair way, despite its shortcomings, to fill the top newspaper post.

Second, we proposed that a committee be set up to study circulation of the Tar Heel, pointing out the fact that we have a moral obligation, if not a constitutional one, to get the newspaper to all who are required to pay for it.

Third, we upheld salaries for posts of editor, managing editor and news editor as incentives to retain competent journalists in the most demanding, time-consuming jobs on the paper.

And fourth, we sounded out the need for a press camera for the newspaper along with other provisions needed in the processing of film and pictures for the Tar Heel.

Among our other recommendations were: revision of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board to exclude from its membership the editor of the Daily Tar Heel and of the Yackety Yack; and a program of cooperation and training with the journalism school to offer practical experience for students taking courses there.

Our reasons for popular selection of editor and for a revised circulation department already have been expressed. Too, we have explained reasons why journalism school students should be encouraged to work on the Tar Heel. We have not, as yet, commented on our other recommendations.

Concerning salaries, we feel that only through nominal compensation for the most responsible jobs on the paper can we find and then keep students who are interested in and know something about journalism. These people are required to be here every day; the work they do deserves much more than the pay they receive.

As for a camera for the Tar Heel, we feel that, in the long run, it will constitute a savings in expenses for photographs used by the newspaper. We now pay at least $2 per picture, when taken by a staff member or by the photo lab. If we had our own equipment we could take and process our own pictures at cost.

We suggested a revision of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board for obvious reasons: a sophomore or junior editor of the Tar Heel, seeking reelection, would, by virtue of his membership in the selections board, be a party to his own endorsement or rejection by that board. We do not feel that a candidate for the post should pass judgment on himself. And if he can't pass judgment on all who appear before the board, he doesn't belong there as a member.

Our recommendations will be among others accumulated by the research committee when it reports to the legislature next month. We feel they are good ones, and we hope that the legislature will look open-mindedly at them when it receives the committee report in February.

It is noteworthy to point out here that, nowhere in the course of our relationship with the committee, have we seen anyone suggesting that the editor be saddled in the performance of his job. No one has proposed that a limit be placed on his editorial expression.

So long as that attitude reigns on the campus, a lot of good stands to be gained from the hearings. The evil will come when attempts are made to limit the editor in his comments on current affairs.

Russia Appeals To Hunger

From among the many remarks made here this weekend by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, there remains one which, above all others, deserves repeating here.

Mrs. Roosevelt, discussing Russian appeal to backward nations of her (Russia's) key pitch in spreading communism is a comparison of the Red country before 1917 and that of today.

Is it not appealing to an economically poor, hunger-ridden nation approached by Russia that the Zaarland, under communism, has evolved from a poor agrarian society prior to 1917 to the heavily industrialized nation it is today?, Mrs. Roosevelt asked.

Well, it is appealing. And what we Americans fail to realize is that middle-of-the-road nations, caught in a squeeze between the East and the West, look with startling amazement upon the long strides forward made by the Kremlin since the Russian revolution.

They don't talk about freedom and individual rights and property ownership to the improverished nations of Europe and Asia. They talk about food and clothing, a house to live in—those desires innate in a people who live in starvation and nakedness, wandering wherever they can to secure the scant necessities of life.

In a nation free and prosperous since its birth we cannot draw similar comparisons, though our industrialization and standard of living surpasses that of Red countries. Our appeal is on the basis of individaul freedom and rights, which is the reason for our material advantages over the rest of the world.

But a starving people are in search of food for the body, not sustenance for the political mind. What we must do is compete with the Russians on their own level after altering foreign policy commensurate to the task.

Big Postal Hike: Poor Man Suffers

So now President Eisenhower has proposed that cost of first class letters—mailed out of town—be increased from three to five cents.

It would, he said, add some $600 million dollars to the coffers of the postal department.

Well, we didn't like it when General Summerfield first told Congress he was cutting off mail service unless he got an increased appropriation for his mail department. We still don't like the idea.

It's not being sentimental to say that even today some Americans have a hard time buying 4-cent stamps to send a letter. Delivery of the same is a basic American service, and we don't feel its cost should be boosted 40 per cent.

Hundreds of U.S. corporations use for advertising purposes—at a cost substantially below that required of pensioned widows whose only communication with their families is through the mails.

Yet it takes the same manpower, the same effort on the part of the postal department, to circulate advertising handouts as it does to deliver a first class letter. And many times the handouts hit the waste can before ever being opened.

The postal department was established as a service to the American people; it was, we feel, designed to assist the pocket book of the poor man, not to provide a means of advertisement for the rich.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

A Story About 2 Young Boys—And A Rocket

By WHIT WHITFIELD
SPECIAL TO THE DAILY TAR HEEL:

(On January 6 in the small Texas town of Hardeye, three teenage boys announced the successful firing of a home-made missile, appropriately named Atlast. The missile had soared 40 feet into the air, arched gracefully, then fallen to the earth, demolishing a new chicken coop. The boys, Melvin and Marvin ,aged 14, and Lyndon, 13, spoke in glowing terms of their project. Their mother, Mrs. Jonson, was also very helpful in making this special interview a success.)

Question: Mrs. Jonson, How did the boys become interested in building a rocket?

Answer: Their father was an atomic physicist working for the government in New Mexico before his death in 1952. They inherited their inquisitive natures from him I guess, and he also encouraged them to work in the small laboratory he built for them.

Q. Do they still have a laboratory?

A. No, they don't. My second husband is a retired businessman, and he thinks we should save our money so our boys will be able to go into business when they graduate from college.

Q. Well, then, Mrs. Jonson, where did the boys get the money to finance this project?

A. Their father left each one a sizeab'e amount to do research, but my husband persuaded me to save most of it. He's opposed to foolish spending you see.

Q. Boys, did you pool your resource to build this missile?

A. We each tried to build one to outs rip the other, but that didn't work. Neither of us could get one off the ground.

Q. Then you pooled your funds to build this one?

A. Yessir, but we quarreled about who was going to design it until mother stepped in and stopped us.

Q. Were you discouraged by the 40 foot flight of your first rocket?

A. Nossir, not at all. We could have done been better if we had had more money for fuel.

Q. What type of fuel did you use? Solid or liquid?

A. Liquid. Gas is a matter of fact. Our stepfather wouldn't let us use anything else. He said it was too expensive.

Q. Boys, what is going to be your next project?

A. Well, we'd like to send up a chicken on our second attempt, and then eventually send a rocket to the moon.

Q. What do you anticipate being the greatest problem in your future undertaking?

A. Well, we should be able to get along with our experiments without fighting if mother supervises, but getting money from our stepfather is almost impossible. He's pretty stingy with OUR money you know.

Thanks a lot, fellows. You too Mrs. Jonson. Good luck on your next rocket.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Freedom-A Challenge To The U.S.

By CURTIS GANS

There was an apparently insignificant and harmless item in Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's speech on Sunday night. On the surface it sounded funny.

However, underlying this item is the inherent danger in communism, and perhaps the possible downfall of communism.

Mrs. Roosevelt was describing her trip to Russia and noted as one of the points of interest, the nurseries where children are put after their 57th day of life, so that their mothers can go back to work.

She pointed out that Soviet vision is geared to the labor supply rather than the families and that is why this step is necessary. The Soviets, she said, were also out to prove that these children can be brought up without the family, perhaps because there is enough affection for children around to make the nursery a wholesome place.

But what was astonishing was the idea that these children were being reared in Pavlov's and Bechterev's conditioned response method. Hence ,these children were taught to do things that would bring them reward and avoid doing things that would bring them punishment. The net result was, from Mrs. Roosevelt's account, that these children were at the age of six months and one and one-half years human automatons.

They did exactly as they were taught; they did not deviate, and they took pleasure in doing these things. Furthermore, she noted that these children were perfectly happy and healthy.

The net picture is one of complete domination of the human mind, for the child has learned to act at all times reflexively. There has been at no time between the time the child was 57 days old to the time that he attains manhood and after, that the child has been free to think or act. He is at adulthood a walking and talking tool of anyone who would want to lead him.

What is frightening in this picture is the spectacle of total control of mankind. These are not human children; they are machines. When they attain adulthood, they are not humans, they are tools.

The net result is that before long the leaders in Russia may have total control over their subjects, and their subjects may be entirely helpless without their leaders.

If there is any picture that should cause the American to reflect and to see how high a premium there should be paid for the freedom of thought and action that is inherent to democracy, this picture of the coming age in Russia should.

This picture should show to the American, indeed to all the people of the free world, exactly what freedom is worth, and exactly what a country is without such freedom.

It must be noted that Russia has gained much in the forty years of the communist regime, but these gains were made not by choice, or human resourcefulness, but by forcing certain things upon a people who gradually learned that there is no such thing as choice.

The U. S. may be soon fighting a one minded nation. The resources of this country must be used not only to protect the individual in the U. S., but to acquaint the peoples of Russia that although they do not have it at present, there is a choice.

There is a difficulty in the Russian method. The succession of leaders will be difficult, if they have only tools instead of men. For these men will know how to react to given circumstances, but faced with something knew, they will not have the resource of creative thought to get them out of the predicament.

Yet, it will be a long time from this day to that, and in between these times, on the U. S. rests the burden of leading the world and acquainting them with the true meaning of liberty. If not, the human race, as human beings, will become extinct, and that new breed of automations will take over.

Nikita Khrushchev said to Mrs. Roosevelt that none of the efforts of the free world will help, and that world communism is the coming thing. The U. S. can try to put some doubts in Mr. Khruschev's mind.

LETTERS TO EDITOR:

Israeli Corrections

To The Editor:

Miss Waite makes a number of statements in her letter in today's Daily Tar Heel which require correction.

The refugees left their homes during, and as a result of, the 1948 hostilities. It is remembered by everybody, with the exception of Arabs, that the 1948 war was started by the Arab states with the express intention of nullifying the UN resolution to establish the State of Israel. I would say, therefore, that the refugee exodus was caused directly by the Arabs.

Israel has consistently declared herself willing to compensate the refugees for their property, as part of a peace settlement with any one or all Arab states. Israel has continually offered to start peace negotiations but the Arab states have steadfastly refused to negotiate with her (to the extent of assassinating King Abdullah of Jordan when he was suspected of secret peace talks with Israel). Instead, the Arab states have instituted a shipping blockade, an economic boycott and guerilla warfare against Israel, and have reiterated their intention of destroying Israel by force as soon as they can. (For the most recent of these threats see Newsweek of January 13, 1958). Miss Waite's statement of Israel's unwillingness to compensate the refugees is simply untrue.

It is surprising that anyone should claim that the 6,000,000 odd Arabs are incapable of absorbing refugees in a number not exceeding that which smaller Israelis have absorbed in the last ten years. Are we to believe that nations with the richest oil fields in the world, nations who receive aid indiscriminately from both the US and Russia, should be incapable of even this? After all the propaganda of Arab brotherhood and unity that has been heard for years, one would expect some Arab cooperation in helping their kindred—and yet Miss Waite takes issue with Abba Eban for considering "Arabdom" as a whole in this issue.

The truth is, as many Arabs will admit, that the refugee problem continues to exist because they wish to solve it by one means only, annihilation of Israel and its resettlement by the refugees. The plight of the refugees is used by Arab propagandists as a sordid means of appeal to humanitarian feelings in the world for support in their campaign against Israel. It is unfortunate that some people of goodwill are taken in by this unscrupulous propaganda, just as others have fallen for Communist "peace" movements.

I was sorry to see that Mr. Ganz (DTH, January 9, 1958) misunderstood Ambassador Eban who did not say that the refugee problem was the main source of Middle Eastern friction. The basic cause of this unrest is the Arabs' violent hatred of Israel and all other Western nations and institutions. If the Arabs ever put the solution of the refugee problem before their blind urge to destroy Israel, they could negotiate a peace settlement with Israel and obtain help and compensation for resettlement of the refugees.

K. E. GABRIEL

P.S. One should not be misled by Miss Waite's glib statements of historical and statistical "facts." An example of the reliability of her information which amused me, a professional population statistician from Israel, was her quotation from the 1956 Census—as there has been no population census in Israel since November 1948.

Only One Side Heard

The Daily Tar Heel

Dear Miss Elizabeth C. Waite:

I hardly know in what language to express my gratitude to you for the spirit you have shown in your letter concerning Abba Eban's speech. Many people have heard only one side of the story and are not acquainted with the existing conditions in the Arabic countries. It is refreshing to discover an informed individual who has an understanding of this crucial problem. I thank you again for what you have done.

With deepest appreciation,
(Mr.) AWNI MOHAMAD HAMAD

Khruschev Attacked

To The Editor:

I think congratulations are in order for that double-dealing Dean of Duplicity, Nikita Khruschev. The man has become more adept at his diabolical brand of diplomacy with each passing day. In looking over his administration, it becomes evident that what he has been doing is playing for time. When he first gained control he filled the air with talk of peaceful co-existence; Comrade Stalin was wrong in many things, said he; our two societies can live side-by-side in the same world, quothed our new-found friend. This was followed by the Geneva talks, then, the long dragged-out London Conference.

In the meantime, things were happening behind the scenes. While the "Kremlin Kids" talked of competition between the West and East in culture and trade, they spent their money in education and scientific-military research.

And when successes came, so did belligerent threats come likewise—in increasing amounts. Until now, their present talk of peace stands as an open mockery when it is viewed next to their recent manifesto (proclaiming their intention to spread their system over the world by whatever means necessary).

The Russians have lifted the veil now, and the challenge isn't trade and cultural, but decidedly military.

One fellow I go to school with told me, "If war ever comes, I'll join the army right away!" But the war has come. We know now that anytime we lag behind in the race for military supremacy, we should expect an ultimatum to surrender or face annihilation. Yes, the war has come—and, the army is being forgot. It's an army of scientists, engineers, technicians, and teachers. This army is America's hope of reclaiming Red—and this is the army we are urged to join.

NSA Leaders From Five Colleges Study Integration At Meeting Here

By PARKER MADDREY

Student leaders from five campuses favored a southwide conference of the National Student Association next fall to undertake the problem of integration in universities and colleges. Thirty students and religious leaders discussed plans for such a conference at a seminar here Saturday.

Major question was what would be the purpose of the proposed conference. Opinions were expressed that it should be a problem solving and case study group taking positive action rather than a discussion meeting.

One delegate viewed that though the proposed conference might not take positive action ,the discussions would "enlighten student leaders attending who would spread the light" to their campuses.

Evans Is Moderator

No vote was taken on any subjects proposed at the meeting which was to hear opinions from the group. Moderator Sonny Evans of UNC asked the delegates to speak "freely" and "frankly" their opinions which were to be included in a report to the NSA.

In the opinion of one delegate, the proposed conference should not take a stand on the integration issue as it would "defeat the problem." Another student added, however, that the conference should have "some stand as how to solve the problem.

"Problem solving would deal with studies of Southern campuses integrated as to what preparations were made for the admission of Negroes, Evans, said. The reports from these studies "would provide ideas to other campuses which plan integration.

Suggested Meeting Sites

A Tennessee campus was suggested as a probable meeting place for the conference. Integrated Springfield College at Mobile, Ala. was also suggested. It was discussed that the Deep South would be "nil" and that North Carolina, Virginia and Texas are too far for most delegates.

Holding the conference at a Negro campus was thought "unwise as it would scare away Deep Southern delegates."

NSA Head Attends

Ray Farabee, from the University of Texas and president of NSA, opened the discussion. He said that work began three years ago to organize a Southern NSA conference that "work out solutions to the integration problem in order to avoid such tragedies as in Little Rock and the University of Alabama."

This was the fourth meeting in the South to discuss the proposed conference. Representatives were from UNC, East Carolina College, North Carolina College, Davidson and Sweet Briar colleges. Campus groups represented included YMCA, Newman Club, Hillel, Wesley Foundation and Baptist Student Union.

Dorm Rent

money for the projects, and students repay the loans through rental on all dormitories on the campus.

Evans said the student leaders also will point out the "insufficiency" of a "2,500 allotment per roomer prescribed by the budget commission in Raleigh for dormitories here. Under the plan, a dorm for 200 students would be limited in cost to $500,000.

"This is not sufficient to allow us to build adequate dormitory facilities, if you believe that a dormitory should be more than a place to get in out of the rain," Evans said.

Parking Problem

A second problem which student leaders will discuss at the meeting is that of the "parking situation," Evans said. He said the office of the Dean of Student Affairs is understaffed to carry out duties now demanded of it.

"Because their time is monopolized by the parking situation they are not able to perform other services which I think are necessary," Evans commented.

Specifically, Evans asked, will it be possible for student government to obtain part of the money from on-campus parking violations—now going to the city although details are given by University paid and hired policemen—"for the purpose of taking the burden of administration of the parking problem off the hands of the dean's office?"

Concern for defense needs seemed to be tempering the customary demands for budget cutting, even though this is the biggest budget yet for a peacetime year.

However, a number said there would have to be a close scrutiny: to see whether the budget is truly in line with needs, whether its bare balance between income and outgo comes too close to red ink financing, and whether various non-defense items should not be cut—or increased, in some instances.

ROBERT B. SAVIN
To Speak On Employment

Talk On Jobs Set Thursday

Robert B. Savin of the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company will speak here Thursday 8 p. m., at Gerrard Hall to seniors and graduate students on job possibilities and getting a job.

This will be the second career meeting of the school year and is being sponsored by the two business fraternities, Delta Sigma Pi and Alpha Kappa Psi, and the Placement Service. All graduating students interested in finding employment after graduation or military service are invited to attend.

Savin has been active in college-business recruiting activities since 1946 when he became placement director of Carnegie Tech in Pittsburgh. In 1950 he resigned to join the personnel division of Minnesota Mining and Maufacturing Company, where he now is.

Earlier Savin worked as program coordinator with NBC, and during World War II he served as a lieutenant commander in the Navy. He is a native of Philadelphia and a graduate of Pennsylvania State University.

Covering The Campus

SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY

The Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society will hold its 541st meeting in Phillips Hall tonight at 7:30.

Speakers on the program will be Dr. Charles E. Jenner of the Zoology Dept. and Dr. William A. White of the Geology Dept. Dr. Jenner will discuss "Social Behavior in Marine Mud Snails: A Summer's Research at the Marine Biological Laboratory, the Ideal University." "The Origin of the Florida Lakes" will be the subject of Dr. White's paper.

PUBLICATIONS BOARD MEETING

The Publications Board will meet this afternoon at 4 p. m. at Graham Memorial in Roland Parker 1.

PHYSICS COLLOQUIM

The Physics Colloquim will meet Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 p. m. in Room 250 of Phillips Hall. Milton Kabler will speak on "Properties of Single Crystals of Silver Halides."

Tea will be served at 4:10 p. m. in Room 204.

MUSIC SOCIETY

The Southeastern chapter of the American Musicological Society will meet Wednesday at 8 p. m. in Hill Hall. Dr. Robert W. Linker, professor of Romance languages, will speak on "Fifteenth Century French Chansonniers." All who are interested have been invited to attend.

[illegible] regional vice president of United Cerebral Palsy Assoc., Inc., Southern Region, and Mrs. B. V. Kimrick of Salisbury, President United Cerebral Palsy of North Carolina, Inc., to Charles E. Flowers, M. D., Medical School, Department of Obstetrics, UNC.

The grant is part of the Foundation's overall research program for which nearly $3,000,000 has been allocated since the organization was founded in 1938.

Dr. Flowers, of the University staff, is conducting a study of the relationships of anesthesia and analgesic agents and obstetrical complications upon fetal oxygenation and respiratory status at birth.

This clinical study, involving carefully controlled observations on obstetrical patients at delivery, is designed to take advantage of the improved knowledge of modern techniques of obstetrics. Data on the amount and kind of anesthesia administered are correlated with the oxygen available to the infant's brain during and after birth.

School Of Education Adds Specialist To Offer Courses On Handicapped

A specialist in the education of teachers of handicapped children has been added to the School of Education, Chancellor William B. Aycock has announced.

Robert B. Hughes, who is completing his Ph.D. degree at the University of Illinois, will join the UNC faculty on Feb. 27, to teach courses in special education for teachers during the spring semester.

The School of Education is expanding its offerings to teachers in special education, Dean Arnold Perry announced. She will give particular attention to courses for teachers in the fields of speech correction and education of the mentally handicapped.

More general courses will help teachers who work with children classified as deaf, hard-of-hearing, partially-seeing, [illegible] or spastic, Perry added.

Miss Billie Plumlee, an experienced therapist, will join the School of Education staff for the summer session to assist with certain areas of the work which will be under the general direction of Hughes.

Dean Perry said that the University has long sought competent personnel to expand the special education program and feels that the State is fortunate in attracting two of the most promising specialists available to train teachers to educate the 30,000 handicapped public school pupils in North Carolina.

In addition to work on the University campus, Hughes will teach courses in Charlotte and other centers as occasion demands.

For the spring semester his courses in Chapel Hill will include a Saturday morning course designed especially for employed teachers and prospective teachers in the field of special education.

Hughes, a native of Three Rivers, Mich., possesses training and experience in the fields of special education and psychology. His bachelor's and master's degrees were earned at the University of Washington in Seattle.

He is currently completing requirements for the Ph.D. degree at the University of Illinois where his doctoral thesis in the area of speech and hearing will be presented in January.

Hughes has taught in high schools and at Montana State College and the University of Illinois where he was a research associate in the Institute for the Study of Exceptional Children.

He and Mrs. Hughes and their three children will move to Chapel Hill late this month.

Biography Of Former UNC Student Set For Publication This Month

"Magnificent Missourian," the life story of Thomas Hart Benton, has been completed by Elbert B. Smith, and will be published on Jan. 22 by J. B. Lippincott Company.

Thomas Hart Benton was born near the village of Hillsboro, in the North Carolina piedmont. He left home in January, 1798, to enroll at UNC. The university was only four years old, and had a student body of 40.

He joined the Philanthropic Society, only to be expelled by unanimous vote in 1799. Twenty-eight years later, the Society passed a resolution that "Thomas H. Benton be readmitted a member of our Society" and that "a certificate stating the same, signed by the President and Secretary be transmitted to Mr. Benton."

In 1801, when he was 19, Benton went to Tennessee with his widowed mother and family. He was destined to make still another move to Missouri, in 1815, and to become the great spokesman for Jacksonian Democracy, serving in the U. S. Senate for thirty year.

He was the very personification of noisy, brawling, egotistical America in its great age of growing pains. He created and led most of the land, tariff, debt, currency, banking, expansion, and foreign policies which made up the program of the Democratic Party for almost two decades.

He played a leading role between the North and the South using all the force and influence of a fighter and a scholar to keep the country together. He was a significant factor in the shaping of our national politics and economics.

Elbert B. Smith has an A.B. degree from Maryville College, Tennessee, and a Ph.D. from the University of Chicago, where Benton was the subject of his doctoral dissertation. "My interest in him and the political, social, and personal philosophy he represents has grown through the years," says Professor Smith. "The book was a labor of love."

Professor Smith recently assumed the position of associate professor of history at Iowa State College, after serving on the faculty of Youngstown University, Ohio, for eight years. He has been a participant in, and a director of a seminar program on foreign policy for the State Department, as well as a visiting Fulbright lecturer.

Maryland Outscrapped; Carolina Couldn't Hit

Carolina was outscrapped in College Park, Md. Saturday night but that wasn't the only reason the Tar Heels suffered their second defeat of the season. They couldn't hit.

The Tar Heel's 30.2 shooting accuracy was subnormal. They were equally inefficent at the free throw line. They had long periods of shooting lapses when they couldn't buy a basket and the Terps cashed in on these breaks to build up a big lead.

This is not to detract from the Terps great victory. Indeed, they played fine basketball and and it was obvious from the outset that the College Park club wanted badly to win it.

There is consolation, however, in the fact that the Tar Heels aren't likely to have many nights as cold as Saturday. Things would have been a great deal closer had Carolina been able to hit with any degree of consistency. The players feel that things will be different when the Terps invade Chapel Hill. We'll have to go along with that in lieu of the poor showing Saturday night.

Poor Sportsmanship By Terp Fans

Maryland was the recipient of the Atlantic Coast Conference sportsmanship award last season. The crowd in Cole Stadium Saturday night made this award look like a farce. Frankly and plainly, the crowd stunk out the place.

This is not sour grapes either. We don't think the Tar Heels are beyond criticism. Nor are we so used to the warm ovation the team gets in Woollen Gym as to quirk at the first boo away from home. But the fans in Maryland were downright sickening.

They booed and stamped their feets when the Tar Heels shot fouls. They booed Frank McGuire when he was introduced before the game. In fact, they booed everything the Chapel Hillians did.

The most unfair gesture of all, however, was the way they taunted Bob Cunningham after he pushed Maryland's Charlie McNeil as McNeil went up for a layup. McNeil fell into the basket support. Bob immediately went up and apologized to him then a second later apologized to McNeil again while he was on the foul line. The fans paid no attention to this, however, and they made things miserable for Bob the rest of the way although McNeil shrugged it off and was willing to forget it.

May we offer this plea right now. Let's leave that type sportsmanship to Maryland and treat them respectfully as we have all other teams this season in Woollen Gym.

Case Thinks Home Court Is Advantage

It was our pleasure Sunday morning to have breakfast with N. C. State Coach Everett Case in the Washington Airport. The man who brought basketball to North Carolina, along with his assistant and former player Vic Bubas, scouted the Carolina-Maryland game.

"Maryland has a fine club," Case commented," but you have to consider that Carolina was off. I don't particularly relish the idea of meeting either one," he laughed.

Case's Wolfpack lost to Duke in two overtimes Saturday afternoon and Case and Bubas had to really hustle to make it to Maryland. "I'd rather lose by 15 or 20 points than suffer through games like that one," Case averred. "It was real tough."

The Wolfpack mentor also reiterated his belief that the home court makes a difference. "Look at the ACC games yesterday (Saturday)," he said. South Carolina beat Clemson at Columbia. Wake Forest beat Virginia in Winston and Duke and Maryland won at home. There's certainly an advantage in playing at home."

New Scoring Rule Is Good Thing

The new scoring rule in college football whereby a team gets two points if it runs or passes for the "goal after touchdown" and one if it kicks should provide for more interesting football next season.

There has been very little opposition to the new ruling. Most coaches feel that it will help to eliminate so many tie games and that is something football has needed for a long time. The strain will be on the man who has to decide whether to go for the almost sure point after kick or shoot for two early in the game.

Exams Mean Slow Week For Sports

By RUSTY HAMMOND

With final exams only a week away, students at Carolina will find the sports schedule until then very meager, to say the last.

The main event of this week will be Wednesday night when Everette Case brings his N. C. State Wolfpack to Chapel Hill to face the twice beaten Tar Heels. Carolina will be seeking to get off to a good start on the comeback trail against this traditional rival after losing to Maryland at College Park last Saturday night. State lost to Duke in two overtimes the same day. The red-hot Tar Babies will meet the State Wolflets in the preliminary.

Swim Meet Thursday

Thursday the undefeated swimming team will meet the State College tankmen here in Chapel Hill. The mermen haven't even shown a sign of a weak spot so far, but this may be their toughest test yet.

Saturday the feature attraction will be the varsity basketball tilt against Clemson Tigers. Although the contest will be held at Clemson, Tar Heel fans can watch the game on regional television at 2:00.

Wrestling Saturday

Also on Saturday both the freshman and varsity wrestling teams will be in action. Both face Virginia Military Academy at Chapel Hill.

After this week, both athletes and students alike will bury themselves under an avalanche of textbooks and notes. The athletes will emerge again Jan. 30 when the freshman basketballers meet Duke at Durham. On Saturday, Feb. 1, national champions spring back into action as they journey to Columbia to battle the South Carolina Gamecocks. Whether or not the students will emerge at all is the big question.

The Week's Schedule

Wednesday: Varsity basketball vs. N. C. State; frosh basketball vs. N. C. State.

Thursday: Varsity swimming vs. N. C. State.

Football Drills Open Here On February 10

The Carolina Tar Heel football squad will begin its all-important football drills here Feb. 10, according to Coach Jim Tatum.

The Tar Heels, who finished the season with a 6-4 record and wins over such teams as Miami, Navy, Duke and Clemson, will hold sessions each Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday with the intra-squad game on Saturday, March 15.

The team is allowed twenty drill sessions. The 20th will be the annual Blue-White game Kenan Stadium.

Injuries Total 50

WINSTON-SALEM Jan. 13 (AP-At least 50 persons were injured here today in accidents attributed to a freezing rain-14 of them when a city bus skidded and hit a stone wall.

At least three of those hurt in the bus wreck sustained fractures.

Hospitals were jammed with victims from this and other accidents and police were hard pressed to get to any but the worst of the wrecks.

Every ambulance in town was reported at a wreck scene at one time during the morning.

SCORING RULE EFFECT

Little Wants Goal Posts Moved

ATLANTA, Jan. 13 (AP)—The one, two-point-after-touchdown football rule change today prompted Lou Little, former Columbia University coach, to pledge a renewed fight for moving the goal posts to the goal line.

The chairman of the National Football Coaches Assn., said the new conversion rule, one point if kicked, two points if scored by running or passing came as a complete surprise to him. It had not even been mentioned when he left Fort Lauderdale, Fla., site of the rules meetings over the weekend, he explained.

Was Observer

He had been there - as observer for the coaches association - he declared he would have stood out for incorporation of the goal post change.

"Then," he argued, "we would have had good balanced -running kicking and passing."

He pointed out that he had stood out for return of the goal posts to the goal line ever since they were moved 10 yards back in 1932. Now, more than ever, he added, he favors the goal post shift.

50 years at Columbia

Little, at Columbia 50 years as player and coach, declined to speculate specifically how the conversion changes would affect the game. He conceded it will creat a lot of interest the making point-after no longer a stereotype play.

Little stopped in Atlanta enroute to Gainesville, Ga., to address the Touchdown Club there.

'Fair' — Tatum

Coach Jim Tatum of Carolina said he though the rules committee "did a wonderful job." He said he did not know how the new extra point conversion rule would work out, but "it's as fair to one team as another."

Tatum, a member of the rules committee of the National Coaches Assn. said the changes were "given real consideration" by the coaches' committee and a majority "wanted to do something about the extra point."

Baby For Joe

DODGEVILLE, Wis., Jan. 13 (AP)—Milwaukee Braves's first baseman Joe Adcock became the father of an eight-pound, three-ounce son born yesterday at St. Joseph's Hospital.

It was the first child for the Adcocks who have been living here during the off-season. Mrs. Adcock is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell James of Dodgeville.

Myers Withdraws Name From Texas A&M List

The coach of Navy, Eddie Erdelatz, was flying to College Station for an interview concerning the job.

time. When Mr. Eisenhower [illegible] the air with talk of peaceful co-existence; Georgie Stalin was wrong in many things, said he; our two societies can live side-by-side in the same world, quashed our new-found friend. This was followed by the Geneva talks, then, the long-dragged-out London Conference.

In the meantime, things were happening behind the scenes. While the "Kremlin Kids" talked of competition between the West and East in culture and trade, they spent their money in education and scientific-military research.

And when successes came, so did belligerent threats come likewise—in increasing amounts. Until now, their present talk of peace stands as an open mockery when it is viewed next to their recent manifesto (proclaiming their intention to spread their system over the world by whatever means necessary).

The Russians have lifted the veil now, and the challenge isn't trade and cultural, but decidedly military.

One fellow I go to school with told me, "If war ever comes, I'll join the army right away!" But the war has come. We know now that anything we lag behind in the race for military supremacy, we should expect an ultimatum to surrender or face annihilation. Yes, the war has come—and, the army is being formed. It's an army of scientists, engineers, technicians, and teachers. This army is America's hope of remaining free—and I am in the army we are urged to join.

Tar Heels Seeking Comeback Tonight; Meet Wolfpack 5 In Woollen Contest; Seeking 24th Consecutive Win At Home

PRESIDENT FRIDAY
. . . getting ready to move

Consolidated Offices To Move This Week

Consolidated University offices, now in South Building, will be moved some time this week into new quarters in the former Institute of Government Bldg. on East Franklin St.

The building, except for minor work, is ready for occupation. The cost of remodeling the building was around $40,000.

The offices of President William Friday, Vice Presidents W. M. Whyburn and W. D. Carmichael Jr. and Business Manager A. H. Shepard will be transferred from the first floor of South Building to the new offices across from Graham Memorial.

Chancellor William Aycock's office will remain in South Building as will other UNC administrators. The offices being vacated by Consolidated University officials will be occupied by members of the UNC administration.

Chancellor Aycock's new home on Country Club Road, which is being renovated by the University, is expected to be ready in about two weeks.

No date has been set as yet for the opening of the Ackland Art Museum, but the interior will be finished by the end of January. At least two more months will be required for landscaping the grounds.

Committee Winds Up Hearings

The Newspaper Research Committee concluded its series of open hearings Monday with its second meeting.

During a four and one half hour session the committee got the opinions of five students on such matters as the endorsement of an editorial candidate by a political party and recalling the editor.

The committee also asked what the students thought the relationship should be among The Daily Tar Heel and the School of Journalism, the University administration and the student government.

The students were also queried on what they thought was the best way to select the editor, what the editor's responsibility should be and what salaries the editor and the other members of the staff should be paid.

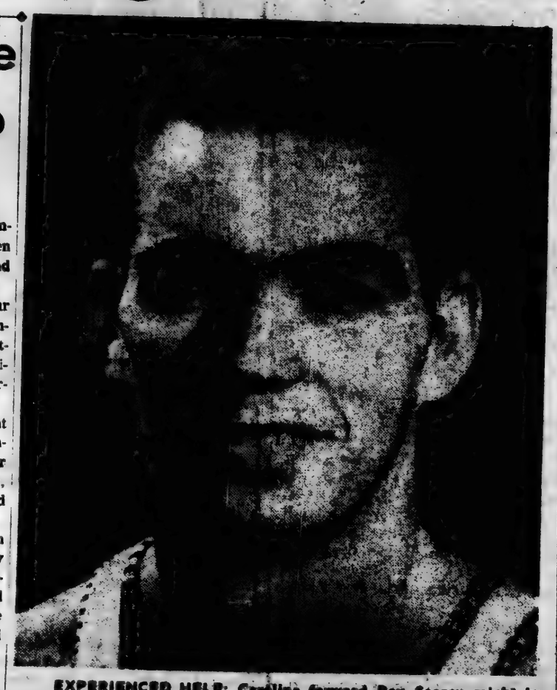
CLOSED SESSION

Those testifying asked to present any other points they might want to make about the paper. The committee will meet in a closed session to draw up the report which it will submit to the publications board.

Three members of The Daily Tar Heel who appeared before the committee were: Doug Eisele, editor; Miss Mary Alys Voorhees, managing editor; Syd Shuford, circulation manager and University Party Chairman; and Pringle Pipkin, reporter.

Tom Lambeth, acting director of Graham Memorial, also testified. He was a former member of the paper and was a candidate for editor in 1956.

Speaking first, Pipkin suggested the problem of selection centered around the lack of an adequate training system for the staff members and that the paper should put more effort into recruiting.



Eisele said the trouble with the present system of selecting the editor is that he in not tested until after he has been in ofice. However, he said it would be rather hard to find a better method than the present one.

He suggested strengthening the power of the present Selections Board and said he should not be on a selections board which would judge him should he run for re-election.

NEEDS CAMERA

To improve the newspaper he said it needed a camera for its own use and should have first priority on

5500 Expected To See Case-McGuire Clash

By BILL KING

The masterminds of the Atlantic Coast Conference come head to head tonight in Woollen Gym and what will transpire is anybody's guess.

It's the Carolina Tar Heels and the N. C. State Wolfpack in their second meeting of the season at 8 o'clock and only coaches Frank McGuire and Everett Case plus their respective charges have any idea what's going to happen.

The two master strategists, generally conceded the fathers of modern ACC basketball, will lock horns in a battle of wits and a capacity crowd of over 5,500 is expected to be on hand for this traditional and rivalry-ridden fiasco.

State Seeks Revenge

For the Wolfpack, the cry is revenge. The Tar Heels whipped the Raleigh club, 39-30 in the finals of the Dixie Classic in late December. The score was an exact indication of "what happened" in that contest and it was only one of many times that McGuire and Case have matched wits in their long rivalry. Both clubs used stalled-down, ball-control tactics in the Classic finals, but

Rape Case

WINSTON-SALEM, Jan. 14. (AP)—Judge Allen H. Gwyn signed an order in Forsyth Superior Court today sending a High Point Negro charged with raping the wife of an assistant basketball coach at Wake Forest College to a mental institution for observation.

Charles Moore was ordered taken to the state hospital at Goldsboro for observation for a period not to exceed 30 days. Judge Gwyn issued the order on motion of attorneys for Moore.

Moore is charged with raping Mrs. Al DePorter, 25, Dec. 13. He was working at a service station and was riding back to the station with Mrs. DePorter when the alleged attack occurred.

Moore's attorneys argued last week that Moore did not have the Debt Limit

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14. (AP)—The Administration asked today for a five-billion-dollar increase in the national debt limit, to 280 billions.

The first reaction in Congress pointed to approval, as a matter of regretful necessity in view of the ever-climbing costs of national defense.

The debt has already pressed to within less than 750 million dollars of the present 275-billion limit.

Chairman Mills (D-Ark) and Rep. Reed (R-NY) of the House Ways and Means Committee introduced a bill to carry out the request from the treasury for the lifting of the ceiling.

Race Relations

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Jan. 14. (AP)—Race relations have worsened in the South in the past year, says Tuskegee Institute, and realistic action is imperative "if serious difficulties are to be avoided in the near future."

But some progress was made toward peaceful settlement of differences, notably in actions taken by the Federal Government, President L. H. Foster said today in the famed Negro college's annual race relations report.

All branches of the government "made clear," the report observed, "that American citizens must receive treatment which is racially non-discriminatory in education, transportation, recreation, voting and employment.

Nevertheless, Foster said, "Race relations in the southern states are in a more unsettled and disturbed status than a year ago. The divergent segregationist and desegregationist points of view are held more resolutely now than in the recent past."

Space Age

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14. (AP)—The House agreed today to vote tomorrow on a $548,226,000 authorization bill for emergency Space Age defenses.

Prompt clearance by the House Rules Committee was expected for the legislation, which came to Congress only a week ago. It is part of President Eisenhower's request for $1,280,000,000 in supplemental defense funds for the fiscal year ending June 30.

Meanwhile both the House and Senate continued their investigations of U. S. progress in the ballistic missiles field in the light of recent Russian advances.

2 On Faculty Are Promoted By Trustees

The Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees Monday approved the promotion in rank of two faculty members, Harvey Smith and Walter L. Smith.

The promotions were included in a report submitted by Chancellor William Aycock to the committee and approved by the committee.

Harvey Smith, of the Sociology and Anthropology Dept., was promoted from associate professor to full professor.

Walter L. Smith, of the Dept. of Statistics, was reappointed and promoted from assistant professor to associate professor.

CHANGES

Included in the report were the following personnel changes:

1) Leaves of absence. Carlyle James Pravey, associate professor of the School of Library Science, was granted a leave of absence for the fall semester, 1958-59, to complete work on his doctor's Carolina comes into the contest with an 11-2 record on the season and a 4-1 mark in conference competition. Its only other loss was to West Virginia. State has lost to South Carolina and Duke, the latter a 76-75 double overtime thriller Saturday.

Everyone Gets Into The Act During Plays

Student playwrights, directors, designers and actors will share the spotlight Thursday and Friday evening at 7:30 when three new one-act plays are presented in the Playmakers' Theater.

The plays will be primarily handled by students of the Dramatic Arts Dept. under the supervision of a staff member.

The presentation of student written plays is a tradition on campus. It was begun under the leadership of Frederick H. Koch in the 1919-20 season.

The list of playwrights since 1919 include novelist Thomas Wolfe; Pulitzer Prize winner Paul Green, and three current DA staff members, Kai Judgenson, Foster Fitz-Simons and John W. Parker.

The two night bill will include "A White Butterfly," by Gabriela Roepke, Santiago, Chile; "The Eternal Thread," by Gun-am Lee, Seoul, Korea; and "Fairy Beauty," by George Hill, Jr., Robinsonville.

Director and designer of "Fairy Beauty" are Rose Cristoff, Newark, N. J., and Taylor Williams, Dunn.

No admission charge will be made.

U. S. Military Investing Funds In Scientific Research At UNC

The U. S. military is investing heavily in science research at Carolina. Some are projects of long standing; some have come following Sputnik and President Eisenhower's new science emphasis.

Sought by CNC physicists, chemists, mathematicians and statisticians are findings in connection with projects which include the following:

1. Rockets, including intercontinental guided missiles, the basic statistical research on which has been done at Chapel Hill.
2. Cosmic ray research.
3. Research in high temperatures—and efects on metals.
4. Research in low temperatures.
5. Gravity research.
6. A special program for training high school science and mathematics teachers.

Those half a dozen programs are but a few of the laboratory projects on which scientists at the University are working in this age of artificial satellites and stepped-up preparedness in areas of defense.

Ilncluded in backers of the research here are the U. S. Air Force, Army Ordnance, Atomic Energy Commission, the U. S. Navy, and the National Science Foundation, a federal agency.

The NSF is granting half a million dollars this year and next year to pay for the concentrated training of 101 high school math and science teachers, 51 this year and 50 next year.

Besides this, summer programs for high school and college teachers of sciences and mathematics are being financed by the federal government.

The University is one of 17 colleges and universities taking part in this significant program. Besides the course now going on, two similar summer programs were conducted here last summer.

The Institute for National Sciences under direction of Kenan Professor Arthur Roe is sponsor of the Chapel Hill program, and Professor E. C. Markham is director.

An account of what the UNC Department of Statistics is doing in basic computations in development of guided missiles and H-bomb carrying planes now can be brought up to date to show that statisticians in Phillips Hall are working with the military and other scientists at White Sands Proving Ground in New Mexico and at Patrick Air Force Base in Florida. Basic statistical work on "The Matador" and the B-52 globe-circling H-bomber was performed at UNC.

GM SLATE

Panhellenic Council, 5-6 p.m., Grail Room; Jehovah's Witnesses, 7:30-9:30 p.m., Roland Parker 1; Forum, 4-6 p.m., Roland Parker 2; GM Board, 4-6 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room.

Sugg Chosen To Head State Executive Group

Bill Sugg of UNC was elected to head the state executive committee for the Collegiate Council for the United Nations (CCUN) at a conference here last weekend.

Sugg, who also is chairman of the local CCUN, was in charge of the conference here that was attended by around 30 delegates representing 15 colleges in North Carolina. He is a junior from Winston-Salem.

"It was a very successful weekend," Sugg said. He commented that interest in the United Nations and the CCUN was high at the conference, and he believed the goal of the conference had been accomplished.

This goal was to try to organize CCUN groups on other state campuses and to set up a state committee that would coordinate CCUN projects and programs.

This state CCUN executive committee, headed by Sugg, has another Carolina student as a member. Miss Connie Bernstein, junior from Charlotte was elected chairman of the speakers bureau. Her duty is to find speakers for CCUN groups in the state.

Other members of the executive committee, elected Sunday at the business session of the conference, include: Vice-Chairman, Leon Murray from A&T College; U. N. Model Assembly program Chairman, Dick Wood from Duke; program chairman for high school participation in the state, Miss Heea Halder from Guilford; and program chairman for UN Day, Human Rights Day and other special events.

Sugg said the executive committee plans to meet early in February to map out plans for various projects.

Next month Sugg, as chairman of the executive committee, intends to visit as many colleges as possible in an attempt to have them affiliate with CCUN. By the first of March he hopes every campus in the state will be affiliated.

The executive committee does not yet have a secretary of treasurer. Sugg said he would appoint a secretary from this campus shortly.

AT MONDAY NIGHT FIRE

Jamming Almost Disastrous

Jammed telephone lines to the fire department Monday night during the fire at Memorial Hospital almost caused a tragedy at 215 Henderson St.

A blaze was discovered in the student rooming house, but could not be reported for 15 minutes due to busy signals on the fire department's phone.

Curious students and citizens were calling to see if the blaze at the hospital was a continuation of the arson outbreak which terrorized Chapel Hill last week.

Meanwhile, residents of the student rooming house fought the second blaze with buckets of water until the fire department arrived.

NOTHING NEW

Captain Blake of the Chapel Hill police force said there have been no new developments in last week's series of arson cases.

He is not positive all of the fires were started by the same person, but the rash of fires leads to speculation that arson was involved.

The two suspects are still under surveillance, according to Blake.

Meanwhile, the Chapel Hill studios of WUNC-TV are continuing their normal telecasting schedule despite last Thursday's fire which caused an unofficial $60,000 worth of damage to the UNC Communications Center, according to John Young, director of the Chapel Hill studios.

TEMPORARY STUDIO

A tamperary studio is in operation in the motion picture sound stage and television administration offices, located in the basement of Swain Hall.

Director Young said, "An almost superhuman effort on the part of the engineering staff, production crews, and administrative personnel enabled the station to return to the air so soon."

Alan MacIntyre, Chief Engineer of WUNC-TV, and his staff have done' "wonders" getting the complicated electronic equipment companies, and other university personnel for their efforts in aiding the studio to begin telecasting so soon.

DAMAGE UNKNOWN

Insurance adjusters are still trying to determine the full extent of the damage caused by the fire. The exact amount can't be determined until contractors remove some of the debris from the building and the trenches under the building where water has not yet been removed.

The university radio station, WUNC-FM, has been broadcasting from the facilities of WCHL since the fire, but will return to their own studios today.

"The excellent work of the fire department and studio staff saved the building and equipment from complete destruction," Young said.

UNC Property Is Inspected Due To Fires

Inspection of all University property is currently being carried on by members of the state fire marshal's office and the Chapel Hill Fire Dept.

The University hopes to follow up on recommendations submitted by these two groups for eliminating certain fire hazards, according to J. A. Branch, UNC business manager.

This inspection came largely as a result of recent fires which "made us conscious of hazards that exist" Branch said.

He said some of the recommendations might be in the line of additional fire extinguishers or more fire hydrants.

Several years ago a similar inspection was conducted. As a result, fire escapes were erected on several dormitories and buildings.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Revision Of The Courts

Gov. Luther Hodges has called for revision of North Carolina's court system as a necessary step toward the equal administration of justice and more economic operations in court trials in Tar Heelia.

All told, he has pointed out, there are "more than 1,000" courts in North Carolina's 100 counties —magistrates courts, justices of the peace, juvenile courts, mayors' courts, recorders' courts, superior courts, these are only some of them.

To insure the "equal administration of justice" the state's entire court system should be redrawn along lines which will permit just that. But chaos within the court system is, by no means, the only fallacy which needs correction.

Specifically, we speak of the disinterested attitude of state solicitors which we have seen fully illustrated in one Piedmont County. And if that case can be used as a yardstick for the rest of the state, North Carolina taxpayers are buying cheap justice with dollars intended to protect the individual from malice and malign.

Facts in the case just mentioned were clear and simple: despite renewed occurrences of many felonies, and countless numbers of misdemeanors, not one time in the course of two years did the solicitor darken the sheriff's door to investigate a case for the state.

Rather, he was handed bills of indictment prior to the opening of Superior Court, and proceeded from whatever information was therein contained to make his case for the state.

That kind of law, to our way of thinking, is not only a discredit to the person who practices it but also is unfair to Tar Heel citizens who pay dearly to have their rights protected under a court system that promises the administration of justice.

And, we might point out, there's more than one implication in the definition of justice. Just as it protects the accused innocent, so should it condemn the unquestionably guilty. To achieve the latter requires good law, not fly-by-night prosecution that is apparently little interested in the rights of the state.

A Lesson In Tragedy

Sooner or later local police and fire officials will learn, even if it takes the hard way, that in the long run it is wiser to release the news than to suppress it.

We did, after a fashion, get a full report on the two fires in Chapel Hill Monday night—one at Memorial Hospital and a second at a local residence. Consequently, we had the story for Tar Heel readers yesterday.

But that does not excuse the fact that, though we are the largest daily newspaper between Durham and Fayetteville, we are denied the privilege of "getting the facts" at the scene of the first blaze. Conceivably, therein a tragedy lies.

We were with a WCHL announcer at Memorial Hospital soon after the fire was reported. He wanted some kind of story—then, and not an hour later—to broadcast over radio. We would, we were told, have to wait to get the story from a university spokesman.

Meanwhile, rumors were spreading across campus that the "fire bug" had set the hospital aflame—rumors which a one-minute account over WCHL could have refuted only moments after the fire was reported. But WCHL was not allowed that one-minute account.

So what happened? Fire trucks returned from the hospital to the fire station, and people kept calling there asking about the blaze at the hospital. Meanwhile, someone at 215 Henderson frantically listened to busy signals as he attempted to report a second fire at that address.

The result was that it took some 15 minutes from the time of the second fire's discovery until screaming trucks could arrive at the scene. And all because uninformed individuals kept the fire station telephone busy as they inquired about the first blaze.

Conceivably, this tragic delay could have been averted if the WCHL announcer — himself a UNC student — or the Editor of The Daily Tar Heel had been allowed the same privilege granted a University News Bureau representative — getting the story at the scene of the fire, or at least primary facts thereof.

Unfortunately, that privilege was not granted. So we left the hospital, again heard a fire alarm, and arrived at the scene of the second blaze in time to see a reporter from another local journal descend from the smoke-filled house with a story he soon would call in to a state paper.

Summit Talks, If

President Eisenhower's letter to Soviet Premier Bulganin left the door open for an east-west summit meeting, but it posted the same conditions that have been unacceptable thus far to the Kremlin bosses.

The U. S. provisos are logical, of course: It makes essential sense that the top-level conference should be preceded by diplomatic negotiations and a meeting of the foreign ministers to draw up an agenda for the talks.

But these are illogical times, and the propagandic value of Bulganin's repeated call for a "peacemaking" summit session derives its force from boldness, not cold reason. To compete successfully for the respect of the uncommitted nations, the United States and the western powers must somehow seize the offensive with positive, reasonable proposals looking toward a test of Russia's sincerity.

Perhaps that was President Eisenhower's aim in suggesting that Russia and the U. S. make a gentleman's agreement" not to use the veto in the U. N. Security Council to prevent that body from working out peaceful methods for settling international disputes.

Maybe he had the "positive approach" in mind when he suggested that any summit meeting must consider the situation of Russia's satellite nations.

Both are new proposals—sound and imaginative — that ought to appeal to the people of the captive countries.

The rest of the note has a broken-record familiarity.

Perhaps the Soviet leaders will reverse their field and decide to accept the U. S. conditions. The door is at least cracked. Just over the threshold, however, we seem to detect the unyielding shadow of John Foster Dulles.—The Charlotte Observer

J. Y.'S JAZZ

Score Sinatra For One Hit & An Awful Miss

Frank Sinatra, who is probably the best jazz and pop singer in the business, has come out with two albums recently. One of them is a wonderful record, the other is perhaps the worst thing I've ever heard. The former has the questionably valid title "Come Fly With Me," the latter is the sound track from the Columbia motion picture "Pal Joey."

"Come Fly With Me" has the best mixture of tempos and moods Frankie has come up with since his classic "Songs For Swingin' Lovers." The primary fault with his recent releases has been a tendency to overload with a single tempo and mood. About the only end result this garners is b redom, both for the singer and the listener. If you, like myself, happen to feel that Sinatra can do practically no wrong, then you have nothing to worry about. Nevertheless, it is a matter of sound musical discretion to vary the program to a degree which will keep the artist excited by his own creation.

It is just this goal which Sinatra has reached on "Come Fly With Me," which was released about a week ago and is now available in Chapel Hill. A great deal of the credit must go to Billy May, whose arrangements are excellent.

I'm afraid one cannot be quite unqualified about "Pal Joey." The original cast recording of this show has always been my favorite and for this reason I looked forward to the movie with a great deal of anticipation, particularly since Sinatra was to be the lead preformer. I'm sorry to say that I haven't seen the movie yet, but many reliable sources say it is terrific. That's just fine, but I can't quite let them get away with the mayhem the producers pulled on Richard Rodger's music and Lorenz Hart's lyrics.

My first gripe is that most of the songs in the original show were either completely eliminated or played without the lyrics. While I have full appreciation of Fred Kohlmar's abilities as a motion picture producer, I can find no hope for his musical taste. Anyone who has heard the lyrics to "Plant You Now, Dig You Later" or "You Mustn't Kick It Around" will agree with my objections. They are good, and it's a crime to forget them and instead use the grossly Lester Lanin-ized "Lady Is A Tramp."

Even more drastic was the choice of the lead female roles. Far be it from me to doubt the esthetic appeal of the Misses Hayworth and Novak, not to mention their box office appeal, but they sure can't sing. I know a couple of six year olds who could do a better job on "that Terrific Rainbow" than they do. Their performance brought me closer to vomiting than anything I have ever heard.

It's a relief to hear Sinatra after these chicks are through, but he doesn't sound much like The Voice I know. Still, he's awfully good.

POLITICAL PERSPECTIVE

SP Has Self-Informing Program

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Party has begun what should be a fruitful program of trying to better inform themselves of the issues which the campus faces.

The program was initiated when the SP had Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies and Ralph Cummings, chairman of the student traffic advisory commission, speak to the SP about the parking situation.

The talks were interesting and revealing. The students (unfortunately there were only around 30 there) were given a chance to learn some hard facts rather than to hear some broad generalizations.

This idea of having the programs was originated by Student Body President Sonny Evans, and they are being conducted by the SP Advisory Board.

"In the future we are going to talk about the student judiciary, selection of the Editor of The Daily Tar Heel, the campus book store profits and other important issues," explained SP Chairman Pat Adams.

I believe that this SP policy will serve the vital function of keeping the students interested even though it is not election time, and I feel that the attendance at the meetings will increase as the program is perfected.

In contrast the University Party has been relatively inactive since Christmas Vacation. They have not met and will probably not meet again until after exams.

I feel that if the UP is going to build up its "grass roots" organization as UP Chariman Syd Shuford said he wished to do, they are really going to have to get down to work next semester.

The problem of keeping students interested in their government is certainly one that requires imagination. The students must be aroused enough to induce them to use their vote.

(At this point I should explain that I am not a member of either party).

The student traffic advisory commission's recommendation that General College students be required to use only the Bell Tower Parking Lot from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. will probably come before the Student Legislature in the form of a bill.

I expect the bill will be passed partly because this proposal seems to be the most logical long range solution and because the University Administration (I believe) wants this recommendation put into law.

As I understand it, some officials are worried that if the undergraduates don't take full advantage of the lot, then more of it will be allotted to those who have business in the medical buildings.

Presently 50 of a total 577 spaces are to go to the students.

This lot was built under what I feel was a misconception. There was a widespread belief that students wanted and would use a "storage" lot.

The "storage" lot idea was founded on the principle that many students want to use their cars only on the weekends. However, I belive that in light of the "small" number of students who have voluntarily applied to use this lot the principle is apparently wrong.

I believe that the majority of the students who live in the dormitories use their cars more than on the weekends and can at the present time find parking places closer to their dorms than the new parking lot.

My suggestion would be that no students at the present time be required to park on the new lot and at present let anyone park there.

The lot is very convenient to the classrooms on the campus though not too convenient to the dorms.

However, if the students must use the lot now in order to keep the right to use it in the future, then apparently they must submit to this regulation.

A National Lottery: Is It A Revenue Source?

By FRANK CROWTHER

Representative Paul A. Fino (Dem., N. Y.) has proposed that the only hope for a tax cut during the next few years lies in the enactment by Congress of a law which would create a national lottery. Mr. Fino made his request before the House of Representatives last January 8th.

"I am not so certain that the hard-pressed wage earners in this country," said Rep. Fino, "can appreciate the continued resistance of this Congress to a national lottery — the only avenue left open which could and would lighten the unconscionable tax burden now shouldered by our taxpayers.

". . . the recent Trendex poll taken in every section of this land and of people of every income bracket should be sufficient proof that most of the peple favor a national lottery as a means to reduce taxes.

"The present crisis demands that we become realistic. If the honorable Members of this Congress would banish hypocrisy, remove the blinders and open their eyes to this painless and voluntary form of taxation, they will find an additional $10 billion a year coming into the United States Treasury which can very well provide a tax cut for everyone.

"Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that without this additional source of revenue, all present and future hope for tax relief will be shattered. And while I agree that our national security must have first priority, I also feel that tax relief is needed to provide a stimulus for American initiative and enterprise. Without that, our Nation's economy and our American standard of living will suffer irreparable damage.

"Mr. Speaker, the American taxpayers want and need tax relief now and it is up to us to demonstrate the kind of courage that will make this tax-cut dream a reality. A national lottery is the only answer—the only hope."

I will not go so far as to agree with Rep. Fino that this is our only hope for a tax cut over the next few years, but it certainly seems plausible enough to command further consideration. The Puritans may scoff and stop reading at this point. It is rather impossible to argue with the narrow-minded myopics, so why don't you just go away. As Jean Cocteau once said, "Never argue with an idiot, because being an intelligent man, you will argue with them on their level, and, on their level, they'll beat you every time." At any rate . . .

There are several countries in the world which now have national lotteries which are controlled by the Federal governments. To mention a few: France, Spain, Mexico, Japan, China, and Italy. There may be others of which I am not aware.

In France, one country which has had a lottery for many years, this method of indirect taxation has been most successful. In many instances when a debate on this subject has precipitated from one or several of the ever-present reform groups, their lottery has found support from many normally estranged leaders and cave-dwellers. I remember reading a series of articles in the Paris-Presse and Le Figaro, two of the daily newspapers in Paris, which debated, at great length, the merits of both sides of the argument. Those in favor of retaining the lottery were certainly from variegated sources: there were government representatives from every division, Protestant and Catholic priests, businessmen, economists, journalists, radicals, liberals, and the like. Needless to say, the lottery is still very much in effect in France.

Although I never had the opportunity of meeting one of the "big winners," one of my co-workers in the Embassy told me that one of his friends, a waitress, had won 25,000,000 francs ($70,000) in one of the weekly drawings. I began buying tickets almost religiously every week after that bit of startling news, but the largest sum I remember winning was 8,000 francs (approximately $22.50).

In this country, many of us fail to realize the leviathan profits which are extracted from the American public each year by what is commonly referred to as the "national syndicate" of the underworld. This syndicate's annual gross is reported to exceed $10 billion, and you can check the exact figures by reading J. Edgar Hoover's report which was released several weeks ago. The "numbers racket" itself reaps in the billions of dollars. And no matter how much we may preach on the evils of gambling, there are those who will find an outlet at any means. The most obvious example of this—which irrefutably corroborates my assertion—is the gambling colossus of Las Vegas, Nevada.

There is something in almost all of us which, at one time or another, illicits the gambling instinct—we may match for a drink, buy a ticket at a raffle, play bingo, poker, or bridge (and you can not deny that the latter is a form of gambling) bet with a friend on a ball game, or "drop a few" at the sport of kings. Whether incidental or habitual, most of us are gamblers and we are going to satiate our desires through some means.

To further my point, I will call your attention to the recent surge of quiz programs which pay off in gargantuan cash prizes. The audience participation in these shows is actually not phenomenal, if you will accede to my basic assumption that people, generally, have a latent desire to gamble for money. This participation is solely a manifestation of this desire and, at present, shows no signs of receding.

So why not a national lottery, enacted and controlled by the Federal and State Governments with a weekly set of prizes scaled from $50,000 or $100,000 down or rated according to the amount of money collected each week? If people must gamble, why shouldn't it be under an honestly and strictly controlled office provided by the government? This may be just the proper time to propose and pass such a bill in our Congress.

Agner New Canterbury President

Bill Agner of Salisbury was elected President of the Canterbury club at its annual election Sunday night. He succeeds Tommy Taylor of Rockingham.

Other new officers include Joe Farrell, Elizabeth City, and Pete Reichle, Hickory, as Vice-Presidents, Cotton Hale, Plainfield, N. J., Secretary, and John Dalton, Forest City, Tresurer.

Agner, a rising junior, is a member of the Campus Christian Council. The Society of St. Charles the Martyr, the American Church Union, and the Student Party. A Lay Reader, Agner contemplates entering the priesthood.

Farrell is a member of Kappa Psi fraternity, and organist for the Episcopal Student Congregation. Reichle is a member of the Order of DeMolay and the American Association for the U. N.

Miss Hale is active in various functions of the Episcopal Student Congregation and is a member of the UNC Card Section. Dalton is a member of Delta Upsilon fraternity, the A.C.U., and a Lay Reader.

The Canterbury Club meets every Sunday evening for supper and programs centered around the practical application of Christianity to the University community. All students are welcome to its meetings.

The new officers will be a formally installed 9:30 Student Euchrist next Sunday.

The Carolina Inn at Chapel Hill is located within walking distance of the business section of the village and the campus buildings of the University of North Carolina.

Cuban Rebels

HAVANA, Cuba, Jan. 14 (AP)—Fidel Castro's rebels swept down out of the mountains today and sealed off the bustling sugar shipping city of Manzanillo in a daylight rampage of pillage and plunder. Then they slipped away at nightfall.

Castro's men set fire to sugar cane fields, smashed equipment, burned automobiles and buses, attacked trains and seized prisoners. It was the first time in Castro's 13-month guerrilla war against the government that his forces had penetrated the outskirts of Manzanillo.

Apparently Castro pulled back his forces rather than risk an open battle with government troops. The Army long has awaited a chance to meet the vastly outnumbered Castro rebels in an open fight.

"We Owe Our Lives"

ENCINO, Calif., Jan. 14. (AP)—"We owe our lives to Blackie."

Mrs. John Wayne stroked the head of her pet dachshund as she told how his barking at 3 a.m. today alerted her to a fire that swept the second story of the actor's $250,000 mansion.

The film hero's wife snatched her 20-month-old daughter from a crib and fled into the night after Blackie sounded the alarm. Mrs. Wayne, the former Peruvian actress Pilar Palette, suffered a burn on the arm.

can happen" Carolina-State tradition. In a game between the two schools, records can be tossed to the wind because past season statistics have proved that nothing can be predicted in a battle of the consolidated brothers.

Case had said in the past that it's useless to try to run and shoot with Carolina, but that proves absolutely nothing. This is strictly a "wait and see' contest.

State's classy guard combination of Lou Pucillo and Whitey Bell has taken over the offensive leadership and present a potent scoring punch from the backcourt. Bell's averge is 14.3 and Pucillo's is 14.8 tops for the Wolfpack.

Pete Leads Carolina

Case also plans to start Bob MacGillivray and Don Gallagher at forwards and John Richter at center. Mac Gillivrary's average is 13.8 and Richter's is 11.8.

For Carolina, it will be the ACC scoring leader. Pete Brennan and sophomore flash Lee Shaffer at forward, steadily improving Dick Kepley at center and Tommy Kearns, third high scorer in the ACC, and defensive demon Bob Cunningham at guard.

Both clubs have more depth than a year ago. The Tar Heels probably have more bench talent but the Wolfpack reserve is more experienced.

A preliminary game between the Carolina and State freshman is slated to start at 6 o'clock. The game will be on WUNC-TV Broadcast."

Noted Cartoonist Compares Cartoons To 3-Stage Rocket

By ELIZABETH WAITE

Hugh Haynie, outstanding cartoonist for the Greensboro News, compares the construction of one of his cartoons to a three-stage rcket. The idea, the drawing, and the caption.

Speaking before the Press Club Monday night in the home of Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the Journalism School, Haynie showed some of his cartoons and in a few seconds drew an ostrich with the face of a bewildered President Eisenhower.

Haynie says that contrary to the fable about the cartoonist who kept a flashlight by his bed to illuminate his drawing when thought struck him in the night, he works only on company time. He gets to the office between 8 and 9 a.m. and goes through many newspapers and news services and sifts opinion and fact until 11 a.m. when he picks a subject and decides what he thinks.

"The cartoonist," says Haynie, "deals with a bunch of stereotypes. He takes something that is known to the reader, forms a bridge and thinks of something the reader wouldn't think of." Sometimes this winds up being "Timothy Tarheel looks at the Weather."

"The hardest part," says Haynie, "is to accurately draw a picture which is appealing, thoughtful and stimulating enough to get five seconds of the reader's attention. Haynie never erases but uses up to 20 pages of tracing paper before he gets what he wants for his daily cartoon and meets his 2 p.m. deadline.

Haynie praises his paper for the freedom he has to give his opinion even when the staff doesn't agree with him. He says he cannot do a job in which he doesn't believe and the six months which he spent with the Atlanta Journal in 1955 were miserable because he was forced to express the views of the paper no matter what he, himself, thought. The happiest thing he knows is "doing his hobby" which is having an opinion. The days of no opinion are few and far between and Haynie feels he is better off than the editorial writers who are under "an anonymous cloud."

Hugh Haynie comes from Reedville, Va., and graduated from William and Mary with a fine arts degree in 1950. He has served at two different periods with the Coast Guard and is a lieutenant in the reserve.

After working with the Richmond Times Dispatch where he met and married his charming wife, Lois, he came to Greensboro in September, 1953 and has been there ever since with the exception of his stint in Atlanta.

Recently offered a job with Newsday on Long Island which takes his cartoons over a wire, he decided against it because he fears that the editors would not give him the freedom which he feels is essential.

Haynie says he started out wanting to be a newspaper man but felt he couldn't write well enough and took up cartooning though he modestly says he "is no great artist."

"You must be so sold on newspappering," says Haynie, "that you eat and sleep it. Unless you do this you're a fool to be in it."

Haynie, who calls the fourth estate the "fourth escape" says that the newspaper business is the "last bastion of freedom for the organization man."

Future prospects for the Greensboro cartoonist look good. His cartoons are running second to those of Herblock being shown in the New York Times. He is syndicated in 11 papers in North Carolina and the Saturday Evening Post published one of his cartoons last week. The next presidential campaign may even bring forth a book.

His fans will continue to enjoy Sir Luther the Lionhearted and look forward each day to Haynie's incisive and yet very humane commentary on our times.

These were constructed on the older buildings on campus.

Branch said that since the war, all building plans have had to be approved by the state insurance commission. The commission sees that all proper precautions are taken in the way of insuring that the building is as fire resistant as possible.

In commenting on work being done to Swain Hall, whose second floor was badly damaged in a fire last week, Branch said most of the damaged walls, petitions and flooring have been removed, and construction will get under way shortly.

The William Muirhead Construction Company has been employed to do the work in Swain. This company has been responsible for such other jobs here as the addition to Venable Hall, the addition to Kenan Field House and an addition to Carolina Inn.

the Graham Memorial dark room. The circulation system should be revised, he said.

Lambeth explained he thought the present method of selecting the editor was the best possible under the present conditions.

He said the idea behind having the Selections Board was to limit the number of candidates and that he favored having a system of recall.

Questioned on the matter of circulation, Shuford said including himself there were five carriers delivering the paper. Each student works about one and one half hours per day six days a week.

He said to improve the circulation he would need more money and at a maximum four more carriers.

NO ENDORSEMENTS

Shuford said he was strictly against party endorsement of a candidate and that it was unnecessary since the man who wins divorces himself from the party.

He suggested that the Selections Board make public its findings after interviewing the candidates.

Miss Voorhees called for a special 16 member non-partisan selections board be set up to pick the editor. She did not feel the student body was capable of electing the editor because they were not well enough informed of the editors' qualifications.

The board would be composed of two representatives from the Men's Honor Council and two from the Women's Honor Council, four faculty members, four senior journalism students and four professional newspapermen.

The board would make its judgements on editorials and page layouts done by the candidates, interviews with the newspaper staff members to get their views of the candidates, the personality and ability of the candidates to manage a staff.

The board's candidate would then come before the Student Legislature for approval.

She felt the paper needed new typewriters, more office space, a station wagon to replace the truck, a paid photographer and a training system for new writers.

Seventy full-time workers and 60 students are employed by the Carolina Inn in Chapel Hill.

'Prostitution' Forum Subject

The subject will be discussed in the Graham Memorial main lounge at 8 p.m. It will be sponsored by the Student-Faculty Forum Committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Forum Chairman Bill Jones announced that speakers from the schools of public health and law, and the departments of sociology, psychology, and religion will be invited to give short expository talks.

A discussion period will follow the talks, Jones said.

Jones said all students, faculty members, and townspeople have been invited to participate in the forum.

Tar Babies Challenge State Freshmen At Six Tonight

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

This Should Be Goodun Tonite

Get that studying done this afternoon because you don't want to miss the Carolina-State game in Woollen Gym tonight. It promises to be another thriller in a long series of heart-pounders.

Incidentally, if you have time for a little speculating, how about figuring out what's going to happen. Will they run, will they walk, or will they let the air out of the ball? Anything could happen.

Coaches Have To Play It To Win

This game will bring Frank McGuire and Everett Case together and anytime this happens there'll be a whole lotta thinking going on. These two men rank at the top of the outstanding coaches in the country list and they didn't get there by playing basketball to suit the fans.

There has been a lot of criticism of their Dixie Classic game in which both put on a deep freeze, much to the dislike of many fans. Tonight's game is not likely to be a wide open affair. The two coaches will have their clubs play the kind of ball they feel it takes to win. That's the only alternative in this business.

The above paragraphs are not to be taken so literally that one gets the idea the attidute of the coaches is "to heck with the fans." Not at all. They know where their bread and butter is, but they also know they have to keep winning the big ones. Consequently, a coach should not be criticized for his tatics so long as it is obvious that he is doing his best to win.

Possession Will Feature Backcourt Men

Should these two clubs decide to repeat their little game of possession ball, fans will have an opportunity to see four and maybe five of the best backcourt men to be found anywhere.

Carolina's Tommy Kearns and Bob Cunningham are as steady a pair of guards as you'll find on any college team, and there are few better than State's dandy duo of Lou Pucillo and Whitey Bell. A possession game would bring these four men into unusual prominence since they'd handle the ball more than anybody else.

McGuire, however, might decide to switch Cunningham to forward and insert Harvey Salz at guard, moving regular center Dick Kepley out and putting forward Lee Shaffer in the pivot. Kepley started the first State game but gave way to Salz early and Harvey went the rest of the way at guard. This might re-occur tonight.

Clemson Is Final Foe This Semester

After this game tonight, the Tar Heels have only one more game scheduled before exams. They go against Clemson at Clemson Saturday afternoon before the regional television cameras. The Tar Heels licked Clemson, 70-55 in the first game of the season here.

The Tar Heels resume play on Feb. 1 against South Carolina in Columbia and that's the beginning of the homestretch in which the McGuiremen will play only one team outside the conference the rest of the way. That's a game with Notre Dame in Chicago on Feb. 15.

There are only two home games scheduled for next semester. The Tar Heels will meet Duke here in a regional telvision game on Feb. 8 and will attempt to celebrate George Washington's birthday by chopping down Maryland on Feb. 22.

8-1 Record On Line In Prelim

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's sizzling Tar Babies, owners of a seven game winning steak and an 8-1 season slate, take to the hardwood for the last time before exams tonight against the State College Wolfpack.

The frosh entered four contests last week and accomplished a clean sweep. They began by squeaking by Wake Forest 76-72, then roared through Elon 97-48, smashed Davidson 77-61, and finally whipped Wake Forest in a return bout 72-52.

The Tar Babies have racked up an 86.1 scoring average per game while holding their opponents to 65.9, giving them an average victory margin of 20 points.

Moe Keeps Rolling

The high scoring ace, Doug Moe, continues to roll along. He pumped in 24 against the Baby Deacs Saturday night for scoring honors. Lou Brown, the recent addition to the squad, displays good play-making and outside shooting. Hugh Donahue continues to sweep the boards for the frosh.

The Wolfpack, led by Raleigh's own Bruce Hoadley, have a good season record 6-1 and may be the toughest team yet to face Ken Rosemond's crew. The teams have a mutual loss to Duke.

The bout is a preliminary for the varsity game and tip-off time is slated for six o'clock.

Kick Or Run? Guepe May Let Fans Decide

NASHEVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 14 (AP)—The football rules change allowing two points for a pass or run conversion after a touchdown may cause Vanderbilt coach Art Guepe to let the spectators decide which option his team will take.

"When - and if - we score a touchdown, I might just stand up on our bench and signal to the stands that we will attempt to pass the ball for the two points," Guepe said. "I'll gauge their applause - or their boos.

"Then I'll signal a posssible run, and after that, signal a kick. Which ever suggestions finds the most favor, that's what I'll do. Then there should be no second-guessing in our Democratic country where the majority rules." Guepe favors the change.

Frat-Dormitory Sports Jamboree Plans Made

By KEN FRIENDMAN

Walter Rabb, Carolina Intramural Director, has announced plans for a Fraternity-Dormitory Sports Jamboree to be held on March fourth and fifth by the Intrumural Department in conjunction with the Order of the Grail.

Rabb cited a two-fold purpose for the Jamboree, namely to bring the University's top athletes together in serious competition and to strive for better relationships between the Fraternities and the dorms. He also stated that the champs might eventually get a crack at the winners of similar contests elsewhere in the area.

Many Events

Each fraternity will be paired off with a dormitory and complete as a team with that dorm. The tournament will consist of competition in handball, archery, badminton, foul-shooting and half-court basketball. Round Robin play will initiate the two day afffair with the entries being divided into seperate, four team leagues. The victors in these preliminary loops will vie for the Jamboree titles on the following day.

The Grail will supply team and individual trophies for the tourney. John Kerr and Sandy Sanders, both of the Grail, are members of the introductory Steering Committee along with John Scott and Paul Woodard, of the Dorm Intramural Council, and Ken Hall and Hal Miller, of the Fraternity Intramural Council. Woodard and Miller also represent the I. D. C. and the I. F. C., respectively.

Progress Made

At the present time two meetings of the committee have already taken place with satisfactory results. Further information will be handed out at the first 1958 meeting of the Intramural Managers and entries will be accepted at the second. A small entry fee will be charged to aid in financing a proposed steak dinner for the winners.

Erdelatz Withdraws

Eddie Erdelatz, Navy's football coach, today withdrew as a candidate for the post of head football coach and athletic director at Texas A&M.

Powerful West Virginia, one of the few unbeaten major college teams, remains No. 1 for the fourth successive week in The Associated Press poll.

Sports writers and sportscasters voting in the poll gave West Virginia 69 of the 104 first-place votes. No one else was close.

The Mountaineers romped over George Washington Saturday for their 12th consecutive victory and 28th in a row in the Southern Conference.

On a basis of 10 points for first, 9 for second and so on, West Virginia amassed 941 points. Second-place Kansas State, with only four firsts, had 590 points. Kansas was right behind with 586 points for third place and six firsts.

Kansas State (11-1) added victories over Minnesota and Nebraska during the week. Kansas (10-2) lost its only start to Oklahoma. The poll included games through Saturday.

The Noth Carolina team that bowed to Maryland 74-61 for its second time in two years dropped from third to sixth place.

Previously unbeaten Mississippi State tumbled from fifth to 11th after losing to Georgia Tech.

Carolina Yields Lead

GREENSBORO, Jan. 14 (AP)—Maryland's Terrapins, a strong contender for the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball championship after soundly stopping Carolina last Saturday night, are back on top in defense in the ACC.

The Terps, second to the Tar Heels a week ago, now have given up an average of only 57.8 points a game to 11 opponents. Carolina, beaten 74-61 by the Terps, is second with an average yield of 59.7 points.

Va. Tops Offense

Virginia's Cavaliers, according to latest ACC Service Bureau figures, lead in scoring offense at 72.9 points a game. Carolina is second at 71.8.

The Cavaliers also boast the ACC's No. 1 free throw shooting mark, 74.9 per cent accuracy through a dozen games. South Carolina tops team rebounding at 45.8 a game, just ahead of Carolina's 45.4.

Maryland, though not leading any of the team divisions except defense against scoring, presents an imposing efficiency chart. The Terps are second in free throw accuracy at 70.7 per cent and are shooting 40.5 per cent from the floor.

UNC 2nd in Goals

Carolina, second in field goal shooting at 41.6 per cent, continues to boast the best average margin over the opposition. The Tar Heels have now outscored their foes by an average of 12.1 points a game despite two losses, by 14 and 13 points. Maryland is a close second in this category, having outscored its opponents by an average of 11.2 points a game.

Wake Forest is the fourth ACC team shooting from the floor with better than 40 per cent accuracy. The Deacons were hitting 41.4 per cent through games of last Saturday night.

Why NOT A Movie About Illicit Love? It's Real. It Happens — And It's A Great Picture

We don't want to mislead you. It is true the plot of "Woman in a Dressing Gown" is of a sensational nature. But it's not for sensation-seekers. We tell with honesty and taste the story of two women, one young, the other somewhat older, who share the love of one man. It's strong stuff and candid — yet done so well it already has won the International Critics' Best Picture Award and a Special Award for Acting.

news in brief

Missile Program

WASHISGTON, Jan. 15-(AP)—The United States has geared its long range missile program to the idea that Russia is ahead in the field, Secretary of Defense McElroy told Congress today.

While the Defense Department does not have positive evidence that Russia is out in front, McElroy informed the House Armed Services Committee, it is taking no chances in such a critical area.

At another congressional inquiry into the defense effort, David Sarnoff, board chairman of the Radio Corporation of America, said billions more must be spent under unified military leadership to meet the Soviet space age challenge.

Robbery Attempt

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif., Jan. 15-(AP)-A man identified as Melvin Russell Blair, 42, a retired Army lieutenant colonel from Alexandria, Va., attempted to take at gunpoint an estimated $100,000 in Bing Crosby Golf Tournament receipts early today, Sheriff's Capt. D. V. Smith said.

The officer added that Sheriff's Deputy Tom Martin, who was guarding two safes containing the receipts, across the street from the Del Monte Lodge, grappled with the gunman and disarmed him. Martin, however, suffered powder burns from the pistol flashes as the weapon discharged during the man-to-man combat.

Camera

BERLIN, Jan. 15 (AP)-A Communist court in East Berlin today sentenced Dr. Walter Steinberg, of Alhambra, Calif., to 10 months imprisonment on charges of illegally buying a camera in the soviet-run sector.

The 35-year-old chiropodist, who has been in jail since last September, was given seven days to appeal the verdict.

Steinberg, pale and looking shocked, shook his head as the Communist judge handed down the sentence. He wore a rumpled grey suit. His guards had taken away his necktie and shoelaces, a routine precaution to prevent any suicide attempt.

Race

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Jan. 15 (AP)—The Army-Navy race to shoot the first American "sputnik" aloft is believed to be nearing a decision tonight behind the iron curtain of security that surrounds the missile test center here.

Best guess seemed to be that the Navy would the first to fire, sending its Vanguard "moon" rocket up near the end of next week.

The Army's satellite-packing Jupiter-C missile is expected to trail the Vanguard into distant space by several days.

'Knock Heads'

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15 (AP)-Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D-Tex) said today that action to "knock some heads together" at the Pentagon might produce more missiles.

The Democratic leader of the Senate said such firm action might be more effective than a reorganization of the defense department.

Johnson, who heads the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee investigating the missile program, told reporters he foresees "considerable difficulty" ahead in President Eisenhower"s announced plans to reshuffle the military system.

Chancellor's Cabinet Studies Rising Room Rent Problems

By DOUG EISELE

University officials expressed concern Wednesday over "the trend of increasing costs" for dormitory room rent which is likely to jump another $30 beginning next year.

At the same time, however, they predicted a leveling-off of room rentals after next year if they can convince the legislature that dormitories should be "financed by means other than on a self-liquidating basis."

Chancellor William B. Aycock, at a Cabinet meeting held jointly with student leaders, pledged full support of the administration in efforts to get legislative appropriations for future construction of new dormitories here.

"The administration will do all it can," he said, "to get better dormitories and to get them financed by means other than on a self-liquidating basis."

Rental Hike

Business Manager J. A. Branch pointed out that room rent of every student is now increased about $15 per one millon dollars spent for new dormitories on the campus. On that basis, room rent next year will jump $132 to approximately $162.

"We are very concerned—all of us in this room—over the trend of increasing costs in dormitory rentals," declared Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver.

The broad discussion of room rentals followed a statement by Student Body President Sonny Evans that the student's cost for education is increasing "commensurate with the growth of the University."

Almost Up With Dook

Evans said the assessment for room rent here next year will be near that of Duke University, although this is a state institution and construction costs for dormitories here are held below those of the Durham institution.

The student body president also suggested that allotments for dormitory construction be more liberal than the system now used, declaring that residence buildings should incorporate facilities "to implement the educational process at the University."

Turning to dormitory counselling, Dean Weaver asserted a need for expanding the current program and said funds for that program possibly would be available "if the state would relieve us of our residence expenses."

Funds For Counseling

Some money now going toward room rental, which pays for new dormitories, could be used for a broad program of dormitory counseling, he said. Other funds might also be available, he added.

Dean Weaver said that he and student leaders "are in complete agreement" concerning a need for guidence counselling, and he also agreed with Evans that new dormitories here "must be more conducive to studying . . ."

Among other business at the Chancellor's Cabinet meeting was a notation by Evans that the office of the dean of student affairs is "so overburdened by the traffic problem that it cannot do other work associated with the office."

It was suggested by Dean Weaver that a "security office or something of that nature" be created to work closely with the local police department to administrate the car registration and violations program.

Grad Club Heads Dr. W. S. Newman In First Meeting Of Cultural Series

By ROBERT HOCUTT

"In any large philosophical sense, music is not the product of its times, but it may be considered to be so in the immediate practical sense," members of the Graduate Club were told this week.

The speaker was Dr. William S. Newman, professor of music. Dr. Newman's speech was the first of a series arranged by the Graduate Club. The series will cover all phases of graduate study.

Dr. Newman's topic was, "Is Music Really A Product of Its Times."

Newman praised the Graduate Club for offering students the opportunity to gain knowledge about several arts.

"Few persons are able to cut across the boundaries of art and speak with any degree of knowledge about a number of them. We in music can profit from an exchange of ideas," Newman said.

Music-Art Tie

Newman pointed out that many unsuccessful attempts have been made by historians to find a common tie between music and the other arts in order to prove that music is a product of its times.

Explaining that some historians have tried to link music with other arts through what he called the "era concept," Newman said that this concept implies a common force pulling the arts together.

"This force does not exist," said Newman.

He said, "Eras are not co-terminus in time, place or meaning. When persons concerned with literature speak of the "Classical Period" they refer to works of Corneille, Racine, Moliere, and their contemporaries. The term 'classical' when applied to music refers to the works of the great masters of any age.

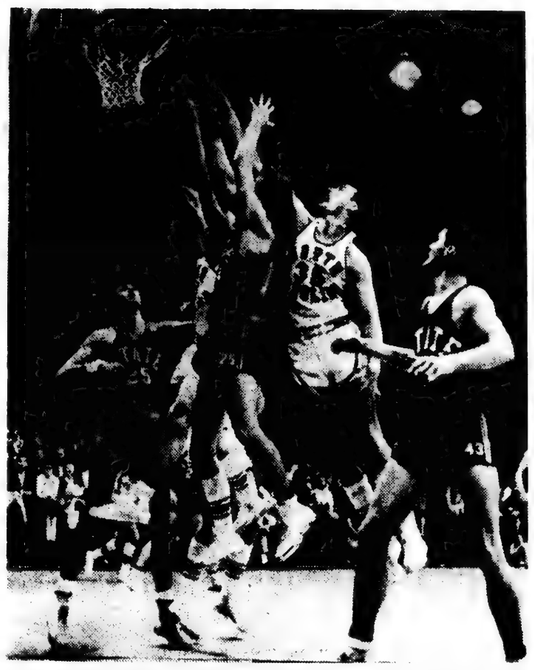
NO NEW NEWS

The rash of fires that have swept the campus recently, have brought no new developments today in the suspected arson cases.

Captain Blake of the Chapel Hill police force said that he is hoping something will turn up soon to throw a light on the matter. He reported that the two suspects rounded up last week were still under surveillance.

Meanwhile, the campus has returned to normal after a hectic week in which eight fires were reported, and one unsuccessful attempt.



The two fires that occurred Monday night were not connected with the arson case now under investigation.

Looking For What??

She gazed at the sign. "Steele Dormitory. This must be the place," she mused. She entered the center door, was gone for a few moments, and then reappeared holding the hand of one of the dormitory residents.

Her guide pointed sympathetically to the corner of the building. "Right around the corner," he said. "You'll find the Book X in the basement." She smiled, thanked him, and walked to the corner of the building, made a sharp left turn, read the sign, and disappeared into the Book "X".

Kearns Scores 17 To Pace Tar Heels

By BILL KING

The ice machine was out, the fans were perplexed, the refs didn't agree and the coaches were confused. And out of all this came a, 58-57 victory over Carolina for N. C. State in an overtime thriller in Woollen Gym last night.

Yep, it was another of those chaotic Carolina-State battles that left the fans goggle-eyed and asking what happened. And it was State forward, Don Gallagher and three missed foul shots for Carolina which supplied the answer.

The regulation game ended in a 46-46 tie after Carolina had battled from behind to grab the lead then relinquished it right back to the West Raleigh club.

State Gets Lead

In the overtime, State built up a 53-49 lead, but two free throws by Carolina reserve Danny Lotz made it 53-51. With only 59 seconds to go, Carolina guard Tommy Kearns, who played a great ball game, missed two free throws and State got possession.

The Wolpack's Gallagher then canned a couple of charity tosses with 50 seconds to go to make it 55-51. Sophomore forward Lee Shaffer had a chance to make things closer but missed a free throw with a half minute left. Gallagher then hit a field goal and followed with a free throw to make it 58-51 and only 15 seconds left. Two free throws by Lotz with 14 seconds and Harvey Salz's two pointer with two seconds ended the scoring and State had handed the defending national champs their third loss of the season, second in the conference and first

Grant Of $61,560 Given Dr. John K. Spitznagel

A Senior Research Fellowship grant of $61,560 from the U. S. Public Health Service has been made to Dr. John K. Spitznagel of the Department of Bacteriology and Immunology of the UNC Schools of Dentistry and Medicine.

The grant will cover a five-year study of "Metabolic Aspects of Bacterial Ecology in Host Tissues."

This is the fourth Senior Research Fellowship to be awarded to faculty members in the School of Medicine within a year by the Public Health Service.

The other three grants, totaling $164,000, went to Dr. R. D. Langdell, assistant professor of pathology; Dr. Billy Baggett, assistant professor of pharmacology and Dr. Ira Fowler, assistant professor of anatomy.

Columbia Graduate

Dr. Spitznagel did his undergraduate work at Columbia University and received his M.D. degree from the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1946. His internship was served at Johns Hopkins and he received his residency training at Barnes Hospital, Washington University, St. Louis.

During his internship and resident training, Dr. Spitznagel served two years as assistant instructor and investigator at the Army Medical Department Research and Graduate School of Washington, D. C. During 1950-51 he served 10 months in Japan as assistant chief of medical service of the 141st General Hospital.

During 1952-53 Dr. Spitznagel was visiting investigator with Dr. Rene Dubos of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in New York City. Prior to joining the UNC faculty this past fall, he was chief of medical service at the U. S. Army Hospital, Fort Bragg.

Author

Dr. Spitznagel is the author of a number of articles that have been published in scientific journals. These deal with his work in immunogenic properties of typhoid Bacillus, the production of experimental kidney infection and hypertension in rats, a chemical fraction of the tubercle Bacillus possessing primary toxicity and the treatment of the nervous complications of mumps with adrenal hormones.

Orientation Post Open For '58-'59

Student Body President Sonny Evans today announced interviews for selection of an Orientation Committee Chairman to succeed Jerry Oppenheimer in that post for next year.

At the same time, he said a 10-member budget committee also will soon be appointed to work on student finances for fiscal 1958-59. The committee will include chairman of the Student Audit Board, one legislator and eight other members—at—large.

Interviews for Orientation Committee Chairman will be held in student government offices from 2 to 5p.m. Monday through Friday, Evans said. The chairman will be appointed by Feb. 15.

The new chairman will work out plans for fall orientation, 1958, while Oppenheimer, the current chairman, will conduct the orientation program for new and transfer students coming here next semester, Evans said.

The president said the budget committee, slated to get to work in February, will hold public and private meetings with student organizations getting legislative appropriations.

The legislature will have the final word on appropriations for next year, expected to total about $118,000, Evans said.

UNC Graduate Gives Concert This Evening

Robert MacDonald, young American concert pianist, will return to UNC tonight night when he will present a recital, his first in Chapel Hill since his student days.

The concert, which is open to to the public without charge, will begin at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall, sponsored by the University's Music Department.

MacDonald, a native of Little Rock, S. C., received the A. B. degree in music from UNC in 1950. While a student he won the Percy Craven Weeks Award as the most outstanding piano student, and was active in the band, glee club and Phi Mu Alpha.

After completing his master of music degree at Indiana University, he studied and performed for several years in Europe. He received the diploma in piano from the State Academy of Music in Vienna in 1957. His European concerts included those in Vienna, Zurich and Copenhagen.

In his recital here MacDonald will present a varied program, with Ravel's Sonatione and the Beethoven Sonata in E Major, Op. 109 comprising the first part of the program. After intermission he will play Brahm's Variations on a Hungarian Theme, Op. 21, and Three Burlesques by Bartok.

Two groups of Chopin compositions will conclude the program. Three etudes, No. 3 in E Major, No. 9 in F Minor and No. 12 in C Minor, will be followed by the final work, Chopin's Fantasy in F Minor, Op. 49.

Officials Chart Plans For Use Of Whitehead

Necessary modifications for converting Whitehead Men's Dorm into a residence hall for coeds in fall, 1958, were planned at a meeting of seven administration officials this week.

They agreed upon the following modifications: installation of laundry facilities, cooking facilities, arrangements for the hostess such as office, adjacent pullman kitchenette, bathroom and bedroom, and living room; furniture, curtains, and draperies for social rooms; a check on the condition of the floors and closets and security of screens on first floor.

They also agreed to install telephones on each floor with intercom phones and buzzer.

Whitehead Dorm will be reserved for use by the Extension Division for the summers of 1958, 1959, it was decided.

Present at the meeting were: Roy Armstrong, director of admissions; J. S. Bennett, director of operations; Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women; Sam Magill, director of student ativities; Charles Milner, acting director of the Extension Division; J. E. Wadsworth, director of the Housing office; and Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs.

Tonight, Friday

Cast Named For Three Productions Carolina Playmakers Are Presenting

Three new one-act plays by student authors will be presented tonight and tomorrow night in the Playmakers Theatre at 7:30. The plays are the work of graduate students in the Department of Dramatic Art and are a student function of the department.

The first of the plays is entitled "Fairy Beauty," and is written by George H. Hill Jr. of Robbinsville.

Directed by Rose Cristoff of Newark, N. J., the play features Donna Hastings, Colin Ferguson, Lew Hardee, Margaret Starnes, Kay Rogers, Bob Ketler, Judy Rosenzweig, Ken Callender, Harvey Knox and Barbara Battle.

It is a comedy, set in the Almola Cafe in Tennessee. Settings have been designed by Taylor Williams.

The second play is "The Eternal Thread," set in a hut just north of the 38th parallel in Korea, early in the autumn of 1955. Its author, Gunsam Lee is a native of Seoul, Korea.

The play is directed by Albert Gordon, of Greensboro, with a set design by John Sneden, Tenafly, N. J. In the cast are Carl Hinrichs, Sodsai Vanij-Vadhana, John William Hannah, Dorothy Walters, Mary Vann Finley and James Tyndall.

The final show on the bill is "A White Butterfly," written by Gabriela Roepke of Santiago, Chile, with an English translation by Thomas Patterson, associate professor of dramatic art.

Directed by James Heldman, Durham, the cast includes Amanda Meiggs, Anthony Harvey, Keen O'Sullivan, Taylor Williams, Lucy Ann Dunlap and Oliver Bloomer. The setting, the Lost and Found office of Bimbleburger's Department Store, is designed by John Whitty, New Bern.

Admission to the plays is free.

The 'Room Rent' Problem

The state legislature should listen with an open mind to forthcoming pleas by University officials that budgetary appropriations be made for construction of new dormitories at Chapel Hill.

Chancellor William B. Aycock, in a Cabinet meeting yesterday, indicated that the administration will ask for the budgetary allotment as a major step toward relaxing the burden on students of paying for self-liquidating dormitories.

Now, it was pointed out at the meeting, student rental fees jump approximately $15 every time the University invests $1 million in dormitory construction. Money for the projects is borrowed from the federal government, and the $15 increase helps to pay it back.

Any increase in rental fees would be added to the $132 per year now charged. As it now appears, that $132 fee will be increased by $30 to help pay for dormitories now being built on the campus. The total rental fee then would be $163 per year.

That is, as Student Body President Sonny Evans pointed out, a lot of money demanded of a student at a state institution—where education is supposed to be in the grasp of all those who want it. And the trouble is that the charge has steadily been on an increase.

It is reassuring to know that student leaders and University officials see "eye to eye" on the growing problem of rental fees associated with new dormitory construction. In fact, it appears that the administration fears the problem with more acuteness than they have thus far been credited with.

When the contest begins for a budgetary appropriation for dormitory construction, the University will have some good arguments in its favor. First and foremost, we feel, is the fact that increasing rental fees have magnified the burden on the student who has a hard time financing an education anyway.

Second, it does not follow that the cost of education should increase commensurate with the physical growth of the University—a fact pointed out by Student Body President Evans in his opposition to the increasing rental fees.

Third, much interest could be saved if new dormitories were constructed with budgetary funds instead of with monies borrowed from the federal government over a long period of time. A 40-year loan can amass a considerable interest for the lender.

For any major construction program at the University a bond election may have to be held, in order to finance the project. Tar Heel voters, in such an election, should remember that, as the parents of many students attending the University, they ultimately pick up the check for physical expansion anyway.

And financed by bonds, the cost of that expansion would be spread out across the state instead of limited to the pocketbooks of those who are now sending or will one day send their children to the University. All in all, it would tax the whole electorate for an institution which belongs to the whole of North Carolina.

Regardless of the outcome of the legislative contest, it becomes clear that rental fees cannot increase forever at the University. Either they reach a leveling-off period, with budgetary appropriations taking over, or the University will lie dormant, as housing projects become a past idea in Chapel Hill.

Dogs Are Threat To Mail Carriers

Postmaster General Summerfield has announced a new policy saying, in effect: "If your dog bites your postman, you're going to have to pick up your own mail."

"The instructions (to postmasters across the country) provide for automatic discontinuance of delivery service whenever the carrier is actually bitten or his uniform torn by a dog," Summerfield's announcement read.

It's a good order. Having carried mail, we have evidenced the real threat to undisturbed mail delivery by vicious dogs which seemingly have an innate dislike for men carrying mail bags. And in real terms, Summerfield says his men suffer some 6,000 bites a year.

Now we probably can expect a public denouncement of Summerfiled by the Society for the Prention of Cruelty to Animals for the postmaster's harsh restriction of mail delivery to persons who let cruel dogs run loose.

The Program For Aid To Education

The Gettysburg announcement of a billion-dollar 4-year Federal program to bolster education said:

"This is a program to help meet the urgent demands of education as it affects our national security. It recognizes the rapid increase in importance of science and technology in modern life and the importance of these fields to national security."

The spur, of course, has been the recognition of the more rigorous methods of Soviet education. It is also the compulsive recognition that the United States will have to correct its deficiencies—specifically in stopping the waste of gifted youngsters, in stimulating basic research and learning, in making an honored and remunerative job of teaching.

There is, understandably enough, a considerable emphasis on Federal assistance to science and mathematics. But it is highly important, as Secretary Folsom pointed out, that the administration by no means puts all the emphasis on one field.

This is a crash program all right, but the long objective is across-the-board education. There is full and urgent awareness of improving research, training, and teaching in the sciences. But at the same time the report to the President, which he heartily approves, gets down to fundamentals with these two recommendations:

"Ten thousand scholarships a year for talented students who wouldn't otherwise go to college. This means searching out all the high-aptitude boys and girls and not letting the greatest national asset of all—brains—go to pot.

"One thousand graduate-level fellowships the first year of the program, 1,500 annually thereafter. This is to get more first-class people into teaching—and keep them there. There are the leaders, the seed corn of intellectual progress. We must have them—everything else depends on them."

It's a good program, even though a billion dollars in 4 years may not be enough. And it's particularly good because of the recognition that all education—both in quantity and quality—is essential to national security. Now let Congress get moving and put the program into immediate effect. And hereafter the United States ought not placidly wait for the U. S. S. R. to show the way.

Writer Says U. S. Seeking Good 'Deeds'

By FRANK CROWTHER

Since President Eisenhower's State of the Union message last Thursday, I have seen very few articles of criticism and have heard less than five voices of dissent. It occurred to me that I might have been overly skeptical and unfair in my interpretation of the message, so I patiently went to The New York Times and read it once again. After careful appraisal, it appears that I was mistaken in my previous consideration. It was not mediocre, it was rather pathetic.

After leading off with the progressive and affirmative statement that he (the President) did not plan to deal in glossy terms or vague generalities, he proceeded to do what he said he was not going to do. If that message was not glossy and general, I certainly wish someone would show me the specifics, point for point. Admittedly, he promised further exploitation in "future messages to the Congress," but that seems to be no more than another example of this administration's habitual procrastination. And I do not see any demonstration of the supposed crash program included in the budget which was released yesterday.

The U. S. News & World Report, in the January 17th issue just received by our paper, states that "the President's state-of-the-union message last week was a smash hit. . . ." Don't you believe it.

Senator Wayne Morse (Dem., Ore.) probably voiced a most pertinent dissention when he judged the message "a sermon delivered at the wake of the Eisenhower administration. Between its lines was a confession of 5 years of failure on the part of the Eisenhower administration to meet the foreign- policy needs of this country.

"I am glad the President at least discovered the problem of the malaria mosquito. Nevertheless, it should be pointed out that under the Truman point 4 program we had appropriated great sums of money for the eradication of the malaria mosquito . . . ."

"I want to say I was particularly disappointed in his discussion of the great issue that faces the people of the world, that of disarmament. It is about time we implemented the disarmament need. The President got right up to the line, then stopped."

Amen, Senator, Amen.

I would like to turn some of the President's own words (though borrowed from Droll Dullnik Dulles) back for his own consideration. Let us have "deed, not words," Mr. President.

"Well, I Got That In, All Right"

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Budget Misses Important Points

By CURTIS GANS

President Eisenhower's budget message to Congress was an odd combination of the good and bad.

The budget highlighted the highest defense expenditure yet, and neglected many internal projects necessary to a healthy nation. Moreover, the president saw fit to raise the debt ceiling instead of increasing taxes, when already the interest on the money the U. S. owes takes 11 cents out of every tax dollar.

The defense expenditure was one of the good features of the budget, and may help regain the balance of military power on the side of the west.

Another good program was the increase in the cost of out-of-town letters from 3 to 5 cents. It has been long noted that the Post Office has been operating at a deficit, and causing the increased outlay of tax money, which should have been supplanted by the users of the services of the post office paying its way.

The foreign aid program was a good feature in the amount of expenditure. It was not good in the proportion of military to economic aid available. The overbalance in favor of military aid will endear none of the allies of the U. S. to the president, since many are seeking the means of alleviating the impoverished conditions that surround them. The Russians are currently offering, although in many cases not giving, economic aid.

In the field of education, the Eisenhower budget comes out sorely lacking. School construction and school crowding alleviation programs have been cut or postponed, and an inadequate 247 million dollars has been asked to do all the improvement in the present school systems that are necessary. This largely has been given to the development of scientific potential, without the realization that it takes other things besides technological advances to attain a strong democracy.

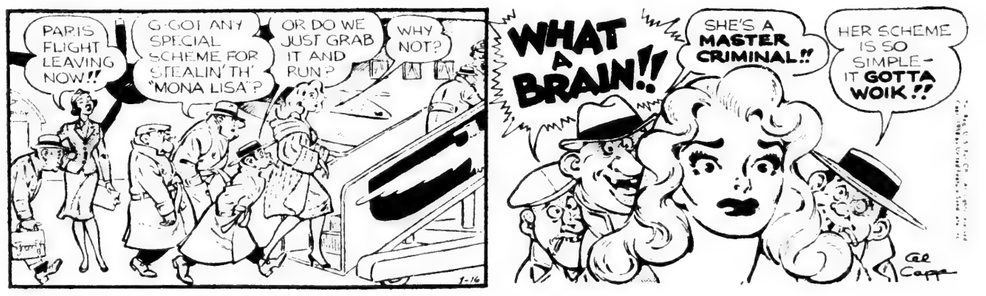
Moreover, such important programs in the field of water research such as the devising of a new method to change salt water into a drinkable and usable resource, has been all but neglected in the president's budget, and paves the way for so many communities in the U. S. to continue strict water conservation methods that would be unnecessary if the programs reached completion.

The slash in farm aid will undoubtedly alienate more farmers than are currently alienated by Secretary of Agriculture Benson, but it will also pave the way for another drop in farm prices. Moreover, the president in saying that this cut was to stop paying farmers not to produce, neglected to give an alternative for the surplus products that will doubtless be available. One outlet of which is all too necessary, there foreign aid.

The cut in vocational education aid and in slum clearance projects will not help the country, and indeed may negate what good there is in the new education program as well as the raising of the ceiling on home mortgage through the Federal Housing Administration.

To end the budget picture on a bright note, the recommendations for Alaskan and Hawaiian statehood and the liberalization of the current McCarran-Walter immigration law represent steps in the right direction. The problem here lies in the fact that statehood for only one of these two territories has a chance in Congress this year, and with the missile development fever, a certain amount of which is all to necessary, there will be little chance that immigration will get much attention.

It was indeed unfortunate that the president did not recommend any legislation to clear up the mess that is the loyalty-security program, but there is hope that Congress and/or the Supreme Court will overrule this dangerous and undemocratic part of the U. S. legal system.



All in all, the concentration on the defense of the nation and the earnest desire to keep taxpayers from paying any more, perhaps in a bid to win votes for the Republican party in the fall, let the president's budget for fiscal year 1959 fall short of what is needed in most of the things necessary to produce a strong democracy.

More On Refugees—

To The Editor:

In view of Miss Waite's uninformed statement vis-a-vis the Arab refugees, following Ambassador Eban's address here, I thought the following might be enlightening—even to her.

In December, 1951, a group of eminent Americans, only one of whom was a Jew, and including in their number Reinhold Niebuhr and Sumner Welles, submitted a proposal on the arab Refugee problem to the United Nations General Assembly. During the course of that presentation, they stated that "the record shows that it (the flight of Arabs from Palestine) was an evacuation admittedly planned by the Arab war leaders and the Arab Higher Committee for the three-fold purpose of (a) Clearing the roads of the villages for an advance of the Arab regular armies, (b) Demonstrating the inability of Jews and Arabs to live side by side, (c) Disrupting services following the end of the mandate.

Although it is a matter of common knowledge that there is non so blind as he who will not see, I shall be glad to make this document available to persons of Miss Waite's mind, upon request. Suffice it here to report that an eye-witness account in the London Economist of October 2, 1948, supported the position of the American group referred to, as did such diverse (to an extent) persons as Emile Ghory, Secretary of the Arab Higher Committee, who told the Beirut TELEGRAPH that "the fact that there are these refugees is the direct consequence of Arab States in opposing partition and the Jewish State," and Glubb Pasha, the British Commander of the Transjordan Arab Legion, who on August 12,1948, in an article in the London Daily Mail, said "The Arab civil population panicked and fled ignominiously."

It is not necessary to comment on any other statements by Miss Waite, since she has clearly disqualified herself as an authority.

EFRAIM M. ROSENZWEIG

To The Editor:

Everyone seems to be following the perilous Arab-Israeli situation trying to find out what is really happening over there and just who is right in the dispute. And we have now heard the eloquent and honorable ambassador of Israel, Mr. Abba Eban.

Unfortunately Mr. Eban is the most eloquent speaker on either side of the dispute. A distinguished educator, master of oriental languages, suave diplomat, and persuasive arguer, Mr. Eban has disposed of his opposition with a few mellifluously flowing generalizations which would require detailed information and time for a rehearsal of the answer in order to be refuted.

We have not time to analyze complexities now. But let us merely look at some smaller points of Mr. Eban's interesting talk here at the University.

Mr. Eban spoke glowingly of the accomplishments of the young nation of Israel. He commented that it was not from nearby nations that Israel first received praise for its great successes, no it was from far away nations such as the United States of America.

Naturally. Where else? Did not most of the support for the artificially constructed nation of Israel come from the United States all along? Anyone who has followed the UJA appeals for aid and the many things the United States and Britain did to help establish Israel cannot be so blind to facts as to accept quietly what Mr. Eban said.

Again, Mr. Eban asserted again and again that Israel is a democracy. Really? One can find facts that seem to contradict this. The writer knows of twelve American Jewish families who went to Israel a few years ago to settle in this great new promised land. They returned claiming it was a regimented thought-controlled state without proper democratic freedom of expression being allowed. Some of them complained that they were not even allowed to speak in their accustomed Yiddish, or publish a newspaper in this dialect of German. A democracy? Let us have the truth.

But let us think about one further thing. Mr Eban compared (or shall we say contrasted) the Jordan river with the Nile, Euphrates, and Tigris, pointing out how useless the latter are in providing irrigation and yet how much has been done by the Israelis with the former.

Well, what would Mr. Abba Eban have to say if America and other nations in their foreign aid programs had helped Egypt complete its dreamed-of Aswan Dam?

There are essentially no Arabs in this country who can send millions of dollars (American dollars let us emphasize) to help support Arab nations in the same way that the UJA gets Americans to contribute to Mr. Eban's claimed democratic Israel.

Unfortunately, not only is Mr. Eban very eloquent, but his followers have gained a monopoly in certain areas of the free press in this nation to the near exclusion of any voice from the other side of Israel's borders.

The directors of the Carolina Forum have been quoted in the papers as expressing the view that they would be most happy to try and obtain a speaker for the Arab side if there is enough public demand.

Where can we obtain a demand for an Arab speaker when the Arab side has only a minority of friends in this country as compared with the large public following which Mr. Eban has in the form of American Jews?

If Americans wish (as the writer does) to find out what is true of the situation in the Middle East then speakers on both sides must be presented, not just on one side. We must have no more of this we'll-bring-you-one-side-and-if-you-yell-we'll - bring-the-other-side attitude. Americans must hear impartially both sides. We must hear not just the UJA side and the Oil-Interest side of the thing. Let us hear constructive arguments and not idle damaging propaganda by fanaties. And a word of advice to the Arab side: You must find eloquent debating material to counter the platitudes presented by your opposition.

Tom Walters Art Work Being Exhibited

By MARY MOORE MASON

"You should feel that this woman has moved and will move again," said the handsome dark-haired young man as he pointed to one of his paintings of a seated woman.

Many people on the UNC campus are familiar with Tom Walters, President of the Interdormitory Council and a native of Tarboro; however, few people also realize that he is a talented artist and writer.

Tom, who now has an exhibit in the South gallery of Morehead Planetarium, says, "When I was a sophomore at Carolina a woman artist told me to get out of college or I would never be an artist. I am now trying to prove to myself that this is wrong and that I can do both."

Consequently, Tom does most of his painting in the summer or during vacations. He never has had any art training except for the two art courses that he has taken here at school.

His paintings reflect his love of vibrant colors, particularly browns, yellows, and reds, and his feeling that "motion and emotion can be expressed by strong, forceful slashing strokes." Most of his paintings are done in oil and are realistic or slightly abstract.

His favorite picture in the exhibit is entitled "Hunting" and is a picture of a hunter and his dogs done in bold strokes in tones of yellow, gold and brown. Tom laughingly referred to the rugged gentleman in the painting as "his Marlboro man."

When asked what he thought of the modern "globistic" trends in abstract art, Tom said, "Some of it I like, some is revolting. Art has to appeal to somebody besides the artist; however, modern art is the product of the times and an expression of the way men are forced to feel."

Tom, whose favorite artists are Van Gogh and Gauguin, also writes and would like someday to write and illustrate his own books.

"I even had something printed one time," he said, "I was 12 years old, and I had a story printed in the newspaper. I believe that the story was about B-29's."

He is now in English 72, a creative writing honors class. He was on the Carolina Quarterly his sophomore year, and he and another boy ran for co-editors of the magazine but were defeated. He has also done cartoons for The Daily Tar Heel in the past.

When he graduates in June Tom plans to go into the service. "I will probably be doing propaganda posters for Uncle Sam for a while," he said wryly.

Then he wants to go into some field such as advertising where he can combine art and writing. He would like to work in the South and express the feelings of the South through his painting.

If you are interested in having your portrait painted, just ask Tom Walters. He'll do it for you for only $30.

Covering The University Campus

FILM FREE

This week's free flick will be "The Searchers" starring John Wayne. Showings will be at 7:30 p. m. and 10 p. m. Friday and 7:30 p. m. Saturday in Carroll Hall, according to the GMAB Free Film Committee.

JOB POSSIBILITIES

Robert B. Savin, a personnel official of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co., will discuss job possibilities and placement at a "career" meeting tonight at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall. Seniors and graduate students are invited to attend.

INFLATION

A Columbia University economics professor, William Vickery, will discuss inflation at the monthly Seminar in Economics and Business this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

NEEDY CHILDREN

Flight B of the Air Force ROTC unit is sponsoring a project to collect money to provide school lunches for needy children enrolled in Northside Elementary School.

Donation boxes for the convenience of anyone who wishes to contribute have been placed in various Chapel Hill business places.

LIBRARY HOURS

The Library will remain open Saturday, Jan 18, until 10 p. m. However, a library staff member said it is unlikely that the Library will be open extra hours on Saturday, Jan. 25, since most examinations will have been completed by that time.

TAX COURSE

Registration for a 10-week short course in income tax returns preparation will be held tonight at 7 o'clock in Carroll Hall. The classes are open to any persons needing assistance with the tax problems as well as to tax consultants.

BUSINESS SPEAKER

The graduate program offered at the University of Chicago will be discussed Friday morning by Harold R. Metcalf, Dean of the Students of the School of Business.

At 10 and 11 a. m. in 208 Gardner, there will be meetings where students interested in graduate study at the University of Chicago can discuss with Metcalf the M. B. A. program, career opportunities, and the scholarship program in an informal interview.

Regardless of their undergraduate major, students with a bachelor's degree or its equivalent are eligible to apply for admission to the school.

AUDITIONS

Auditions for the UNC Men's Glee Club are now being held for the spring semester in 207 Hill Hall from 3 p .m. to 5 p. m. each afternoon. Dr. Joel Carter, director, will continue auditions for interested students through Feb. 1.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

All members of the Cosmopolitan Club have been invited to attend the three one-act plays to be presented at the Playmaker's Theatre tonight. Two of the plays were written by foreign students at Carolina.

TB Or Not TB?

Weekend Bridge Meeting Slated; Carolina Card Club Elects Officers

The Bright Leaf Bridge Unit, of which the student-dominated Carolina Bridge Club is a member, will hold its second annual "Friendly City Tournament," in Durham this weekend.

The schedule of events is as follows: Friday at 2 p. m., Men's Pair and Women's Pair; Friday at 8 p. m., Mixed Pair event; Open Pair, Saturday at 2 p. m. and a second session at 8 p. m. In addition a special game will be held Saturday night for anyone who wishes to play.

A team-of-four match is scheduled for Sunday at 1 p. m. and at 6 p. m.

Anyone who is a member of ACBL is eligible to participate in these tournaments. The entry free is usually $2. per event. Kibitzers are welcome. The tourney will be held in the Crystal Ballroom of the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham.

Bridge Winners

On the Carolina scene, only three student couples placed among the winners in Monday nights 8-table Mitchell movement duplicate bridge tourney.

Those winning were: Bill Uzzle and Dick Potthoff, first place North-South; Bill and Mary Anne Greene, second place, East-West; and Anne and Gray McAllister, third place, East-West.

Next Monday night, the monthly Master Point tourney will be held.

Bridge Club Officers

At the conclusion of Monday night's regular bridge tourney the 1958 election of officers was held.

James Gray McAllister III, a third year medical student, was elected president. The newly elected vice president ws Robert McDonald Gray, a third year arts and science major, and a member of the Delta Epsilon fraternity.

Retiring officers were L. V. Huggins, former president, and Dan Duke, former vice president.

Idea Expression

Newman said that those who maintain that music is just a way of expressing an idea that could be expressed just as well in another art form are wrong.

Referring to the idea that writers are influenced by the age in which they live, Newman said, Walter Schumann does not write fast-moving concertos simply because he happens to live in a 'speed-age.'

"Outside forces do not influence great composers. I do not feel, as some people do, that artists can create when they are worried or in the depths of despair. Beethoven did not write his moving work while worried about the welfare of his nephew, as some people believe."

CAROLINA CARAVAN

Wedding Bells Ring Again For Gridders

By JAKE WADE

Last year when Carolina football team was feted at its annual banquet here, quarterback Curtis Hathaway was a bridegroom. . . . When this year's party comes up at the Chapel Hill Country Club Saturday night, there will be three newlyweds among the players. . . . End Mac Turlington, tackle Don Redding and halfback Emil DeCantis all were married during the holidays.

Keen interest is being manifested in the various awards to be made at the dinner and dance. . . . The winners have not been announced and their names will not be known until the presentations. . . . Football is very much in the air now, with plans set up for off-season practice to open on Feb. 10 and the Blue-White game on March 15. . . . Announcement of Carolina's schedule for next season has been held up because of a possible shift in the site of one of the games, but it will be made soon.

TAR HEEL HONORS — Three representatives of Carolina at the recent athletic meetings in Philadelphia returned with new honors. . . . Ollie Cornwell was named vice-president of NCAA district three and retains his place on the powerful NCAA Council, which he has held for many years. . . . Coach Jim Tatum was elected second vice-president of the American Football Coaches Association. . . . Walter Rabb was named third vice president of the American Association of College Baseball Coaches.

COACH OF YEAR—Frank McGuire's newest honor was announced a few days ago. . . . He was selected as the 1956-57 basketball "Coach of the Year" by the famous Rockne Club of Kansas City. . . . He previously had been named to this honor by various other agencies. . . . McGuire succeeds Coach Phil Woolpert of San Francisco and will be presented his trophy at the Rockne Testimonial Dinner in Kansas City on March 3.

LETTER OF THE YEAR—Basketball Coach Frank McGuire may have received the "letter of the year." . . . At least he treasures it as such. . . . It came from Neil H. Shreve of Fairmont, W. Va., and came after West Virginia defeated Carolina in the Kentucky Invitational tournament.

"In some 35 years of being an ardent sports fan, and particularly a follower of the West Virginia University fortunes," Mr. Shreve wrote, "I have had no greater thrill than that received at the tournament (Kentucky Invitational) in Lexington.

"May I say that the performance of your team and your post-game reaction added immeasurably to making this perhaps my top moment in sports in a lifetime.

"Your remarks following the game were, to my mind, as gracious and sportsmanlike as any I have ever heard. You and your boys are real gentlemen, real champions, and are heavily endowed with that intangible thing called 'class.' Beating such a team and such a coach should be a source of pride to all West Virginians for all time.

"I had the great pleasure to talk with and observe several of your boys Saturday night, and without exception they were the most clean-cut, wholesome group of young Americans I have ever seen. They are indeed a tremendous credit to you and your school."

Tar Heels In Third Loss To N. C. State

at home since State did it back in February of 1955.

This heart-pounder was repetitious of the Dixie Classic finals until the final few minutes when the two clubs opened up their attack just a bit.

State grabbed a halftime lead of 18-14 and ran in to 21-14 a minute after intermission. The Tar Heels came battling back and closed it at 23-21 with 14:33 left, but the Wolfpack got hot again and ran it to 28-22 with 12:47 to go.

Carolina Ties

Carolina knotted the count for the first time since it was 2-2 in the opening minutes of the game when Salz hit a jumper to make it 28-28. State's classy little guard Lou Pucillo hit a couple of free throws to make it 30-28 and Kearns took over for Carolina. Tommy hit a jumper and two charity tosses to send the Chapel Hillians into the lead for the first time 32-30 with 10:10 left.

Following last night's game a brief scuffle ensued when a handful of fans tangled with some of the State players as they were attempting to make their way to their dressing room.

With Kearns hitting two more jumpers, the Tar Heels began pulling away, 39-34 with 5:33 remaining. But State had just begun to fight and a minute and ten later it was 41-38. From there the Tar Heels built the lead to 44-39 then to 46-41 at 1:39 but that was all the scoring in store for the home team the rest of the regulation game.

Stepanovich Hits

State reserve George Stepanovich hit three points and Gallagher hit two to send it into overtime. Stepanovich's hook shot with 22 seconds to go was the tying goal.

Kearns was the Tar Heel's top scorer with 17 points. Salz's 13 was good for second best. Shaffer tossed in 10. ACC scoring leader Pete Brennan was held to four and fouled out with about three minutes left in the regulation game. Whitey Bell was tops for State with 14.

State out-bounded the Wolfpack 41-35. From the floor, Carolina was 33.3 while the Wolfpack hit 45.2. Only 79 shots were taken between the two clubs in this possession-minded Big Four extravaganza.

ACC Grid Slate Discussion Is Predicted Here

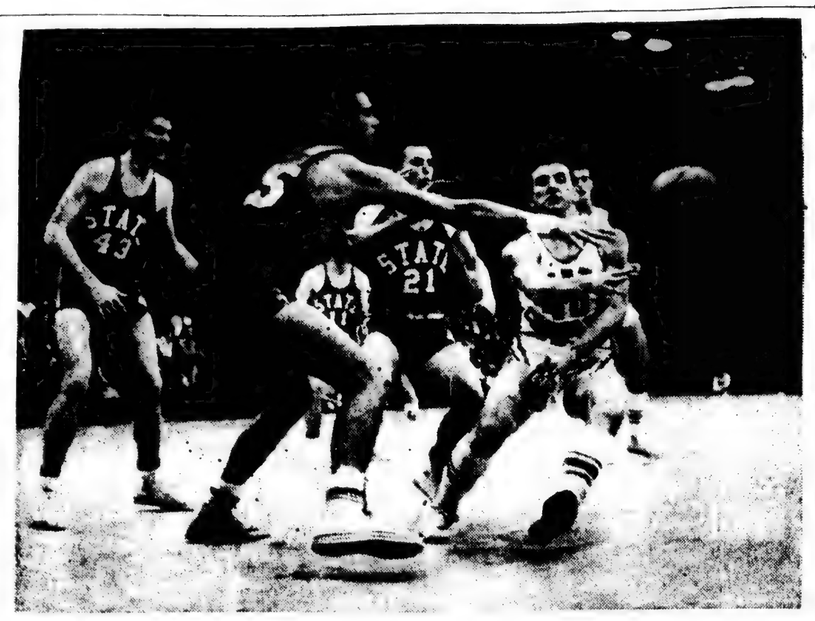
DURHAM, N. C., Jan. 15 (AP)-Athletic directors of the Atlantic Coast Conference gather at nearby Chapel Hill for what is described as a routine meeting Jan. 31 to Feb. 1, but it is likely that they will discuss a matter of more than routine interest.

Schedules in football and Spring sports will occupy most of the time, but football involves the problem of what to do about bolstering attendance.

It was suggested at the last ACC meeting six weeks ago that thought be given to erecting lights at Duke Stadium. This would enable teams in the congested Duke-Carolina-State area to avoid conflicts in scheduling home games.

Eddie Cameron, Duke athletic director, said the proposal is only in the exploratory stages yet. "I'd like to know who will pay for the lights, for instance," he explained. "It would cost between $75,000 and $90,000 to install them."

Last season on two successive October Saturdays Duke played Virginia and Maryland at home while at Chapel Hill, a dozen miles away, Carolina was meeting Clemson and Navy.



It is this sort of conflict hurting all schools involved that the athletic directors are seeking to avoid. Some feel that the erection of lights to permit night play at Duke on days when afternoon contests are scheduled either at Chapel Hill or Raleigh, home of North Carolina State, would ease the situation.

Over the last three seasons Duke has averaged under 24,000 for 14 home games, despite a regular season record of 18 victories, 8 losses and 4 ties.

Twice last season Duke employed a so-called "family plan" whereby a child was admitted free if accompanied by a ticket-purchasing adult, not necessarily the child's parent. It resulted in no appreciable attendance boost.

"We plan to try the plan again this year," said Cameron. "If we can get the eight and nine-year-olds to come to our games we feel we are winning future fans."

He indicated Duke's willingness to listen to talk of lighting the stadium, but stressed that how the cost of lighting the plant would be met was a matter of prime concern to him.

KEARNS IS THIRD

Brennan Holds ACC Scoring Lead

GREENSBORO (AP) — Carolina's Pete Brennan, who last week enjoyed a 2.7-point lead over the field, continues to pace Atlantic Coast Conference basketball point-producers but by a much slimmer margin.

Latest ACC Service Bureau figures, through games of last Saturday night, show Brennan the leader with 21 points a game and Virginia's Herb Busch second at 19.8. A week ago Brennan was averaging 20.7 points, Busch 18.0.

The battle for season individual scoring honors apparently has boiled down to Brennan vs. Busch, for the man closest to the top duo in Carolina's Tommy Kearns, who is almost five points off the pace at 16.2. Dave Budd of Wake Forest, a 6-6 sophomore, is fourth at 15.8 points a game and Lou Pucillo of N. C. State, smallest regular in the conference at 5-foot-9 and 150 pounds, is fifth at 14.7.

Brennan is a double efficiency leader for the second straight week, topping individual rebounds once more with 12.2 recoveries a game. Busch is a close second here, too, averaging 11.7.

In the shooting departments, N. C. State's Bob MacGillivray, stands far ahead of the field with 60 goals in 106 shots for an accuracy percentage of .565. George Ritchie, Wake Forest sophomore, is the top man in free throw accuracy at .848 on 28 for 33.

Busch ranks second in field goal shooting at .514 and Budd ranks third at .508. In addition, Busch is fourth in free throw shooting at .813.

The scoring leaders:

	G.	FG.	FT.	Pts.	Avg.
Brennan, N. C.	13	94	85	273	21.0
Busch, Va.	12	73	91	237	19.8
Kearns, N. C.	13	71	69	211	16.2
Budd, W. F.	13	64	78	206	15.8
Pucillo, N. C. S.	12	69	39	177	14.7
Bell, N. C. S.	12	66	40	172	14.3
Yockel, Clemson	12	64	42	170	14.2

Swimmers Host NCS At Eight

By MAC MAHAFFY

The undefeated Carolina swim team meets its arch-rival N. C. State tonight at 8 o'clock in the Bowman Grey Indoor Pool. The team has just returned from setting eight pool records against Maryland on Saturday.

The Carolina team will be in full strength for the State meet. Tony Schiffman, who was out for the Maryland meet, will be back in action. Senior Bill Zickgraf has done particularly well this week in workouts, and should show well against State.

Second Last Season

State which was runner-up to Carolina in the ACC Championships last year will be without the services of veterans Frank Nauss and Dave McIntyre. Dick Fadgen, who has been a double winner in National Championships, will head the state attack.

Coach Pat Earey will swim Bill Roth, Walt Rose, Bill Zickgraf, and Kelley Manass in the sprint events. Tony Schiffman and Jeff Zwicker will swim the distance events, and Brent Nash will swim the backstroke races. In the butterfly will be Telfair Mahaffy, Paul Wachendorfer, and Rob Turner. In the diving will be Ned Meekins and Pete Reynolds, while Kit Mercer will swim the breaststroke.

UNC Frosh Rally Late To Tie In Regulation

By DAVE WIBLE

Carolina's Tar Babies dropped their second game last night, 78-75 to the Wolflets of State College in a thrilling overtime contest that could have gone either way.

State's flashly little 5-11 guard Mark Reiner turned from goat to hero when he converted two foul shots with only 11 seconds showing on the clock to sew up the game for the State frosh. This same Wolflet had missed a foul with only 2 seconds left in the regulation game causing the game to go into the overtime at 69-69.

Trailed at Half

The Tar Babies trailing 30-32 at intermission got off to a bad start in the second half and the Wolflets quickly compiled a 12 points lead with 13:00 left. The Carolina boys found their difficulty—control of the boards—and began closing the margin.

Forwards Pete Longenecker and Doug Moe led the renewed attack and with 1:26 to go things were all even again. Both teams then scored four each and the clock ran out. With 58 seconds left in the overtime Longenecker hit two foul shots making it 75-73 State. State converted a foul shot then Tar Baby center Hugh Donohue hit a driving layup putting Carolina within one point with 26 seconds left.

Carolina's last opportunity was when Wolflet Larry Ranta missed a free throw. Donohue rebounded but knocked it out of bounds. State, with the ball, forced the Tar Babies to foul Reiner who converted to win the game.

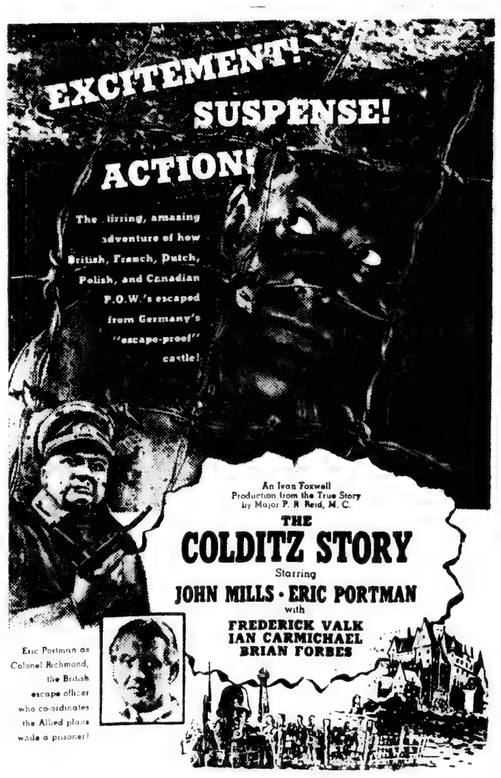
THE SCORING

Carolina—Longenecker 18; Moe 20; Shuford 10; Donohue 12; Deaton 1; Hickey; Dunlap; Beck; Brown 12; Hart 2 (75).

State—Hoadley 12; Lakin 6; Niewierowski 12; DiStefano 9; Ranta 6; Reiner 25; VanEman 8 (78).

Sime Is First Entry For Millrose Games

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (AP)-Olympic sprinter and world record holder Dave Sime of Duke University today became the first official entry for the 51st Millrose Games, which open the track season at Madison Square Garden, Feb. 8. Sime won the Millrose sprint in his indoor debut two years ago but was touring in Asia when yast year's meet was held.



Meet director Fred Schmertz said that although he had not released any entries until today, he already had the biggest advance sale of tickets in the meet's history.

news in brief

Bonds

RALEIGH, Jan. 16 (AP)—The Council of State today quickly approved the sale of 10 million dollars worth of state school construction bonds to a syndicate headed by the First National City Bank of New York.

With Lt. Gov. Luther Barnhardt presiding in the absence of Gov. Hodges, the Council approved the recommendation of State Treasurer Edwin Gill.

Disability

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16 (AP)—The Senate voted for a fourth time today in favor of creating a joint Senate-House committee to study the question of machinery for determining when a President is so disabled he can not carry on the duties of office. The committee would also study problems in the field of succession to the presidency.

The House, on three previous occasions, has refused to go along with the proposal, sponsored over the years by Sen. Green (D-RI). Green expressed hope it would approve it without delay this time.

The senate adopted Green's resolution by voice vote.

Mindszenty

BUDAPEST, Hungary, Jan. 16 (AP)—First Deputy Premier Ferenc Muennich declared today Josef Cardinal Mindszenty can stay in the U. S. legation here as long as he likes—"and then he can go to heaven."

The Cardinal took refuge in the legation after the Russians crushed the Hungarian revolt in November 1956. He had been freed from Communist arrest by rebels only a short time before. He is 65 years old and in good health.

Sputnik

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 16 (AP)—Sputnik II, the Soviet dog-carrying satellite, is due to reappear in the evening sky over the United States starting possibly tomorrow.

For the first few days it will be visible only in the far northwestern horizons for most watchers in the northern part of the United States.

Southern views will have to wait until next week for their first sight of the Soviet moon which last was seen over the United States late in December.

Price Supports

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16 (AP)—President Eisenhower called upon Congress today for authority to reduce price supports and to ease production controls on major crops.

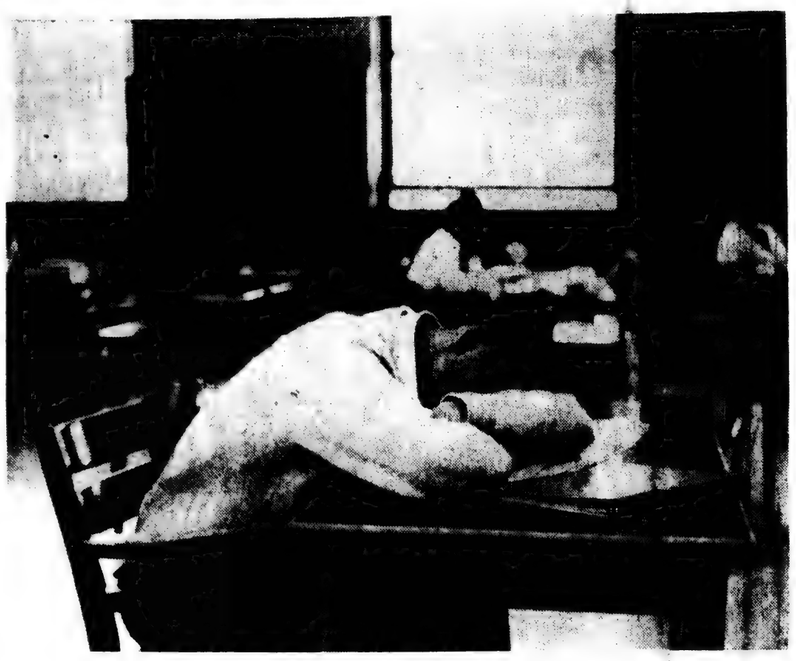
In a special message, the chief executive said in effect that the government must shift its farm policies away from efforts to restrict production to programs designed to move the expanding production into market.

"The scientific revolution in agriculture is irreversible and is continuing," he said. "It cannot be avoided and it need not be feared."

Comes Back

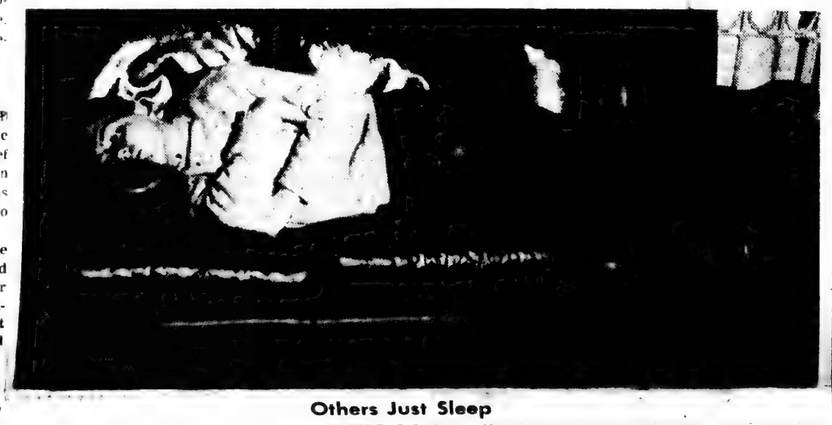
MT. AIRY, N.C., Jan. 16 (AP)—Otto Moody's wallet came back to him after 13 years, carrying a new $100 bill and a blessing.

Moody dropped the wallet 13 years ago in a supermarket here. Inside was about $100 in bills that he planned to use for a vacation trip to following day. A frantic hunt failed to produce it.



Today, an elderly Negro woman who refused to give her name or address came to his office. She handed him the wallet, saying: "I am returning it with the Lord's blessing." Inside was a $100 bill.

Defense Funds



WASHINGTON, Jan. 11 (AP)—President Eisenhower's request for authority to spend more than half a billion dollars on new emergency space age defenses this year won quick preliminary approval today in the House Armed Services Committee.

Chairman Vinson (D-Ga) said the committee will vote on the request Monday, after a technical change has been made in the bill to make it more specific.

Vinson said the committee was "in thorough agreement" with the measure as it was outlined at a 2-½ hour closed session with Air Force officials.

UNC To Receive $265,000 For Presbyterian Facilities

Will Build New Wing On Church

A $300,000 campaign to build and furnish facilities for Presbyterian student religious activities on five Tar Heel campuses was approved at a meeting of 50 ministers at Chapel Hill Wednesday night.

UNC will receive $265,000 to supplement local funds being raised for the renovation and enlargement of present church facilities.

The funds will be used to build a student wing on the new church building. Officials are waiting on final papers from architects to let the bids. They hope to break ground for the new building this spring.

It will be located on a vacant lot facing Henderson St.

Funds from the 300,000 campaign scheduled in March will be used to replace improvised centers and to expand existing quarters at UNC, N.C. State, Duke, East Carolina College and Woman's College.

$200,000 On Hand

It was announced that Dr. John A. Redhead Jr., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Greensboro, will serve as ministerial chairman of the campaign. The drive will undertake to supplement $200,000 already on hand.

A total of $85,000 will be given to Duke, East Carolina will receive $30,000, State, $80,000 and Woman's College, $50,000.

Student Needs

Presbyterian student needs were discussed at the dinner meeting here Wednesday, and delegates got a first-hand look at current facilities during tours of existing Presbyterian student centers at Carolina, N.C. State and Duke University.

Officials said $200,000 already is on hand to add to the $300,000 hoped to be raised in the forthcoming drive. It would bring total funds for the projects to $500,000.

Court Of Appeals Says:

House Committee Can Probe Red Activities In Education

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16 (AP) — The U.S. Court of Appeals, splitting 5-4, today upheld the right of the House Committee on Un-American Activities to investigate Communism in the field of education.

The majority specifically held that the Supreme Court did not strike down last June in its Watkins decision the House resolution setting up the committee.

"We believe that if the court had intended to strike down the resolution, it would have said so in so many words," wrote Judge Walter M. Bastian for the majority.

"It would not have left so vital an issue to inference or interpretation. The far-reaching results of such a holding would be that the committee, established by action of the entire House of Representatives, would be rendered helpless and would not even be able to summon a witness, much less have him testify."

Had No Authority

Chief Judge Henry W. Edgerton said in a dissenting opinion in which Judge David L. Bazelon concurred, that he believes the Watkins decision holds the committee "had no authority to compel testimony because it had no definite assignment from Congress."

The decision today was the first interpretation by an appellate court of the June 24 decision of the Supreme Court reversing the contempt of Congress conviction of John T. Watkins, a labor union official of Rock Island, Ill.

Today's ruling affirmed the contempt of Congress conviction of Lloyd Barenblatt of New York educator.

Barenblatt, who formerly taught at the University of Michigan and Vassar College, refused to tell a Subcommittee on Un-American Activities June 28, 1954 whether he then was or ever had been a member of the Communist Party. He was convicted in U.S. District Court here and sentenced to six months in jail and fined $250.

Another Look

In January last year the Court of Appeals affirmed Barenblatt's conviction, but the Supreme Court, after its Watkins ruling, sent it back for another look.

Bastian said in the majority opinion today that the Supreme Court "in no uncertain terms criticized the resolution creating the committee for lack of specificity, for uncertainty, for vagueness, and for the scope of the construction accorded to the resolution as acted upon by members of the committee and its subcommittees."

But nowhere in the Watkins opinion by Chief Justice Arren, Bastian said, does the court use language supporting Barenblatt's contention that it struck down the resolution creating the committee.

Labor Inquiry

Watkins appeared before a Sub-committee on Un-American Activities during an inquiry into communist infiltration in labor. Watkins denied he had ever been a communist, but said he had cooperated with Reds in the labor movement some 10 years earlier. He refused to identify them contending this information was not pertinent. In reversing Watkins' conviction, the Supreme Court said the question under inquiry was not adequately revealed to the witness.

Describing the Watkins situation as "a far cry from that of Barenblatt," Bastian wrote:

"We are of the opinion that, under the standards laid down for us by the Supreme Court, Barenblatt was made fully aware of the subject under inquiry and was in a position to judge the pertinency of the questions relating to the subject. We are further of the opinion that the questions were in fact relevant and pertinent to that subject."

University Gets $50,000 For Damage

RALEIGH, Jan. 16 (AP)—The Council of State today approved an allocation of $50,000 from the State Property Fire Insurance Fund to the University of North Carolina for damage caused by a fire last week.

The fire resulted in serious damage to Swain Hall which housed the University's communication center, including the studios of its educational television station WUNC-TV.

Insurance Commissioner Charles F. Gold said the allocation from the fire insurance fund was preliminary because the full extent of the damage to the radio and television equipment in the building has not been finally determined.

He said in all probability it would amount to as much as $50,000 and "it could go as high as $75,000." He added "It's impossible to say yet until we find out the amount of the damage to that equipment."

The fire in Swain Hall was one of six that broke out in University-owned Buildings the same night, but the others caused only minor damage. Officials have expressed the opinion the fires were set deliberately.

One-Act Plays To Be Given Again Tonight

The final presentation of the three new one-act plays by student authors will be tonight in the Playmakers Theatre at 7:30.

The plays, written by graduate students in the Dramatic Art department, were presented for the first time last night.

The presentation of new plays has become a tradition on the campus. It was begun under the leadership of Frederick Koch in the 1919-20 season.

Included in this year's plays are "Fairy Beauty," by George H. Hill Jr., of Robbinsville; "The Eternal Thread," by Gunsam Lee a native of Seoul, Korea; and "A White Butterfly," by Gabriela Roepke of Santiago, Chile.

Admission to the plays is free.

Chemistry Contest Set

The 1958 contest in colloid and surface chemistry among college undergraduates was announced today by the University of Southern California. The contest is sponsored by the Continental Oil Co. of Houston, Texas, and Ponca City, Okla., and is now in its second year.

Students of chemistry and chemical engineering in all accredited colleges and universities in the United States and Canada are eligible if they are full-time undergraduates on April 1.

A 5,000-word report on research conducted by the contestant in the fields of colloid or surface chemistry or an essay on "Radioactive Isotopes in Colloid and Surface Chemistry" may be submitted for a $500 first prize, $200 second prize, $100 third prize, or honorable mention prizes of $50. In addition an excellence prize of $500 may also be awarded to the best entry if it satisfies exceptionally high standards.

Entry blanks may be obtained immediately from Prof. K. J. Mysels at the University of Southern California, Los Angeles 7. Awards will be announced and distributed by anonymous judges by Sept. 2.

As contest chairman, Dr. Mysels is being assisted by an advisory committee composed of P. H. Emmett, John Hopkins University; J. W. Williams, University of Wisconsin; and W. A. Zisman, Naval Research Laboratory.

Students Can Add Credits By Mail Courses

A good woy for students to add to their total credit, make up entrance deficiencies, or earn quality points is to enroll in the many correspondence courses offered by the Extension Division here in Chapel Hill.

Those students who cannot be in residence have been invited and encouraged to enroll.

The University accepts one full year's work by correspondence for credit toward bachelors' degrees, but requires students to take the last year's work in residence here.

If suitable courses are available, a senior may take by correspondence, with the approval of his dean, the last two courses required for his degree.

Full information can be secured from the office in Abernethy Hall. Office hours are 8:30 a. m. to 4:30 p. m. Monday-Friday and 8:30 a. m. - 12:30 p. m. Saturday.

The Bureau works with about 2000 students each year, including persons in almost every county in North Carolina, in almost all of the 48 states, and in many of the armed forces installations both here and in foreign countries.

Sororities To Close Saturday

Starting Saturday, the sorority houses here will be closed to all guests and will continue to be closed through exams.

This does not mean, however, that sorority girls will be prevented from dating. But their dates may ring the door bell and then wait for the girl to come out.

This ruling was made at a recent meeting of Panhellenic Council so as to guarantee a quiet atmosphere for the girls during exam time.

Science Foundation Awards Grants To UNC Professors

A grant from the National Science Foundation will enable two staff members of the Institute for Research in Social Science here to undertake a study on the use of high speed computers in sociological research and particularly their application in the study of migration.

Dr. Daniel O. Price, director of the Institute for Research in Social Science in Chapel Hill, and Dr. Rupert B. Vance, research professor, will cooperate on the research project. The $9,900 grant from the National Science Foundation will finance the first year of their study.

The first step in the research, according to Dr. Price, will be to develop a theory of internal migration and then to simulate the theory on a high speed computing machine.

Major Goal

The major goal of Dr. Price and Dr. Vance is to use a high speed computer which can take data on a large number of variables relating to migration and then show on the machine a picture of the migration pattern.

With this computer, the researchers hope to be able to manipulate manuv of the variables in migration and show on the machine the effect of any changes on the migration pattern.

On the machine the wage level of a certain group, for instance, can be changed and the effect of such a change on the migration pattern is shown immediately on the high speed computers.

Sociology Implications

Dr. Price commented. "High speed computers can perform ordinary computations at a high rate of speed and thus bring within possibility the carrying out of many computations that are otherwise too complex to be done.

"This has several implications for sociology, and we hope in this project to examine some of the areas that should most fruitfully be programmed for high speed computers."

Besides his duties as director of the Institute for Research in Social Science, Dr. Price teaches classes in the department of sociology and anthropology at UNC. His areas of specialization include sociology, statistics and migration. He has been a member of the UNC faculty since 1947.

Dr. Vance is Kenan Professor of sociology at the University, and he has been connected with UNC since 1929. He is author of several books and articles dealing with many aspects of population and migration. He is interested in sociology theory, population, social structure and demographic theory.

Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson Starring In WC Production

◆ GREENSBORO — Tyrone Power and Faye Emerson will appear in person in "Back to Methuselah" to be presented on the stage of Aycock Auditorium at 8:30 p.m. on Feb. 25.

George Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah," as condensed by Arnold Moss, is a Theatre Guild-Arnold Moss production and will be given in Greensboro under the auspices of the Theatre of Woman's College.

The production is not to be a "staged reading," but will be a fully acted play, complete with scenery and effects designed by Marvin Reiss. Costumes are designed by Patricia Zipprodt. The play is directed by Margaret Webster.

Co-starring with Power and Miss Emerson will be Arthur Treacher. Also in the cast will be Moss, Valerie Bettis and Roger Boxill.

"Back to Methuselah" will be the first of several fine arts events on the WC campus culminating in the 15th annual Arts Festival on March 13, 14 and 15.

The presentation here will be part of a 42-city hour which began Jan. 6 in Orlando, Fla., prior to the opening in New York on March 17.

Thieves Pick GM Jukebox

Thieves broke into the jukebox in Graham Memorial Rendezvous Room and took from $10 to $15 between 5 and 8 p.m. Saturday.

The job was done so expertly that the theft was not discovered until Monday when the jukebox was opened to take out receipts for last week.

Rand Bailey, GM building supervisor, said the theft had probably taken two persons, one to do the job and another to keep watch for the "floater" who checks rooms in Graham Memorial every 15 minutes.

The outside lock of the jukebox was not damaged. However, the inside lock was forced, Bailey said.

The lock could have been opened with a hairpin or screw driver, he said.

Saturday night's theft of juke receipts was the first Bailey recalled as occurring here.

Miss Churchill Fined

Malibu, Calif., Jan. 16 (AP)—Sarah Churchill, actress daughter of Britain's Sir Winston Churchill, apologized today for causing "any inconvenience to the public and those I love," and pleaded guilty to a charge of being drunk in public.

She was fined $50.

Miss Churchill, 44, stood straight and resolute before Judge Charles H. Woodmansee in Malibu Justice Court and said she would like to make a statment in regard to her arrest last Monday at her beach home.

"I would like to say that I was more ill than drunk," the red-haired actress said. "I was alone in my house and learning my lines for television.

"I have been under some strain. I fully realize anyone might have misunderstood my actions. I regret any inconvenience to the public and those I love."

Classes Saturday

All classes will be held Saturday, according to an announcement by James L. Godfrey, deon of the faculty.

This date had previously been set aside as the special reading day in preparation for exams. However, because of the added day of Christmas vacation, it was then announced by Chancellor William Aycock that reading day would be abolished.

Aubrey Brooks Scholarship Competition To Begin Soon

Outstanding high school graduates from the old "Imperial Fifth Congressional District" of North Carolina for the third straight year have an opportunity to compete for Aubrey Lee Brooks scholarships.

Mr. Brooks, who died last Friday, saw his scholarship program through two graduation classes. Each year 11 scholarships, valued at $500 each andrenewable for the four years of college, are awarded and may be used at any of the three branches of the Consolidated University: UNC, Woman's College and North Carolina State College.

Candidates for the scholarships are first recommended by their high school principals and must appear before a county committee before being sent here for the final selection.

In two weeks, the county committees in the fifth district should begin nominating candidates for the final selection.

Mr. Brooks, who borrowed money to go through Carolina, set up the Aubrey Lee Brooks Foundation for these scholarships in 1955 with a million-dollar gift to the Consolidated University.

The famous North Carolina lawyer benefited the University also through his gifts to the University Press.

Students in the "Imperial Fifth Congressional District" who receive scholarships come from the following counties: Surry, Stokes, Rockingham, Caswell, Person, Granville, Forsyth, Guilford, Alamance Orange and Durham.

Editor Answers Questions

Perhaps, to clear up the mind of the uniformed individual mentioned elsewhere on today's editorial page, the editor should comment on the questions asked. We feel we are in a better position to do so than Mr. Schruntek.

He asks: Will Doug Eisele run for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel this spring? If so, what will he stand for THIS time?"

If the current editor, come time for elections, is making grades sufficient to allow his continuing in that post, and if he feels the job being done is equal to the position's demands, he will again seek the editorship.

As for implications that he proposed a revision of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board because he himself is a sophomore, such a claim is totally untrue. It seems that if he were a member of that board, he could be instrumental in the rejection of candidates who might oppose him. In fact, he stands to lose more by his ommission from the board than if he were a member of it.

Mr. Schruntek is correct in one declaration: it isn't right for a sophomore or junior editor, seeking re-election, to be a party to his own endorsement or rejection by a board of which he is a member. And he is correct in another: the current editor is a sophomore, if that's any sin at UNC.

And what will the editor stand for THIS time? That's an easy one to answer — for the same "competence" which won the election for him in November. And if there's any question about views on campus, national and international affairs, those who really care about the editor's views have only to read the Tar Heel editorial page between now and April. Because the editor will have the same views next year, if he seeks re-election and wins.

"He (the editor) isn't doing any particular service when he corrects an error or deficiency in the Daily Tar Heel," writes Mr. Schruntek. "That's what he's getting paid for. That's what he was elected to do. He is, after all, a "competent" newspaperman."

Well, we're glad to see that, again, we agree with Mr. Schruntek. We were, as he says, elected to correct errors and deficiencies on the Tar Heel. And we agree with him that such action is not "any particular service." So until we fail to do the job for which we were elected, we shall continue in the post knowing that we are succeeding in the job that we're "getting paid for," what we were "elected to do."

As for our alleged failure to offer "competent" suggestions to improve the method of selection of editor, we would repeat a statement made as long as two weeks ago in our editorial column: we do not know of a plan which could assure the selection of a good editor every year.

If that is a sign of incompetence, then we plead guilty. But we doubt that it is. And if Mr. Schruntek, himself, can come up with a sure-fire method to improve the current plan for selecting editors, we will be among the first to give full support for his plan. But we doubt that even he knows all the answers.

Lastly, we would tell the student body that the "DTH facts of life" are always open to student scrutiny for those who have the time and interest to inquire of us about them. We particularly invite the uninformed, for distortion of truth breeds best on ignorance.

Students Are Poor Sports

We hope that State College students will conduct themselves more honorably when the Tar Heels play in Raleigh than did a band of riotous Carolina students here Wednesday night.

It now appears that the UNC student body is not only a mass of poor losers, but that it is betraying the fine reputation of its fine basketball squad by seeking revenge when that squad meets with precarious defeat.

Last year all was fine — when Carolina went consistently undefeated on the basketball court. The team was hailed nationally for its good "sportsmanship." Happy students remained gentlemen. Woollen Gymnasium was synonymous with good behavior.

Now it is different. Our basketball players remain good sports, even in defeat. They withstand antagonising tactics aimed at undermining their national prominence. They impress people in Kentucky; they impress people at home. They are the same good sports who brought North Carolina fame in Kansas last winter.

The metamorphosis has occurred elsewhere. It has seeped down through the all-too-fake front of a student body plush with victory but which cannot withstand defeat. It has spread over and almost covered a shell of gentlemanly behavior that once made students and team a union of commendable conduct.

Overnight, the student body has become the poorest team at the University of North Carolina.

Despite persuasive alibies for behavior following Wednesday night's game, there is no excuse which commends the bully tactics of a whole University against 10 mocked and jeered athletes from a visiting college. Were it not for the Carolina student body, no incident would have followed Carolina's defeat by State.

But the incident has occurred, and now it has passed. It now behooves every student at UNC to conduct himself forthwith in a manner equal to the sportsmanship of the team which remains undaunted in both victory and defeat.

Eisenhower's Ship Of State

By FRANK CROWTHER

The picture of President Eisenhower in yesterday's papers resembled a man feeling his head to see if it still remained intact. Observing the strange reversals of the President's statements of the past week, we might wonder ourselves.

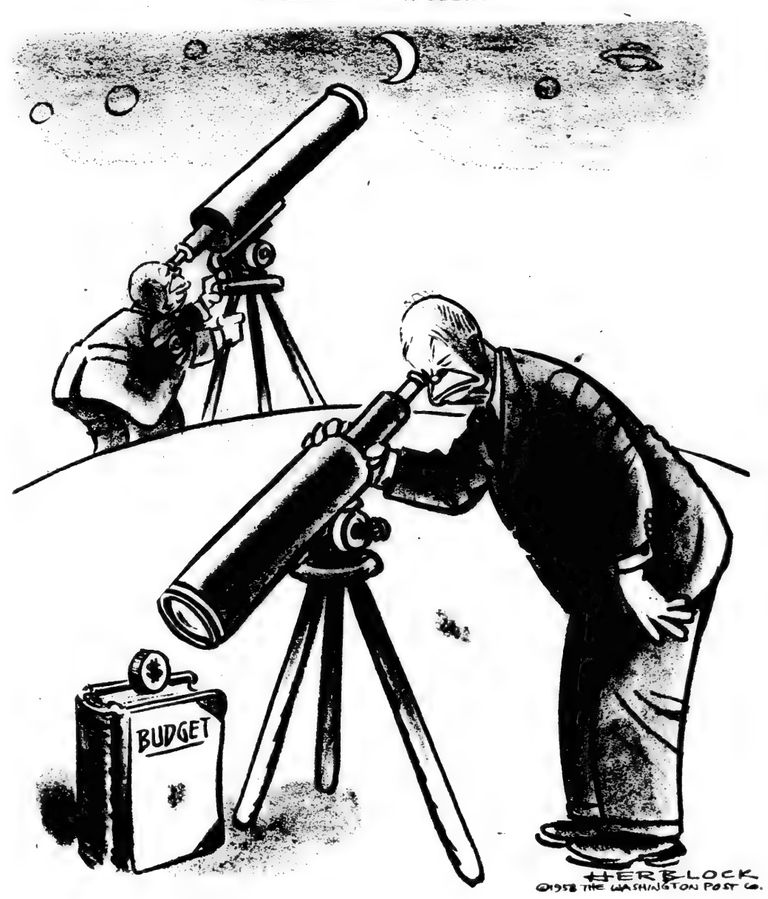
After appearing before Congress last Thursday a week to present a strangely non-committal state-of-the-union message (which was padded with sweet chauvinisms and nicely disguised burblings by an old hand at this sort of speech-spiking, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr.), Mr. Eisenhower then sent the legislators a budget which called for an increase of only $1.1 billion over the fiscal year of 1957, besput (before Sputnik, courtesy Kurt Stehling).

His justification for this about-face is supposed to lie in the "change in emphasis" he plans for the allocation of defense moneys. Oh, I see, he is about to juggle not only the chains of command in the Pentagon, but he intends to play hide-and-seek with its budget. Money, money, who's got our missile money? Why doesn't he stuff the whole Pentagon into a Mix-Master, churn it up for several months and see what kind of abortion results? We surely cannot end up with any more conspiracy or maleficence than already existing therein.

The President also stated that "things can happen" in the financial and political world in the next 18 months. Well, we're glad to know this! At least one of the warnings of the gloom and doom journalists has hit home, but Ike seems to be contented with first base and plans to wait for the next batter. If we wait long enough, the game might be called on account of rain—in the form of missiles.

But he also went to assure us that his doctors had explained to him that his mind was functioning as usual. "As a matter of fact," said Ike, "in a matter of a couple of hours (after his stroke), doctors were reassuring me that . . . at least there was no damage to whatever intellectual faculties I have." Well, brother, I'll tell you that isn't reassuring to me, because I always have doubted what was inside that cranium.

Finally, the United States' only globe circling satellite, John Foster Dulles, was brought into the battle once again. They say that Mr. Eisenhower's temperature shot up and he said, "The last person I would want to see resign is Mr. Dulles . . . I think he is the wisest, most dedicated man that I know." Lord preserve us. And he probably will, in formaldehyde.



Friend—Congratulations, my boy. You will always look upon this as the happiest day of your life.

Bob—But I'm not getting married until tomorrow.

Friend—Yes, I know.

THE BALTIMORE SUN

Don'ts For Congress Are Listed

(The following is an extension of remarks by Hon. J. Glenn Beal, Maryland, in the Senate last Thursday. It is reprinted here from the Congressional Record.)

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, the Baltimore Sun of January 8 noted editorially that there are a series of "don'ts" which it might be well for all Members of the 85th Congress to keep in mind during our concluding session. This brief checklist presents such a compact and basic guide for us that I feel it should be "must" reading for every Member of both Houses, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the Appendix of the Record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Congress reconvenes in a mood that bodes good in some ways and not so good in others. The mood practically guarantees a reinforced defense program, and that is good. But the rivalry between the parties (to show which is the least complacent) threatens rash and ill-considered decisions, too. Herewith, some "don'ts" for reassembled Congressmen:

1. Don't delude yourselves into thinking that a reorganization of the Pentagon will pass a miracle. Some changes may be necessary. But too often a reorganization merely substitutes unanticipated evils for known evils.

2. Don't forget that the goal of our defense program is defense, not aggression. We are not out to start a war. We are out to make and keep ourselves just strong enough to prevent anyone else from starting a war.

3. Don't forget that the cold war is only part military. Economic weapons are just as important.

4. Don't forget that foreign aid of the right kind is a must in this cold war, and that the kingpin of a sound foreign-aid program is the renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. By opening up world markets this helps other countries to help themselves.

5. Don't think that American science can be greatly strengthened merely by passing a law. Strength in science is strength in trained men. Scientific training comes slowly. If you don't think so, take a peek into any contemporary textbook of physics.

6. Don't think that the problems of American education will be solved by a big Federal appropriation. The wrong kind of appropriation would harm rather than help.

7. Don't underestimate the importance of solvency. Behind everything we do—in defense, in the improvement of science, in the improvement of education, in aid to other countries, in the ramifications of our welfare schemes and public works—there must be the wherewithal, the wealth, which has no source whatever except in our natural resources coupled with a thriving, expanding system of production. Don't forget the fable about the goose.

8. Above all, in trying to correct past deficiencies in our pattern of living, don't make the mistake of abandoning it. To do that would be to lose the cold war without even knowing we had done so.

Mark Twain, being a celebrity, turned the famous erroneous announcement of his death into a well-known quip. More difficult was the situation of the obscure man whose death was mistakenly noted in his local paper. The "corpse" hastened to the editor to protest.

"I'm awfully sorry," the editor replied. "And it's too late to do much about it. The best thing I can do for you is to put you in the "Births" column tomorrow morning, and give you a fresh start."

* * *

Bird-lovers should note this with special interest: it is really educational. A Connecticut lady called in an expert ornithologist to help her identify a bird whose strange cry she had been unable to identify. The learned gentleman plodded hopefully to the indicated spot, where a landscaping project was in process, and listened intently. Then he came back and reported. The bulldozer on the job was in need of oil.

The Trouble

From Raleigh has come the report that legal liquor outlets in North Carolina last year rang up sales totaling almost $65½ million.

This report follows not long on the heels of announcement that North Carolina, in 1957, remained the nation's foremost state in production and sale of untaxed liquor.

What remained untold in both accounts is the fact that "wet" counties in South Carolina reaped sizeable funds from legal liquor taxes to support the education programs in those counties. "Dry" counties did without the benefits.

But the "drys" kept on drinking untaxed liquor and even purchased alcoholic beverages in "wet" counties, taking precious dollars from home to help educate children across the county line. It almost sounds ridiculous.

Answers For Gregory

To The Editor:

There's a young man wandering the walks of the UNC campus these days who, surprisingly, hasn't been told—an uninformed individual who doesn't know what's going on up there in those mysterious second-floor offices of GM from day to day.

Gregory, that's what I call him, has somehow formed the idea that the Newspaper Research Committee you spoke about recently is bent on taking your job away from you and starting another recall election. You see Greg reads the edit page religiously and he was pretty broken up when the last editor was shipped out. Perhaps this explains his ignorance about such things—his addiction to the edit page, I mean.

Unfortunately your job isn't in jeopardy but my friend, Greg, is nevertheless alarmed at the idea. His ignorance on the subject of some pretty vital campus issues has prompted me to write the following clarification which I hope will appear in a forthcoming issue of the Daily Tar Heel—for Greg's sake. Greg doesn't believe anything unless he sees it in print and in the pages of the DTH. It's his paper you know! (He pays for it out of student fees.)

This is for Gregory. I call it "God, Mother and the DTH," or "Stargazing into the DTH Editorship." I begin:

Will Doug Eisele run for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel this spring? If so, what will he stand for THIS time?

In answer to the first question, YES, the recall editor will run again for the DTH post. How do we know? Why, Tuesday's lead editorial provides the answer clearly.

In his "Plan For The Probers," Eisele blandly suggests a revision of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board "for obvious reasons": namely, a sophomore or junior editor seeking reelection would, by virtue of his own membership in the selections board be a party to his own endorsement or rejection by that board. Now this isn't fair, is it?

What would he stand for if he ran in the spring? Tuesday's lead editorial holds that answer also. Everyone will remember how the present editor was shooed in on a "competence" platform by the two campus political parties recently. He was never called upon to utter a word and became a Silent Partner to the Competence Crusade. He was never asked to give his stands or views on campus, state national or international issues. That he was competent was enough and he was elected to the editorship by the aroused campus public.

Now, for some reason, Eisele has seen fit tell us his views on some of those weighty problems of campus life. If I read Tuesday's editorial correctly, the DTH editor stands for MOTHER—"selection of editor by popular election is the only fair way to fill the top newspaper posts"—for the FLAG—"we have a moral obligation, if not a constitutional one, to get the newspaper to all who are required to pay for it"—and a STAR SPANGLED DTH—"we need . . . a press camera for the newspaper."

Saturday, the DTH editor began his election campaigning when he uncovered the grossly unfair situation which exists with respect to circulation and receipt of the student newspaper in outlying campus areas.

After his amazing detection of this deficiency, Eisele said that something must be done—in the name of clean play, fellows. He intimated clearly that HE would see to its correction.

The sad and misleading fact concerning this situation, however, is that it is Eisele's job to correct such situations as undermine the newspaper's management, policies and circulation. He isn't doing any particular service when he corrects an error or deficiency in the Daily Tar Heel. That's what he's getting paid for. That's what he was elected to do. He is, after all, a "competent" newspaperman.

But one of the saddests points contained in the aspiring editors treatment of Tuesday's editorial was that he failed completely to offer "competent" suggestions—in print at any rate—to the Newspaper Research Committee when he appeared before it.

None of his "Plans For The Probers" were designed to benefit or improve the real difficulty which exists in the selection and election of "competent" DTH editors. They were merely platform planks for the coming spring election.

Eisele upheld salaries for editorial posts on the paper. He recommended that a program of cooperation and training with the Journalism school be worked out. Actually, both of these are in effect and are in no danger of being discarded, although the latter situation might be improved considerably. If more cooperation with the journalism school is desirable — and it is — then the editor should go about accomplishing that very thing. It's his job.

As I see it, the DTH editor has offered nothing new and has failed decidedly to point his finger at the real problem of the Tar Heel editorship. That is, what should be the qualifications for a Tar Heel editor. This is the consideration he and the Newspaper Research Committee should be giving their attention.

Too often in the past, the campus has been required to choose an editor without any foreknowledge of his experience and ability. Like so many popular elections, the appointment of the Tar Heel Editor has been on a personality basis in part because the student body didn't care, and in part because they just didn't know.

Surely it's time for the campus to be let in on a few facts of collegiate life. The students might really be interested to know what the man they elect to the Tar Heel editorship each year is expected to know and do. With this little bit of intelligence, they might even be able to elect a "competent" editor instead of the nice guys with the winning smiles who have held the post in bygone days. (Let me point out that I do not include all ex-editors of the Tar Heel in this category.)

I charge the Newspaper Research Committee therefore, with baring the DTH facts of life to the campus and I charge all aspiring editorial candidates — including Editor Eisele — with the responsibility of examining their credentials for the job much more carefully in the future. Because, who can tell, the student body might decide to elect somebody REALLY qualified for the job if it knows the facts.

Matmen Encounter VMI Here Tonite

The wrestlers from Virginia Military Institute invade Woollen Gym tomorrow night to take on Carolina's varsity and freshman grapplers.

Varsity coach Sam Barnes will send a team to the mat which is currently sporting a 4-2 season record. Since the Christmas vacation, the Tar Heels have won two straight by whipping N.C. State and The Citadel.

Cadet Record

VMI comes to Chapel Hill as the defending Southern Conference champions with a 5-2 record so far this season. The Cadets are coached by Oscar Guppon, the former Carolina freshman wrestling coach. In one of their matches this season, VMI defeated a Virginia team which early in the year took the Tar Heels by a 25-11 count.

In an effort to reverse the 21-10 defeat which the Cadets handed the Tar Heels last year, Coach Barnes plans to start practically the same lineup which beat The Citadel last Saturday. The three changes will be in the 130, 157, and 167 pound classes.

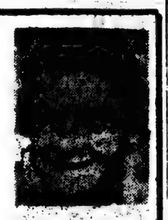
Tar Heel Lineup

Henry Rhyne, who beat Bill Suttle in this week's trials, is scheduled to wrestle the 130 pound bout. Team captain Kenny Hoke returns to the lineup in the 157 slot with Jack Gray moving from 157 to 167.

At the moment the other starters are expected to be Curt Champlin at 123, Ferrin Henderson at 137, and J. W. Welborn at 147. The two heaviest-weight classes will be filled by David Atkinson and Rob Boyette.

Prior to the varsity match the freshman team tackles the Cadet frosh at 7 o'clock. Jim Carse's squad will attempt to rebound from two straight defeats suffered at the hands of State and Fort Bragg.

Perfumed Reply



When the Newspaper Research Committee sent letters to newspapers at other colleges for information, one reply smelled of perfume. Needless to say, it came from The Daily Lass-O at Texas Woman's University, Denton, the only all-girls school queried by the committee.

Cold Night In Woollen Gym

Frosty man, frosty.

That about describes the scene in Woollen Gym Wednesday night. State evidently brought the machine which it uses to prepare for ice shows in the Coliseum to Chapel Hill. And the Wolfpack went away with a well-earned overtime victory.

It is reasonable to assume that the Raleigh club will use possession tatics again when it meets the Tar Heels. Likewise, Carolina will probably be getting the deep freeze more often than ever before for the rest of the season.

Coach Everett Case of State has maintained that "32 teams ran with Carolina last year and look what happened." His theory that "Carolina can't score as long as we've got the ball," has worked once and failed once. It worked Wednesday and failed in the Dixie Classic. The regular season finale in Raleigh Feb. 18 will be interesting to watch.

Tar Heels Lacking At Charity Line

Looking at the statistics, it would seem the Tar Heels lost the game from the free throw line. Carolina had one more field goal than State but missed 17 shots from the charity line. State made 28 of 39 and Carolina 25 of 42.

Free throws, in fact, have been one of the big weaknesses of the Tar Heels this season. Inabilty to connect on foul shots hurt in the Maryland loss and it had hurt in several games previously. It's hard to account for the absence of free throw accuracy. Last year, Carolina was especially proficient in that department. This season, that ball just won't drop.

State Had Tough Defense

A lion's share of the victory credit must be given State guard Lou Pucillo. The 5-9 hustler was just the thing for the type game the Wolfpack played. Little Lou did a fine job keeping the Carolina defense unbalanced enough to allow State to work the ball inside.

The State defense was much like the one Carolina encountered against Maryland. A man to man setup which jammed up the middle and kept the Tar Hels outside. Forward Pete Brennan got four points on only one field goal, while his running mate Lee Shaffer made only two shots from the floor. Whenever you can stop a couple of big boys like that, you've got a mighty good chance of winning a ball game.

Brennan and Shaffer are usually tough to handle under that basket but the combined 13 shots they took all night (Pete foulded out before the overtime) is evidence that the State defense was successful in making Carolina take the long shots.

Is Our Sportsmanship On Decline?

All the details of the hassle following the game Wednesday night have not and probably will not be brought to light. But if Carolina studnts were responsible for the fight, we owe N. C. State an apology.

There have been several different versions of the demonstration, some laying the blame on a couple of State players who allegedly shoved a Carolina coed and others saying that a group of Carolina students grabbed a State player and tried to work him over.

In any case, it was a blemish on a good sportsmanship reputation which Carolina has built up in the last two seasons — one that should not be ruined by a handful of hot heads.

Coach Frank McGuire has worked constantly in attempt to maintain good sportsmanship at home. His players have won the respect of critics all over for their gracefulness and clean play. They played 45 minutes of good basketball Wednesday and they took the loss in stride.

If our own students were responsible for the rukus, it was an act against our basketball team and its reputation. Last season we won them all and things were fine. But We've lost a few this season and we might lose some more. The team, however, is doing all it can. Has last season spoiled us to the extent that we cannot accept defeat like gentlemen? Turnabout is not fair play. Let the other schools act as they wish. Let us comply with the ball club and leave the physical contact on the court.

Sports Briefs

Carolina ends the short athletic month of January tomorrow night at Clemson, S. C. . . . The Tar Heel's fine swimming team has five All-Americans back from last season . . . Pete Brennan's scoring average dropped from 21.0 to 19.8 against State . . . Tommy Kearn's 17 points raised his one percentage point to 16.3 . . . Carmen Basilio and Sugar Ray Robinson have signed for a return fight in Chicago Stadium March 25 . . . With good cooperation the fraternity-dormitory sports jamboree can become a big thing here . . . Sorry the column is not in the corner today, fallacies of the profession and all that.

Unbeaten Swimmers Top State, 53-32

By MAC MAHAFFY

The undefeated Carolina swimmers swamped their rival N. C. State last night 53 to 32. The mermen captured six of the ten events and a host of seconds and thirds. Tony Schiffman led the Tar Heel attack with firsts in the 220 and 440 yards freestyle events.

Fadges Leads

Dick Fadgen of UNC was the high scorer of the meet with first places in three individual events, the 50 freestyle, 200 butterfly, and the 200 yard breaststroke. The best race of the evening was between Carolina seniors Walt Rose and Bill Zickgraf in the 100 yard freestyle, with Rose winning the event.

Brent Nash swam the best race of his college career in soundly defeating State's veteran backstroker Merchel.

Top Divers

Pete Reynolds and Dick Cashwell scored one two in the diving, and teamed with their swimmers to swim in the crowd-pleasing 400 freestyle relay team in a close race with the State team.

Coach Pat Earey begins to prep his unbeatened team now for perhaps their hardest meet of the season against a very strong University of Florida team coming up February 10.

The Summary

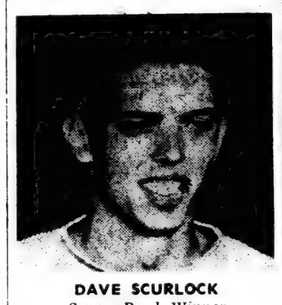
Indoor Carnival Coming Back Here

The South's oldest and largest indoor track carnival is coming back home to it's birth place.

The annual Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games, founded here originally in 1930 by former Carolina Director R. A. (Coach Bob) Fetzer, as the Southern Conference Indoor Games, will be held in Woollen Gymnasium Saturday, March 1.

The event became the Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games in 1954 and the past two years was held at Raleigh.

Erickson Pleased



Chuck Erickson, Carolina athletic director, expressed pleasure over "The Indoor Track Classic of the South" being returned to Chapel Hill, with which it was so long identified.

"This is one of the most colorful sports events of the year and the University is pleased to be host to it again," Erickson said. "I understand that prospects are bright for a brilliant field with excellent competition promised.

Maryland, winner the past two years in Raleigh, again will be heavily favored in the conference division. The last year the Indoor Games were held here, in 1955, Carolina edged Maryland by half a point. The Terps, Tar Heels and Duke's Blue Devils are the top favored teams almost every year.

Scurlock Won

Duke's Dave Sime, Carolina's Dave Scurlock and Maryland's Burr Grim recently won three of the six events held in the Suger Bowl Invitational meet. Dash man Sime and middle distance runner Scurlock are definite entries in the Indoor Games, but it has not been learned for sure whether Grim will compete here.

DAVE SCURLOCK
Sugar Bowl Winner

Sime last year triumphed in the 60 yard dash and Scurlock won the 880.

In addition to the conference division, there will be the usual non-conference and freshman divisions, with the meet attracting teams from all over the South.

Action begins Saturday morning, March 1, with the main show that night beginning at 6:30 o'clock.

Blast

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 16 (AP)—A bomb-like explosion that shook buildings more than a half mile away ripped through a Richmond cold storage firm today, leaving eight persons missing and presumed dead.

Police said apparently only one person in, or near, the brick building Housing the Merchants Ice and Cold Storage Co. escaped death in the blast.

The explosion, believed caused by ammonia gas escaping from refrigerating equipment, occurred at 10:30 a. m. Nearly three hours later firemen wearing gas masks and oxygen equipment still were probing the wreckage.

Celebration For UNC

It will be awards and celebration night for the Carolina football players, and their girls or wives, here Saturday at the Chapel Hill Country Club.

Members of the Chapel Hill Athletic Club and their wives and guests have been invited to the party by the University Athletic Association and will join in the festivities beginning at 7 p.m.

The banquet will be served by Ted Danziger, local restaurateur and this will be followed by a dance with music by Sam Atwater's Combo.

Coach Jim Tatum will be master of ceremonies.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson will present monogram awards for the 1957 season and this will be followed by presentation of other special awards.

These include the E. Carrington Smith (Carolina Theatre) trophy to the "most valuable" player and the William F. Prouty memorial award to the player voted most outstanding in scholarship, football proficiency and extra-curricula activities.

Victor Huggins, president of the Chapel Hill Athletic Club, will present engraved plaques to senior lettermen on behalf of his organization.

June Graduates Face Tougher Time In Obtaining Jobs, Speaker Says

Demand May Be Down 28 Per Cent This Year

June college graduates will probably face the roughest job-finding situation since 1949, a personnel official from big industry told UNC students Thursday night at a "Career" meeting.

Robert B. Savin of Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company addressed UNC seniors and graduate students under sponsorship of the UNC Placement Service, which is directed by Joe M. Galloway.

"The demand for June graduates may be down 28 per cent from last year's figures, according to one recent estimate," Savin said. "They will all find jobs, but placement for some may not come until late summer or early autumn."

Savin expressed the opinion that most large companies have developed a "social conscience," feeling that an employee whose work is competent deserves job security.

"The investment in a man is too great to let him go after several years of training and experience, unless he is definitely incompetent."

Qualifications

Commenting on comparative qualifications of liberal arts graduates and those trained in business administration, Savin said: "My personal observation has been that the business-trained graduate may have an easier initial adjustment, simply because his knowledge of business terminology and techniques is greater.

"But the liberal arts student with natural ability will develop quickly, and by the end of the first year's employment the two men's progress will be equal."

Formal Training

Savin said that some business areas such as accounting, must of necessity require formal training, "but a history major can learn to sell as well as a business major can."

Personnel officials do try to determine exactly why a liberal arts graduate majored in a certain field—because he felt a great interest in that subject, or whether he drifted into it from lack of interest, Savin added.

Getting prospective graduates to organize their thinking about vocational interests and job procurement is the biggest problem facing personnel recruiters, Savin said.

He urged students to investigate an organization before seeking employment, and to have definite ideas of job preferences.

CONSOLIDATED UNIVERSITY HOME—Officers of the Consolidated University moved yesterday from the first floor of South Building to the old Institute of Government Building on Franklin Street pictured here. The building was redecorated for the move.

Consolidated University Officers Move Into Old Institute Building

By ANN FRYE

President William Friday and other Consolidated University officers moved to new quarters in the former Institute of Government building on East Franklin St. yesterday.

Formerly housed in the east wing of first floor, South Building, the Consolidated University now operates in a three-story building.

Remodeling of the building was in the form of re-painting, petitioning, carpeting and new furnishings.

On first floor, there are the reception room, President Friday's office, Vice President William D. Carmichael's and William Whyburn's office and secretary offices.

President's Office

The president's roomy office, located in the center north side, is furnished with yellow and light orange plastic chairs, a yellow rug and yellow and brown draperies. The walls are of Phillippine mahogany.

Vice President Carmichael's office, on the northwest side, has an oak-paneled wall. The chairs and rug are green. From his old office in South Building, the vice president brought his desk and book press lamp.

A birch-paneled room on the southeast side is occupied by Vice President Whyburn. Furniture in this office consists of green and yellow plastic chairs and a green carpet.

Reception Room

The reception room has green and yellow furnishings and black and white linoleum.

Mrs. Frances McConnell, who is President Friday's research assistant, has an office in the center east wing on first floor. The green coloring scheme is also carried out in her office, as well as in two secretary offices on first floor.

A meeting room and offices of Business Officer A. H. Shepard Jr., Claude Teague and the provost are contained on the second floor.

The meeting room, on the center north side, has a long table and green plastic chairs. The wall is of cherry paneling.

Business Managers's Office

The office of Business Manager Shepard, on the northwest side, is furnished with yellow chairs and rugs with gold, brown and white draperies.

Teague, who is a special assistant to President Friday, is in an office on the southwest side. Furnishings in there include green rugs and yellow plastic chairs.

When the position of provost (who would be "in charge of educational offerings and activities) is filled, he will have on office in

Potato Soup

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17 (AP)—The special potato soup Rep. Kearns (R-Pa) wants on the Capitol menu got a trial test today. The chef who made it commented "not so hot," but then he said he's not a soup eater.

Anyway, the gallon and a half was all gone by 12:30 p.m. and chef Everett Stewart said most of the tasters "tell me it's very good."

But he wasn't convinced. "It's a fair soup," he said, but "I think it could be improved."

Kearns tried a plate in his office and pronounced: "Oh, it's wonderful."

Class Ducat Pickup Set

A schedule for picking up class tickets for the coming spring semester was announced today as classes came to a close in preparation for final examinations next week.

There still was no official estimate concerning enrollment for the next term, although it was expected to continue above the 7,000 figure. Just over 7,000 students are currently enrolled at the University.

It was pointed out today that class tickets for the coming semester will be withheld if a student has failed to pay his room rent or to settle his account for the current term. This does not, however, apply to women students.

Students can pay their fees at the cashier's office in South Building on Jan. 30 from 8:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. and on Jan. 31 from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Officials said that preregistered students can pick up class tickets for the spring semester at the Naval Armory Jan. 30 from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and on Jan. 31 from 7:30 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. New students will register Jan. 30 from 8:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. in Hanes Hall.

Pre-registered and newly-registered students who wish to do so can pay their fees by letter under the following alphabetical system:

A, L—Feb. 18th; B, M—Feb. 19th; C, N, O—Feb. 20th; D, E, P, Q—Feb. 25th; F R—Feb. 26; G, S—Feb. 27th; H, I,T,U,V—March 4th; J, K, W, X, Y, Z—March 5th.

Dental, law, Public health and medical students must pay their fees the first week of registration.

Students on the G. I. bill can make arrangements to pay one third of their fees Feb. 21, one third March 21, and one third April 21.

There will be a late fee charge of $5 if fees have not ben paid by March 15.

Summer Projects

All students who have participated in summer services projects for any agency are requested to stop by or call the YMCA office and leave their names.

APO Textbook Trading Post To Open Jan. 31

A textbook "trading post" will be operated by Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity to enable students to sell used books, according to Bill Jolly, president.

The service will be offered Jan. 31-Feb. 4 in the Cabinet Room of the YMCA. Books brougth to the post between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. during the four day period will be sold by APO at the price requested by the owner plus a small handling charge.

TYRONE POWER—Among the three stars in Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah," which the Carolina Playmakers will bring to Chapel Hill Feb. 28 and March 1 in Memorial Hall, is Tyrone Power. Others in starring roles are Faye Emerson and Arthur Treacher.

Tyrone Power To Star In Playmaker Feature

The Theatre Guild-Arnold Moss presentation of Moss's new condensation of Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah," starring Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson and Arthur Treacher, has been booked by the Carolina Playmakers to appear in Memorial Hall for two evenings, Feb. 28 and March 1.

In addition to its three stars, the production will feature Valerie Bettis, Arnold Moss, and Roger Evan Boxill.

These six players will enact a total of nineteen roles.

Moss will be the only member of the cast to be seen in one role only, that of Bernard Shaw himself.

"Back to Methuselah" is Shaw's comic parable of the serious subject of longevity that was performed over the course of three evenings when it was first given in New York in February, 1922.

Moss has condensed the five plays of the "Methuselah cycle" into one normal-length evening, a condensation that was warmly received last summer in vernal-season theatres stretching from Boston to Chicago.

The show is presently touring the East prior to a Broadway opening on March 17.

Tickets for the show will be available Feb. 3 in the Business Office of the Carolina Playmakers. Prices for the production will be $2.20, $3.30, $4.40.

Boy Admits UNC Laundry Sneak Thefts

A 17-year-old student at Chapel Hill's Lincoln High School has admitted several sneak thefts from the retail counter at the University Laundry office.

Police Capt. William D. Blake said three separate charges have been brought against Willie Sanders Jr. in connection with the stealing.

He reported that $70 was taken from the downtown laundry office on Dec. 23, and -35 from the main office on Cameron Avenue on Jan. 4.

Last Saturday morning an unsuccessful attempt was made to steal some money at the main plant.

Police said the boy admitted taking money out of the office cash drawer when he went there to call for laundry.

He reportedly would pick up his own laundry, then send the clerk for a fictitious bundle. In her absence he would scoop up the money in the cash drawer.

After an investigation by laundry officials, Chapel Hill Patrolman W. F. Hester concealed himself behind the counter at the main plant.

When Sanders came to call for his laundry, the policemen said they surprised him while he was in the act of taking money out of the drawer.

Sanders was not held at the jail. Police officers said he "may be tried" at the next term of Recorders Court.

Last Paper

The Daily Tar Heel will suspend publication for the remainder of this semester after today's issue. The next paper will be published Saturday, Feb. 1.

T. S. Eliot's 'Cocktail Party' Is Next Petite Dramatique

T. S. Eliot's "The Cocktail Party" will be the second Petite Dramatique production of the year. The play will be presented in Graham Memorial's Main Lounge, Sunday and Monday nights, Feb. 16-17.

According to director Jack Jackson, this is the first time that an Eliot play has been attempted on the UNC campus.

Playing the role of Edward will be Peter Sinclair, instructor in the Department of Economics, who has previously appeared in the Playmaker productions "The Crucible" and "The Lark." He has also acted in the Durham Theatre Guild.

Betty Rhodes, dramatic are major from Kinston, will play the part of Lavinia. Miss Rhodes appeared recently in the Petite Dramatique production of "Judith" and the Playmaker production of "The Lark."

The part of Peter will be played by Russell Link, a dramatic art student from Jamaica, N. Y., who has had roles in Playmaker productions of "Midsummer Nights' Dream," "Anastasia," and "Peer Gynt."

Betty Sinclair, formerly a member of the Montreal Repertory Company, is to take the part of Celia. Mrs. Sinclair originally came from Kent, England, and has been drama critic for the Chapel Hill Weekly.

The role of Alex will be portrayed by Sam Baker, graduate English student from Greensboro. Baker played in last year's Petite Dramatique production of "Caligula" and took part in the Playmaker productions of "The Shoe-

PANTOMIME CIRCUS—The Lotte Goslar Pantomime Circus, a world acclaimed dance uproar, comes to Chapel Hill for a performance Jan. 30—the day students arrive back for the spring semester—at Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. "For Humans Only" is the official title of the Circus' 1958 production. Tickets for the show, which is being presented by the Chapel Hill Concert Series, may be obtained free of charge by students of UNC at GM Information Office. Lotte Goslar has been called, here and abroad, and often on both sides "The greatest mime of our time." Freddie Albeck, the lovable Danish giant whose patter, songs and buffoonery provide a running comment on the bedlam he surveys, is featured artist in "For Humans Only." The cast also includes French-Chilean Jean Cebron, called "one of the most exciting new dance figures to appear on the American scene"; Europe-famed mimic Aart Brouwer; Hollywood ballerina Edythe Uane.

Final Exams And What They Mean To Classes

The time of year has come when cold winds blow in from the North heralding the coming of a new semester. And that, inevitably, means final examinations.

To help you in the trying days ahead, a few comments are here listed with our sincerest hopes that mother happiness and father success will treat you kindly in the next 10 days.

If they don't . . . . well, we'll see ya'll in South Building.

FOR FRESHMEN—This will be your first experience with examinations on the college level—for most of you, that is. You probably are plagued by fear of the closing tests, but they are not so bad as might at first be expected. You'll probably pass the majority of them.

And if you need any consoling advice about final exams, freshmen, seek out from among your contemporaries those who have experienced them before. It's surprising how helpful a 22-year-old freshman, particularly one who has long since taken his first final exam, can be. He can prepare you for the shock ahead.

FOR SOPHOMORES — Well, it's no use fooling you. You have been the route of the freshman, and by now it's clear that final exams often are your registration for the same class the coming semester. They do, after all, eliminate the problems associated with your decisions about what to take in the spring.

There is, however, one consoling factor about your status. You are still too young, in the eyes of upperclassmen, to have assumed the responsibility for making good marks. That is left to our older, more mature brethren. Yet you no longer are a Plebe, and whatever success you gain in the tests can be attributed to your more fully developed mind and your ability to spot, beforehand, what will be on that final exam. Seldom, however, does this happen.

FOR JUNIORS—At last, you say, we're on the downhill slope of our college education. But did you know that less than half of a freshman class never graduates from the University? Many of those come to be juniors, and, like old soldiers, they just fade away.

But, for you, there is a brighter day ahead. Now you have reached that development of mind which professors consider pre-requisite for the more difficult courses at the University. The future will be a grind; it will be marked by midnight oil and lengthy term papers which will prepare you for the year ahead. You have shown you can do the job, and now it will be thrust upon you with all the force of the University.

FOR SENIORS—This is the group which, more than all the others, commands our fullest sympathies. Did you know that some universities in the country don't even require final exams of those who reach the senior circles? Unbelievable, isn't it! This group must become extremely bored while their lower classmen are cramming, grinding, straining, reeking over final exams.
